The Government, in selecting medical men to investigate the working of medical charities, the only species of public relief ever afforded to the poor of this country seems to have justly appreciated the difficulties with which the subject is surrounded. The very materials given to the sick poor as relief at these institutions; the proper mode of purchasing, preparing and preserving these materials; the professional fitness or unfitness of individuals to be entrusted with the administration of these materials; the very accounting for their expenditure, can be thoroughly understood by medical men alone. It is clear, then, that what is termed Hygiene, or a mere record of the answers of casual persons, to set questions, however frequently repeated, can give but very inadequate notions indeed of the actual management of such complicated charities, in which technical knowledge might be so easily employed to justify abuse, or cover misrepresentation.

In order to obtain as comprehensive a view as possible of the actual circumstances of individual charities, and of the estimation in which they were held by their respective coteries, the following summary of the results of the inquiries made by the Government, and of the replies thereto, is here presented.

PREVIOUSLY to entering upon the more immediate business of our Report, we beg to submit a short statement as to the length of time employed by us in our investigation, the information collected, the mode of proceeding adopted in collecting that information; the situation, number and classes of institutions examined. Introductory Remarks.

We have employed five months, without any intermission, in examining together, and on the spot, the establishments existing in the North-eastern Counties, and in some of those of the West and South, for the relief of the sick and impotent poor. Our joint remarks upon these establishments were sent in to the Board as we completed our examination of each respectively. We moreover appended to each Local Report at the time a short resumé of the leading facts connected with each, as well as our own conclusions, founded upon oral and documentary evidence, but more especially upon actual observation.

The Government, in selecting medical men to investigate the working of medical charities, the only species of public relief ever afforded to the poor of this country, seems to have justly appreciated the difficulties with which the subject is surrounded. The very materials given to the sick poor as relief at these institutions; the proper mode of purchasing, preparing and preserving these materials; the professional fitness or unfitness of individuals to be entrusted with the administration of these materials; the very accounting for their expenditure, can be thoroughly understood by medical men alone. It is clear, then, that what is termed Evidence, or a mere record of the answers of casual persons, to set questions, however frequently repeated, can give but very inadequate notions indeed of the actual management of such complicated charities, in which technical knowledge might be so easily employed to justify abuse, or cover misrepresentation.

In order to obtain as comprehensive a view as possible of the actual circumstances of individual charities, and of the estimation in which they were held by their respective communities munities, as well as to obviate all pretext for withholding information on the plea of not having had timely notice, we invariably addressed letters to each institution some days previously to that fixed for our official visit. By these letters we endeavoured to obtain as full a meeting as could be procured of those likely to possess the knowledge we sought; and the returns called for by these letters, when checked and compared with the records of the establishment, opened a plan of investigation not easily frustrated.

The method which we adopted in our examination of these charities, was the following:—

We always carried with us to each institution a note-book, containing printed memoranda, arranged in the margins of blank sheets, under such general heads as were thought to include all the more important points of every species of medical charity. This note-book had been prepared from written contributions, furnished by two of the medical Assistant Commissioners, and from all the most respectable sources of information accessible to the Board.

The medicines, medical stores, and the wards with the intern patients, if there were any, were first examined, notes being taken of every thing worthy of remark. One of us then sat down, asked the series of questions suggested by the memoranda, and recorded the replies most approved of by the whole or the majority of those present; whilst the other took private notes of such local circumstances as appeared to merit notice, or happened to be peculiar to the establishment under consideration. The registers, accounts and other written documents were examined with the proper officers. Our joint notes were afterwards revised, and a resumé added from the notes, under the head of "General Observations." A note-book thus filled up constituted an individual local Report, and was forthwith forwarded to the Board in Dublin.

The length of time employed in each of these examinations, independently of the subsequent revision of our notes, was from two and a half to four hours.

Purely medical charities we considered to be more directly within our sphere; but we also incidentally looked into houses of industry, mendicity establishments, and gaols, as likely to afford information illustrative of the line of inquiry which we were pursuing.

We had determined from the beginning that the chief object to be attained by our mission was not so much sanitary or statistic information, as a faithful picture of the actual state and working of a certain proportion of the medical charities; such a picture as might enable the Government to judge of the necessity for legislative interference in their present management.

Analysis of Report.

Having premised these few observations, we shall next venture to point out some of the defects of the original enactments relating to public Medical Charities, and also some examples of the more flagrant abuses which, under the administration of the enactments alluded to, have crept into these charities; referring for more detailed illustrations to our specific local Reports, and the extracts attached to this Report, pp. 10—22.

Lastly, we shall take the liberty of submitting our own views, as to the measures most likely, in our opinion, to arrest abuse, and at the same time to render public medical charity more conducive than it is at present to its legitimate object,—the relief of the sick and destitute poor.

Defects of original Legislation.

The leading defects, in our opinion, in the original construction and present state of the public medical relief system to the sick poor, may be traced to,—

1st. The total omission, on the part of the Legislature, of all provision for an efficient superintendence or control being exercised by properly qualified persons, whether over the working of the whole system, or over that of its subordinate machinery, such as county hospitals, dispensaries, fever hospitals, &c. in the different districts.

2dly. The authorizing by law a sort of partnership in charity (unprotected, however, on one side by adequate security) between the public purse and private individuals; thereby placing it within the power of designing persons, under the various Dispensary* and Fever Hospital

58 Geo. III. c. 47.

* Public Dispensaries in Ireland are considered by the law to derive their funds from two sources, first, annual private subscriptions by individuals, whether connected or not with the locality; secondly, from county assessments, authorized by the respective local grand juries, for an amount to each dispensary equal to the sum of the annual private subscriptions respectively, upon the list of subscribers being vouched for as bonâ fide contributors to the respective charities at the assizes, in a manner satisfactory to the grand jury. The amount of the county assessment must be at least double that of the private subscription list, if there be a fever hospital united with the dispensary.

Hospital Acts, to impose a permanent tax upon local communities, professedly for the purpose of relieving the sick poor of the district, but in reality for their own or their friends' private advantage.

4thly. The exclusiveness of the County Infirmaries Act, relatively to the qualifications as well as to the number of physicians and surgeons to be employed in the hospitals, whilst the Dispensary Acts, on the contrary, require no proofs of specific medical qualifications of any kind, from the persons to whose care the sick poor applying at the latter class of institutions are to be consigned.

Under such an easy system of legislation and a still more lax administration of its enactments, it is not to be wondered at, that abuses arose, nor that these abuses all tended directly, or indirectly, to divert to selfish purposes, a greater or less portion of the means originally destined for the relief of the sick poor.

The following, amongst others, are some of the abuses which we had occasion to observe in the management of this class:

1. The chief medical officer becomes the contractor to his own hospital for a particular article of diet, the consumption of which he can himself increase ad libitum.*

The Dietary is constructed so as to favour that consumption.

2. He becomes possessed of, and turns to his own private profit, all the land, sometimes of considerable extent, attached to the charity.†

3. He occupies the best part of the hospital, and its out-buildings with his family, to the manifest prejudice of the sick poor.‡

4. He establishes a dispensary within the hospital, and receives under that pretext an additional salary for seeing extern patients in the hospital surgery.§

5. He charges for additional medicine for his dispensary, but does not keep that medicine apart from the hospital medicine.||

6. He keeps no daily diet-table, nor accounts of provisions issued.¶

7. He is himself the purchaser of all provisions.

8. He builds for his own accommodation on the hospital premises.††

9. He takes in such cases as are least entitled to hospital relief, and are likely to be a burthen to the institution.‡‡

10. He knows little or nothing of the rate or quality of diet, or of the provisions bought or issued at his own hospital; seldom investigates that particular department, which he leaves chiefly to the care of his purveyor and matron. §§

The extreme unpleasantness of the ungracious but unavoidable task of denouncing particular local abuses, we feel to be much diminished by our being able to refer to a large proportion of examples of this class, in which the zeal, high integrity and attention, not only of their medical officers, but of all concerned in their administration, are entitled to the highest praise. We refer therefore with much pleasure to our Reports and Extracts on the infirmaries of the counties of Antrim, Londonderry, Cavan, Clare, Limerick, and Limerick City; to the Queen's County Infirmary, also, as admirably managed in every department, excepting that last mentioned; which, however, we feel quite sure was immediately and fully rectified by the very able medical officer at its head.

1. A charity of this class is to be got up, or if already got up, is to be supported.

A list of subscribers ||| to certain sums, amounting say to 100*l.*, is laid before the grand jury, and accepted by that body as a lawful basis (under the Acts referred to) upon which to establish an additional tax upon the county (to an equivalent amount, if for this class alone, to double the amount of subscriptions if for a charity combining this with Class C.) for the alleged relief of the sick poor of a particular district.

Several of these subscribers may not be bonâ fide payers.

Many cease to pay after the first or second year.

The names remain, the list is annually laid before the grand jury, and is approved, if there be a patronizing member, which is generally, if not always, the case.¶¶

2. The amount of the nominal subscriptions is required to be sworn to, or lodged with a particular officer or authority.

The medical attendant or his friends advance the sum required for the moment, and the local taxation for the charity goes on as before; or the charity ceases to exist if the nominal subscription be not sworn in time.†††

3. Some evidence of the necessity, of the utility, of the particular charity, of the number of its applicants, of the good it had done, must be submitted to the grand jury, before a new county grant can be obtained. Hence arises the indiscriminate admissions, nay, even the

the courting of the poor, of every class and from every quarter, to become patients and swell the lists, where lists are kept; and, where they are not, to give a colouring to arbitrary statements of numbers.*

Annual or half-yearly returns are made out, purporting to specify the numbers "relieved, cured, died, remaining on books, &c." But many of the returns are not founded on the registry of the patients; some are exaggerated;† some purely arbitrary and fictitious, no record of any kind being kept.‡

Some are confessed to have been drawn up merely pro formâ, to satisfy the grand jury, whilst almost all their authors admit that the results of dispensary practice cannot be accurately ascertained.

In one case, deliberate and detailed professional statements are printed and put forth, calculated to excite alarm as to the sanitary state of the district. But though purporting to be based upon the records of the medical practice of the charity, these statements were found to be disproved by the records, irregular and arbitrary as these were.§

4. The aggregate of the nominal sums alleged to be received, every year, from private subscriptions, together with that of the real sum granted from the county rates, must be accounted for to the grand jury. The amount of both, say 150*l*.

An account is furnished annually, made out, in most cases, by the medical attendant, but signed by the official treasurer. Credit is of course given for both sums.

It has been settled by the committee of the charity, that the salary of the medical attendant shall be the balance of the whole income, or shall approach as near 100*l*. per annum as the income will allow, after paying all other expenses. The committee order and pay for the medicines required.

In one case of this description, the whole charge for medicine for the year for 800 patients was only 8*l*. 15*s*. for both parent and branch dispensaries.||

5. The salary is fixed for the medical attendant at 75*l*., or rather he fixes it so for himself, having the sole management of the funds, and being obliged by contract to furnish all the medicines required. In this case, 55*l*. are charged for pills, powders, draughts, &c. for the patients in one year, whilst the remaining 20*l*., with 4*l*. or 5*l*. over, are charged to rent of house, repairs, sundries, &c.¶

The grand jury grants the usual equivalent; and this flagrantly ill-managed charity goes on as before, neither ledger nor any other record is kept to justify the charge.

All the concerns of the charity are exclusively in the hands of the medical attendant.

6. The medical attendant is conscientious and economical; his account correct; the committee zealous; the subscribers payers; the sick poor faithfully and humanely attended.

There is a balance at the end of the year of 25*l*. in favour of this institution. The grand jury diminish their grant by that sum. Next year there is still a balance of 5*l*. The original amount of the county grant is reduced by 30*l*., or by still a larger sum, if the subscriptions of the charity have increased. The third year the institution is in debt; subscribers withdraw; the committee relax in their attention; the medical man sees that integrity and economy are worse than useless, and he either becomes needlessly expensive, or the charity falls from want of funds; whilst other charities of the same class, not burdened with the virtues that had ruined this, go on as usual. Grand juries have not time to examine details, and are therefore not fitted to exercise that discriminating superintendence which would be likely to render charity most efficient.

7. The grand jury is liberal, the subscribers solvent, the means of the charity ample; but the committee leaves every thing to the medical attendant, an apothecary, with an open shop in the village.

The annual account contains long bills from Dublin druggists, besides large quantities of lard for ointments, spirits for tinctures, leeches, and sundries, bought on the spot to save carriage. There is, however, no balance, or else a small one, against the charity.

8. A remote parent or branch dispensary is got up, perhaps on a patron's estate, or close to his demesne; many of the subscribers merely nominal. The medical attendant resides in a distant town, from four to fourteen miles off. The dispensary house or room is opened once, or at most twice, a week. The whole of the medical materials contained in it are not worth 5*l*.; sometimes they are not worth 1*l*.;†† yet in one case of this kind the charge for their carriage alone would make their weight eighty-six hundred for one year.††

9. Salaries vary with the amount of annual income. Dispensary held in surgeon's house. No committee meetings. §§

The Getter-up of a
Dispensary.

10. A person practising medicine in a village, but having no diploma nor public professional certificate of any kind, takes advantage of the silence of the Dispensary Acts upon the subject of medical qualifications, gets up a dispensary, sets down the names of his patients to whom he furnishes drugs as subscribers* for sums as low as 2s. 6d., and even 1s. per annum; he obtains an equivalent county grant, becomes cash-keeper and collector, makes all disbursements, audits his own accounts, pays to himself the rent of the dispensary (his own house), 33l. 16s. 2d.; collects the subscriptions of his subscribers, or rather the debts of his patients, and balances his annual accounts with a charge for such an item as "bottles and lapping paper."

11. A patron gets up a dispensary to serve the poor, and serves a young friend at the same time, by having him appointed as the medical attendant under the Act referred to; but the young man has not completed his education. The salary and emoluments of his new appointment enable him to employ a deputy, and obtain his diploma† or even to pay the expenses of graduating in Arts at Trinity College, Dublin.

12. A medical man settled in business has an influential relative residing near him; there is no district unprovided with a medical charity nearer than ten or twelve miles; he procures twenty or thirty names as subscribers, through the influence alluded to, but unconnected with the district. An equivalent is obtained from the county rates; a dispensary is got up; a deputy is hired at a trifling expense, because he is unqualified. The ostensible medical attendant continues to reside at the distance mentioned, but arranges the money business of the concern with the grand jury.‡

13. A practising apothecary obtains exclusive control over a charity richly and powerfully supported. He has kept no record of any kind for several years. The only machinery is a nominal treasurer, an annual account, and a purely arbitrary return of patients. The open shop is the dispensary room. The medicines, charged 60l. for 1833, are given to the sick poor, or sold, as occasion demands, from the same drawers, pots and bottles. The usual statement of the numbers "cured, relieved, on the books," &c. laid before the grand jury for that year, contains the words "Cured, 2,061." The salary is 100l. per annum. The funds are unable to meet the charges. The deficit is taken from another charity, of which the apothecary is also medical attendant.§

Other examples of abuses of various kinds, in this class, might be quoted from our Reports; but there are also many examples to be found there of dispensaries to which the highest, as well as the middle ranks of the district, contribute a liberal portion of their means, and what is still better, of their time, intelligence and moral weight.||

Examples in which we found the medical attendants talented valuable men, doing much good to the poor, and much credit to humanity, as well as to their own profession.

A practising apothecary pretends to be an M.D. and is appointed sole physician. There is no active committee; no accounts, nor records even of deaths kept. There are seldom more than two patients in the house, often not more than one, and that one is kept in the house and on the books for six consecutive years at the expense of the charity.¶

Although the name of Fever Hospital generally deters committees from the actual inspection or superintendence of this class of institutions, and therefore may be supposed favourable to abuses, yet many of these charities are conducted in as efficient and satisfactory a manner as their limited and uncertain funds, and the defective principles upon which they are based, will admit.

One we found had been built, and hitherto liberally supported by individual benevolence. In another the zeal and humanity of the highest and most influential member of the committee braves the danger of infection, to insure fair dealing to the sick poor.††

In some, the leading physicians of the town do the duties both professional and fiscal gratuitously, yet most efficiently.‡‡ In one case a single physician, by his individual exertion and great moral influence, has established and kept up for many years, under peculiar difficulties, one of the most truly and practically useful hospitals of this class which has fallen under our notice.

Although the abuses which we have had occasion to notice in this class are not numerous, yet as they operate upon a much larger local capital than those alluded to in the preceding classes, they are of greater individual importance in a fiscal point of view.

From ten to twenty acres of farm or garden ground belong to an asylum, and are within its inclosure. Gardeners and labourers are hired at high wages; the patients do all or the chief part part of the work required. Independently of charges for seed, potatoes, wheat, barley, farming implements, &c., garden seeds alone are charged between 20*l.* and 30*l.*

The produce has been considerable, and may have saved to the public its value in feeding the lunatics; but the only credit given in the accounts of the institution amounts to a few shillings for "vegetables sold." In short, there is only a debtor side to the farm and garden account.*

From six to twelve or more large pigs, besides geese, turkeys, fowls, &c. are kept in the asylum. They are tended by patients, fattened upon the produce of the farm and garden, or upon the purchased provisions, but are sold for the private benefit of the manager.†

The expense imposed upon the counties (in some cases almost at the discretion of the district manager) to support the present mode of keeping and treating the lunatic poor, is much too large, more especially when compared with the assessments authorized in Ireland for the relief of the other descriptions of sick poor,‡ and for that of the same description of such in other countries.§

The institutions of this class, however, viewed as a whole, are highly creditable to the country, and afford a strong proof that public charity, to be efficient and respectable, must be compulsory; and to be rendered suitable to its purposes with due economy, ought to be subjected to minute disinterested superintendence.

Suggestions for the Improvement of the present System of Public Medical Relief.

Preliminary Observations.

When public funds intended for the relief of the sick and impotent poor are subdivided into small portions, as in the case of dispensaries—when each of these portions is placed by law under the separate management of local committees—when the amount of these funds respectively depends upon mere contingencies, viz. private subscription, real or nominal, and the pleasure of the local grand jury, the very uncertainty and smallness of the means, and the conviction, or suspicion, that a greater or less portion of them is fictitious, tend to place these charities below the attention of the wealthy, as in the county of Mayo; to damp the zeal of the truly public-spirited and humane; and ultimately to throw the entire control into the hands of some selfish interested person; most generally into those of the medical attendant.

Yet these dispensaries profess to be the offspring of pure local charity, soliciting the support of the community, and holding out private voluntary subscriptions as a pledge of their sincerity.

Such a system of public relief left uncontrolled by competent superintendence, besides producing the abuses of which we have given so many examples, must serve also to diminish the stock of public integrity, and to reduce to the very smallest fraction compatible with the existence of the abuses themselves the portion of relief which actually reaches the sick poor.

The institutions which, it may be said, are forced upon the community by the Government, such as the new gaols, (now in some instances become a source of relief to the poor) county, and city hospitals, and district lunatic asylums, with all their defects, are by far the most respectable, and therefore, perhaps, the best looked after of Irish public charities.

With the view then of remedying the defects to which we have alluded, as either inherent in the present system of public relief, or as actually existing in the different classes of public charities in Ireland, we beg leave to suggest,—

1st. That to whatever class the institutions may belong through which public relief is to be afforded to the sick and impotent poor, the source from which the means of relief are to be derived should be fixed and secure, and also that these means should be such as may claim the respect and attention of the better orders of the community, such as may command an administrative machinery most likely to insure to the greatest number of destitute sick the largest amount of real bonâ fide relief which local circumstances will admit.

2d. That the minimum of professional qualification which may be required by the law to be possessed by the different classes of medical officers to be hereafter appointed to these institutions, should be the same for all, respectively, whatever be the class of institution for which these officers may be candidates.

3d. As regards Class (A.):

That the only officers permitted, under any pretext, to reside in the buildings appropriated to this class of charities, should be one governor or registrar, one unmarried house surgeon or apothecary, and one matron, to each hospital.

4th. Every thing permitted by the managing committee to be grown, and every domestic animal permitted to be fed upon the premises, should be turned to the profit of the funds of the charity; a regular debtor and creditor account being kept of the expense of production, and the value of the produce.

5th. Registers should be kept, under proper heads, of the kinds, quantities and prices of the various provisions received, expended, and in store.

6th. Instead of the varying, and in some instances anomalous and expensive plans of diet now in use, a fixed and uniform dietary should be adopted, framed with a view to the strictest economy, consistent with the health and comfort of the patients, and with a due consideration of the habits and usual diet of the persons likely to become inmates of this class of charities.*

7th. Monthly diet tables, of the form of those now in use in army hospitals, should also be kept, specifying the name, age and disease of each patient, dates of admission and discharge, number of folios in register, days of the month (31 columns), number of days in hospital, number of diets, full, half, and low or fever diet.

8th. A printed copy of the dietary, with a daily ward diet-roll, should be hung up in each ward, in order that each patient may see the exact quantity and kind of food to which he or she is entitled by the order of the physician or surgeon for the day.

9th. The number of medical officers attached to county or city hospitals, should be regulated by the amount of the local population; but these officers should never, if possible, be fewer than two physicians with one assistant physician, two surgeons with one assistant surgeon, and one resident apothecary for each hospital, all possessing the minimum of professional qualifications already alluded to.† The character for dexterity in operation, experience and skill, which the being attached to an hospital seldom fails to confer, would thus cease to be a monopoly as at present; local competition in zeal and science would be established, whilst those who are able to pay for the best advice would have an opportunity of making a choice.

10th. The amount of remuneration to be paid by each charity of this class to its medical officers, excepting the resident apothecary, should also be regulated by the number of the local inhabitants. Thus in towns and cities containing from 5,000 to 20,000 souls, the remuneration for medical services need not exceed 100*l.* divided amongst the two physicians and two surgeons.

The distinction conferred by the appointment would insure candidates, whilst the smallness of the salary to each officer would prevent even the suspicion of any other motives, on the part of the aspirant, than those of the most laudable ambition. In places containing from 20,000 to 30,000 inhabitants, the remuneration might be still smaller, say 80*l.* for all, whilst in places containing 40,000 and upwards, no pecuniary reward whatever need be given ‡ by the charity, more especially if it can be made available, as it ought to be, for the purposes of medical education.

11th. A uniform system of returns and book-keeping should be enforced, such as would tend to promote strict care and economy, and therefore to render the means of the charity available to the greatest number of the sick and destitute poor.

12th. The Government should possess the power of a veto, at least in the appointment of the medical officers of all public hospitals.

13th. Hospitals of this class, instead of being limited, as they are at present, to the treatment of surgical and chronic medical cases, should be made to follow the enlightened examples set by the London, Dublin and Belfast Hospitals, into which fevers of all kinds are admitted. They would thus become much more extensively useful to the community. Infection in typhus may be said to cease after cleanliness, ventilation and space have been established around those sick of that disease.§

14th. Extern patients should be prescribed for, and operated on, if necessary, on certain days, by the medical officers in rotation. A very large population, as that of Belfast, might be advantageously divided into districts, each having an extern medical attendant, who, for a small salary, as in Dundee, in Scotland, would visit, or see at his own house, the sick poor of his own district; his prescriptions being taken by the patient to be made up at the Hospital Pharmacy.

Suggestions for the Improvement of Class (B.)

1st. The charities of this class, and those also of Class (C.), to be rendered sources of efficient relief to the sick destitute poor, should, in our opinion, be assimilated in principle, as nearly as possible, to those of Class (A.), just described.

2d. In every case, they should be made to combine the advantages of small general hospitals with those of the best dispensaries, and might, we think, be advantageously attached to district workhouses, or houses of industry, for the relief of the impotent poor, should such establishments be contemplated. ||

3d. Their funds should be placed upon a secure and respectable footing, without however precluding private contribution from the public-spirited, the humane and the wealthy.

4th. By rendering the funds of dispensaries or dispensary district hospitals independent of private subscription, the general practitioner and the industrious fair-trading apothecary would be protected from the influence of an abuse which is every day weighing more hardly upon their business, and at the same time depriving the destitute poor of a large share of the means intended exclusively for their relief. We mean the practice of subscribers, in several cases, insisting upon advice and medicine gratis, from the charity, for their own families, families, as well as for those whom they may recommend, although such persons might be well able to pay the independent practitioner for his services and his drugs.

The corporation, therefore, and the medical men of the charity, the local magistrates and clergymen, should alone have the power to recommend either intern or extern patients, always however certifying, that the fitness of the case had been carefully ascertained.

5th. The distance at which these institutions should be placed from each other; the salaries, classes and number of their medical officers; the extent of their means; in short, the power of the whole machinery of each of these institutions, should be regulated by the amount of population in cities and towns; by the amount of population and extent of surface jointly in rural districts.

6th. One of these general dispensary hospitals should be placed in the midst of every 40,000 or 50,000 town or city inhabitants. One should also be placed as near the centre as possible of every twelve miles square, or of every area of six miles radius, of inhabited rural districts, not included within the bounds of the districts assigned to towns or cities, or to county or other hospitals.*

7th. The machinery of one of these dispensary hospitals, for a town district of from 5,000 to 20,000 inhabitants, having no other hospital, should comprehend two senior medical officers at least; two juniors or assistants; and one resident manager or governor. The salaries of each to be the same as those assigned to the medical officers of the lowest class of county or city hospitals. (§. 9. Letter A.)

8th. The smallest of these general hospitals should contain at least 15 or 20 beds, which, allowing to each patient an average of one month's continuance in hospital, would afford accommodation for 240 sick poor annually.

9th. In very remote rural districts, where but little private professional emolument is to be expected, such advantages should be held out as would induce respectable, well-educated medical men to become candidates. Salaries varying from 75*l.* to 150*l.* per annum and a residence, but not within the hospital, would probably be sufficient, as the district might be more or less wealthy.

10th. Carefully organized control, and competent professional inspection at uncertain times, embracing a system of graduated responsibility and check, based upon legislative enactment, should at once be established, whatever may be the details of the relief proposed. With these safeguards the legitimate objects of public charity would be protected, whilst the stock of public virtue would be increased: without them public charity is, unfortunately, never well administered; the fraction of it allowed to reach the poor becoming less and less every day.

11th. Should it hereafter be determined to relieve the industrious poor from the burthen of supporting some of the most impotent of their relatives, as has already been done in regard to lunatics, the district hospitals would afford a nucleus upon which to engraft a more extended system of public charity, in which clergymen of all persuasions, the natural guardians of the poor, might be advantageously employed, and paid for devoting a certain portion of their time and intelligence to its administration.

12th. By the distance of these district hospitals from each other, neither the medical attendant nor the extern sick would have to travel farther than six miles to give or receive advice. All motive for exaggeration in returns, or for drugging the poor unnecessarily, would be removed; genuine, unmixed good would be done; demoralizing abuses would be checked or reformed; whilst room would be left for spontaneous benevolence to exercise its charity, by establishing purely private dispensaries,† or for the Government to establish purely public institutions of that class, should such be thought necessary, under any peculiar local circumstances.

The very name of fever hospitals, given to the charities of this class, operates strongly against their efficiency. They should therefore be assimilated in every respect to the dispensary hospitals of Class (B.) Indeed, good sense and imperious necessity have produced this effect, in a greater or less degree, in several of them already.‡ With a very slight modification of management, those actually existing would become just the kind of public medical charities which we have been recommending. Let them be made general instead of exclusive hospitals, let them be called district instead of fever hospitals, and then the severe accident need not be left to perish in the remote and wretched cabin, where distance renders the county hospital of no avail, and where the name and rules of the fever hospital close by preclude the admission of the wounded or dying man, however urgent his case may be, and however ample the accommodation vacant at the time: whilst a similarly exclusive law prevents the poor man who is perishing from fever and destitution, from being received into the county hospital next door, although it were half empty at the time, or occupied by persons least entitled to its advantages.§

From

* Assuming the population of Ireland to be 8,000,000, and its area to be 20,000,000 square acres, or 23,437 square miles English; and assuming $\frac{1}{4}$ of the whole to consist of bog, mountain and water; if one district dispensary hospital were allowed to each area of six miles radius, or of 12 miles square of inhabited surface, 162 of these institutions would be required which would give one to each 50,000 inhabitants.

If one of these institutions were allowed to each area of five miles radius or ten miles square, 234 would be required, which would give one to each 34,000 inhabitants.

But if the county infirmaries and fever hospitals already existing be taken as equal to 100, then only 62 additional hospitals would be required in the first case, and 134 in the second.

† See Extracts, Private Dispensary at Gort.

‡ See Report on Kells and Belfast Hospitals.

§ See Galway Infirmary.

From what we have already said upon the subject of Lunatic Asylums,* we think ourselves justified in submitting, that the same strict economy of management and expenditure, and the same regularly organized system of control and check, recommended in the case of county hospitals, should be enforced in the charities of this class. The large sums now levied on the counties would thus be diminished, whilst a much nearer approach would be made to that most desirable point, viz. the exact amount of the public means which well-directed public charity ought to devote to that particular description of poor who, in their various grades of impotence, constitute the inmates of these asylums.

We shall offer no remarks upon this class of institutions, having seen only two of them in Ireland. The disease to which they are exclusively devoted seldom or never appears except as an epidemic; and we have already stated that we do not mean to enter into sanitary considerations in this Report.

Our local information upon this class of charities is so very scanty, that we cannot venture to add any recommendation, under this head, to those already submitted as to the general relief which we conceive ought to be provided by the public for the destitute, industrious poor, under all those inevitable circumstances which annihilate or arrest for a time their powers of personal labour, the legitimate source of their support.

Wherever we have met with these institutions, they appeared to be a real blessing to the community. Some of them, we thought, might be improved in principle; some we considered had found the exact limit of relief, beyond which allowances to the poor ought not to pass, and indeed cannot pass, without acting as an encouragement to idleness and improvidence; some were just touching upon that dangerous boundary. Upon the whole, however, they deserve the very warmest encouragement of the Legislature.†

The Gaols which we had an opportunity of examining in Ireland, taken as places of temporary accommodation for certain of the lower orders, afford, with few exceptions, an admirable illustration of what all the other institutions for the public relief of the poor ought to be in that country.

The Dietary is uniform for all gaols; economical also; and (as ample experience has proved, and we have witnessed,) fully sufficient to maintain a state of the best health in the vigour of life. There are three kinds of Diet, either of which may be adopted by the local superintending magistrates; viz. :—

BREAD DIET:—Bread, 2 lbs.; new milk, 1 quart.

POTATO DIET:—Potatoes, 9 lbs.; new milk, 1 pint; butter-milk, 1 ditto.

MIXED DIET:—Oaten meal, for stir-about, 8 oz.; potatoes, 4 lbs.; new milk, 1 pint; butter-milk, 1 pint; for one prisoner for one day.

The cost of the mixed diet per head per day, used in Cavan gaol, at the spring assizes of 1834, was 2½ d.; at the summer assizes, 2¼ d.

Flesh meat is never given except in the gaol hospital, and then only in cases where the surgeon certifies that it is absolutely necessary.

The prison dress is warm and serviceable, and, though coarse, superior to that which the labouring poor are able to provide for themselves.

This is scrupulously clean, dry and well ventilated; the temperature is equable and healthful; the whole as comfortable as the security of the prison will admit.

All mild in the extreme, and never more than is consistent with health.

Must be regular, no possible opportunity being afforded to the prisoners for dissipation or excess.

In every instance we found the health of the inmates of the gaols excellent, and had the most positive assurances that the flesh and whole appearance of the prisoners are often improved after their committal, more especially after committal for slight offences; nor is this to be wondered at, when we know that the constant food of a large portion of the labouring poor and of their families, more particularly in the South West of Ireland, is a scanty allowance of the worst kind of potato, the "Lumper," with a little salt; their clothing, rags, both by day and night; their lodging, a hut, seldom water-tight; their bed, a little loose straw, on the bare earth; whilst with all these privations they are exposed to sudden changes of temperature, to wet and damp, and to the baneful effects of intoxication by whiskey.

It is a proof either that prisons have ceased to be places of adequate punishment in Ireland, or that the labouring poor must be miserably destitute, or perhaps of both, when the pittance and the cell of the gaol, with all their bitter restraint, are sought after as a source of relief, as we have reason to believe they are, in some cases. The remedy would be, to make things worse for the felon, and better for the honest, the impotent, and the destitute labourer.

In regulating the dietary and clothing of any class of institutions for the relief of the poor, two objects should be kept constantly in view:

1st. To preserve or improve the health of the inmates.

2d. To relieve the greatest number that the means of the institution will permit, and therefore to avoid or reduce all unnecessary expense.

Extracts (A.)

The following examples show what may be done to attain these objects, by strict economy and vigilant prevention of abuse.

In the gaols of Cavan, Monaghan, Dundalk, and in many other gaols in Ireland, the prisoners in the full vigour of life, working on the tread-mill and in the stone-yard, are not only kept in health, but are improved in flesh and in appearance, as already stated, on the mixed diet, at a daily expense for each prisoner of from 2½d. to 3d.; say 2½d., or 1s. 5½d. per week, or 3l. 16s. 0½d. per annum.

In the Borough Compter in London, where, of 4,000 persons committed in three years, only two deaths occurred, for 2½d. per day, or 1s. 7½d. per week, for each prisoner.*

In Manchester, Salford Prison, where in 1831 the committals were 4,042, the deaths 6, for 2½d. per head per day, or 1s. 5½d. per week.

In the workhouse of Southwell, in Nottinghamshire, the inmates are fed "on the best provisions" for 2s. per week, or 3½d. per day, and clothed for 3d. per week.†

In the House of Industry and Mendicity in Ennis, in the county Clare, the inmates are fed and kept in as good health as their age and infirmities will allow, on a mixed diet, at the cost per day of 1½d., or 1s. 1d. per week per head.‡

In the workhouse of the parish of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, the cost of diet per head per day, for all the inmates (460 in number), including the sick and lunatics, is 1½d., or 1s. 0½d. per week.

Clothes and washing for each, including stays to the old women, and pocket-handkerchiefs to all, per annum § - - - - - £. 18 11

Food per annum per head - - - - - 2 13 1

Total - - - - - £. 3 12 -

In the Workhouse and Mendicity Institution, in the city of Londonderry, the whole expense of each inmate for the year 1833, for board, washing and lodging, was 2l. 7s. 6d., or less than 11d. per week, or 1½d. per day per head.

The diet of this institution is as follows:

BREAKFAST:—Oaten meal in stir-about, 7 ounces, with butter-milk, 1 pint.

DINNER:—Potatoes, 2½ pounds; milk, churned, 1 pint.

Supper, for those only who work, such as sweepers—meal in stir-about, 6 ounces; butter-milk, half-a-pint.

There were 78 inmates when we saw the institution, in August 1834, all regular and orderly. The house remarkably clean, the food good, and well served.

Adult boarders, recommended by respectable persons, were taken in, fed, lodged and washed for, at the rate of 1s. 3d. per week; children at the rate of 8½d. per week. ||

With the above examples before us, we cannot see why the inmates of pauper lunatic asylums in Ireland, most of whom are incurable, and for ever lost to society, should cost the public for their food alone, 4½d. or 4¾d. per head per diem, or 2s. 7½d. per week, or 6l. 16s. 10½d. per annum,¶ besides eating up the produce of large farms and gardens, purchased and cultivated at the public expense. Yet we have seen these lunatics dining upon Lumper potatoes and buttermilk, not of the best description, crowded round a table at which they had not room to sit. Nor can we conceive why the machinery with which these unconscious beings are surrounded should be so expensive, whilst the honest, useful, industrious labourer, is left to perish of disease, aggravated or brought on by hopeless destitution, in his wretched cabin, in the midst of his starving family.

The same remarks will apply with equal or greater force to the charges made against the public for the inmates of some of the county hospitals.†† of correction, poor house, house of industry, lunatic asylum and infirmary. In 1811, the present hospital was substituted for the old charity, became possessed of its funds and privileges, but still retains something of the compound character of its predecessor, having been obliged to take into the new house, where they now are, the impotent paupers, lunatics, and idiots then remaining in the old establishment. There are now eleven aged paupers, and eleven lunatics and idiots, not patients, fed and lodged in the present hospital. Since the period mentioned, however, paupers and idiots have ceased to be admitted, but lunatics are not excluded, particularly such as are considered curable, and capable of assisting in cultivating the garden and grounds belonging to the hospital. All the labour of a very fine potato field, about half an acre of a well-cropped garden and of some ornamental grounds, is done by the present lunatic inmates. The female inmates spin, sew, &c.

Some striking benefits result to the poor themselves from a strictly economical administration of the means devoted to their relief. In the first place, a much greater number is relieved than otherwise would have been; and in the next place, both the Legislature and the public cease to despair of being able to relieve the many, when they see it proved by the example of a few, that extensive good may be done by means apparently small in proportion, but honestly applied.

This hospital is well constructed, and derives no small advantage from its accommodation^s not having been cramped, or perhaps sacrificed, by the unwise and reprehensible practice of uniting a splendid residence for the medical man with an hospital for the poor. Here there is merely an apartment for the resident apothecary. The wards are spacious and well ventilated. In the centre of the house there is a large octagonal lobby, open from the basement to the cupola, the latter of which has permanently open Venetians at its sides. This excellent arrangement tends to preserve the whole building fresh and sweet.

It would be difficult to imagine a higher state of cleanliness, order and method, than is observable in this whole establishment. The accounts are most accurately kept, being inspected and checked at weekly meetings of the inspecting committee. Peculation or unfair treatment of the patients is rendered as nearly impossible as can be effected by well-directed zeal on the part of the governors and officers. The diet table of each day is filled by the resident apothecary and surgeon. Fines are imposed on the servants for neglect or disorderly conduct, in the first place by the medical officers and steward, which are strictly enforced if confirmed by the weekly visiting committee.

TYRONE COUNTY HOSPITAL and OMAGH DISPENSARY.

These two establishments, in their fiscal management, and even in the sources from which their medicines are obtained, are said to be perfectly distinct; yet the whole of the business of both is carried on in the same house; the whole of the dispensing of medicine in the same shop, and under the superintendence of the same individual, who is also surgeon to the hospital. A distinct druggist is said to be employed for each; yet the medicines of both are stored in the same cupboard, without separation or inscription to mark the limits of either.

The principles upon which this dispensary is based are by no means satisfactory.

1st. It is not only intruded into the county hospital house, already strikingly inadequate to the accommodation of its own legitimate objects, but is the direct cause of the suppression, during the last three years, of the relief afforded from the means of that hospital to the sick poor.

2d. The highly objectionable practice is adopted and sanctioned by the committee, of handing over to the medical attendant as salary, the whole of the balance remaining at the annual settlement of the dispensary accounts. This balance, in every case since the establishment in 1831, has exceeded the whole amount of the county grant, whilst the outlay has been invariably comprehended under two heads, viz. "medicine and stationery."

3d. The medical officer is in the habit of advancing to the treasurer of the dispensary, previously to the assizes, the subscription of any subscriber (friend of his) who may be absent. He could not recollect the exact amount thus advanced in any one year.

4th. The district of the dispensary is unlimited, and all persons applying receive advice and medicine. Thus there is no hope held out to the charitable that additional subscriptions would have any other effect than that of adding so much to the surgeon's salary.

The whole building is divided into three portions; the centre of which is occupied by the surgeon and his family. Of 39 patients now in the house, 30 sleep two in a bed, eight in four beds in a cock-loft, 18 feet by 15.

ARMAGH COUNTY INFIRMARY.

There are at present 32 patients in this hospital, 20 males, 12 females, all of whom with the exception of seven, we found in bed at one o'clock, the hour of our inspection. The wards (three only occupied) were clean, lofty and well ventilated. The patients and the bedding looked neat and orderly. There was one ward on the ground-floor entirely unoccupied (as we were informed, from want of funds), which is capable of containing eight beds; yet some of the other wards would certainly be improved by having their number of beds diminished.

The surgeon's apartments, including the board-room, which he also uses, occupy five-twelfths of the whole house. Four acres of land also belonging to, and attached to the hospital, have been given to the chief medical officer, the surgeon, by a resolution of the board, "so long as he shall hold the same in his own hands."

Extensive out-offices, such as stables, coach-house, &c. have been recently erected in the rear of the infirmary, and four patent water-closets are now being constructed, one in the unoccupied ward, two are within wards, two outside the walls.

Extracts, Class (A.)

In the course of our examination of the diet-rolls and provision accounts of this hospital, two circumstances attracted our attention.

1st. The very striking excess of the present low diets over full diets (the only other variety allowed by the established dietary of the house), as compared with the diet-rolls of the early part of 1832.

2d. The large and increasing portion which milk has formed from that period to the present, both of full and low diets; but particularly of the latter.

The rules by which the respective quantities of milk are charged against each patient in the weekly diet-roll, appear to be the following:

1st. Every patient, whether on full or low diet, is entitled to one pint of new milk as his regular allowance per diem.

2d. Each patient on full diet, and any on low diet, who may happen to have no extra milk, are entitled to one pint of new milk on Mondays and Fridays, "instead of meat or broth," in addition to his regular allowance already mentioned.

3d. All patients on low diet have each a pint of extra milk every day in the week, as well as on Mondays and Fridays, with very few exceptions indeed, and very often a pint of butter-milk every day besides.

The new milk is paid for from the funds of the infirmary, at the rate of 2 d. the Irish quart, or 1 d. per pint, not the imperial pint. At the fever hospital here new milk is charged 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per quart.

The surgeon of the infirmary supplies all the milk required, and receives the amount from the treasurer, through the matron of the hospital, giving his receipt as a voucher for that disbursement. He is, in fact, the contractor for that article.

However liberally and honourably may fulfil his contract for milk with the infirmary, and we beg to state that we do not mean to convey any insinuation to the contrary, still the principle of the transaction is highly objectionable, coupled as it is with some circumstances peculiar to the position in which he stands at present: such are the following:

The surgeon framed the dietary of the infirmary, and proposed it for adoption to the governors (in 1831), by whom it was adopted, as stated by himself.

He orders and regulates all extra allowances to patients in the infirmary.

He holds in his possession, and cultivates for his own profit, all the land (four acres) belonging to the infirmary.

It is, in short, his interest to increase the consumption of an article of diet, which he alone can order to be given to the sick, and in any quantity he may choose to sanction. This is a position in which the chief medical officer of a public charity never ought, in our opinion, to have been permitted to place himself.

There are some other circumstances connected with this infirmary which we feel ourselves called upon to notice. Out-patients are prescribed for, and receive medicines on certain days in the week at the hospital pharmacy, but the sick poor are not visited at their own dwellings, although the medical attendant has been paid 50*l.* per annum, since 1829, for holding a dispensary, to which there are no subscribers, and to which, therefore, the grand jury of the county might refuse all assistance. This dispensary is considered so inefficient, from its medical officer not visiting the sick poor, that another dispensary has been lately got up in a very spirited and liberal manner by the gentry of a country district, of the parish of Armagh, in conjunction with some of their neighbours at Blackwatertown, about four miles distant.

Another circumstance regarding this infirmary, which we consider deserving of notice, is, that although the annual county grants have risen during the last three years from 400*l.* for 1831 to 500*l.* for 1833, and the annual subscriptions from 92*l.* to 131*l.*, and although, during the same period, 183*l.* have been expended upon building and repairs, and 86*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* upon new articles of furniture and repairs of old, yet one large ward remains unoccupied from the want of furniture.

The averaged expense of one patient for one day, for provisions alone, is 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. and a fraction. The averaged expense of one patient for one day, including salaries, fuel, medicine, provisions, &c. is 1*s.* 3*d.*; but taking the number of patients treated in this hospital, during the year 1833, to be 514, as returned, and the number of diets issued during the same time 13,515, as also returned, we find that each patient consumed 26 diets, and cost each 2*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*; no deduction being made from the total expenditure of the funds of the infirmary for that year, viz. 1,048*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*

If the average of the number of patients treated in the infirmary during the last three years (436), and of the expenditure of the funds for the same time (1,047*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*), be taken, the expense of each patient will be found to reach 2*l.* 8*s.* 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

A consideration of the great importance of county infirmaries, as public institutions, both with regard to the good they are capable of doing, and to the sums which they cost to the public, has induced us to enter more minutely into the general administration of this hospital, in order that it may serve us as a standard of comparison in our comments upon other similar establishments. But however highly we may esteem the surgeon's attainments as a professional man, and however completely and justly he may have acquired the confidence of the governors, we should not feel that we had done our duty did we not declare our decided conviction that the infirmary over which he presides, and of which he occupies five-twelfths, affords one more irresistible proof, that the efficiency of these charities is always more or less diminished by chief medical officers and their families residing within the walls.

We

We cannot close these remarks without recording our admiration of the extreme accuracy and disinterested zeal with which the treasurer of this infirmary keeps the accounts of its income and expenditure.

CAVAN COUNTY INFIRMARY.

Nothing, however, can exceed the cleanliness and order in which the whole house is kept. The patients are apparently of a decent class, and the cases well selected. They are just such as ought to be found in such an institution, presenting most interesting but curable examples of disease and accident, with abundant proofs of the very scientific and successful practice of the surgeon.

The only officer residing in the hospital is the matron, who occupies two rooms on the ground floor. The surgeon lives in a separate house close by, built at the expense of the funds, but he pays back to the funds annually for that house 60 l., the amount of the interest at four per cent. of the money expended by the hospital in erecting it.

The very strictest economy prevails in every thing connected with this institution. Solid flesh meat forms no part of the ordinary diet of the patients; but the surgeon has the power of ordering a few ounces as extra food, where he thinks such an addition absolutely necessary. The exclusion of flesh meat from the ordinary diet of sick persons, who in their highest state of health, and under the severest labour, seldom or never taste animal food, is founded upon just physiological reasoning, the correctness of which has been most fully proved by practical experience, on a very extensive scale indeed in all the county goals of Ireland. In all the gaols that we have examined, the health of the prisoners has been very remarkably good. In many cases we were assured that the health of the individual improved considerably after admission; yet flesh meat never forms an item of the prisoner's support, under any circumstance, excepting in very rare cases indeed of disease, when it may be ordered for an individual by the surgeon.

GALWAY COUNTY INFIRMARY.

The surgeon occupies three-sevenths of the whole house, not counting the addition just mentioned; that is to say, three windows on each of the two upper floors, and one window and a hall door on the ground floor, belong to his apartments. The room lighted by the third window on the ground floor is used as the consulting room for extern patients. The ground in front of the house is in the occupation of the surgeon (about three quarters of an acre), partly as a potato field, partly as a kitchen garden. From the latter the kitchen of the patients is supplied with garden stuff, but the surgeon is paid 5 l. per annum for a gardener. The produce of the rest of the ground is appropriated by the surgeon. Five pigs are now kept in a sty in the hospital yard, but there is no space that we could observe laid out for the recreation of the convalescents; and this is an almost invariable result of the chief medical officer of a county infirmary being provided with apartments in the building. The patients cannot appear in front of the house, for there are the surgeon's windows and his family; they cannot enjoy the grounds in the rear, for there is the surgeon's garden and his farm-yard; they must therefore, and do generally, remain all day in their wards, whatever be the state of their convalescence, or of the weather. It is not so in any other nation in Europe with which we are acquainted, and ought not to be permitted in this. The above observations are not meant to apply exclusively to this infirmary; they are applicable to all such institutions that we have as yet seen when the surgeon resides within the building.

There are some other circumstances common to several county infirmaries, relating to the class of cases which we found in them, and the length of time which these cases had been under treatment. In the Galway County Infirmary we noticed a very large proportion of indolent scrofulous ulcers and sore legs. One of the latter, a reduced shopkeeper, had been in the house five months, but the sore on his leg was still open, and likely to continue so for some time. A young woman with chronic ophthalmia, the active stage of which must have been long past, had been in for about the same length of time. Others had been in the house three months, others two; yet, with this extensive commodious building, thus occupied, and possessing so many capabilities, situated in a town containing between 30,000 and 40,000 inhabitants, an accident, however severe and urgent, occurring in that town, could not be taken in, and would be absolutely refused admission in this the only surgical hospital in either the county or the town. Surely neither municipal etiquette nor personal influence ought to be permitted thus to reduce almost to nullity the only source of relief which the country has hitherto established and intended exclusively as the means of restoring to usefulness and labour those of the producing classes who might, by accident or over exertion, be rendered unable to support themselves or their families. There are so few subscribers to county hospitals, and the legal corporations of these institutions consist of so few persons, that the difficulty of obtaining a recommendation to be admitted is very considerable.

The following comparative statement of the number of patients admitted into and treated in the county infirmary and the Galway Fever Hospital respectively, in the year 1833, and of the average expense of one of these patients in each, is worthy of notice:—

Report on

Sir D. Barry, M.D.
J. R. Corrie, esq., M.D.

Extracts, Class (A.)

COUNTY INFIRMARY:

Patients admitted during the year 1833	232.
Total Expenditure during ditto	£. s. d. 733 18 1
Deduct Salaries and Wages	215 17 8
Amount expended upon Patients	518 5
Expense of each Patient, excluding Salaries	2 4 7 3/4

GALWAY FEVER HOSPITAL:

Total Expenditure	£. s. d. 370 7 9
Expense of each Patient, excluding Salaries	214 3 16 11

When the relative size of the buildings, and the comparative importance of the case treated in both hospitals, are considered, the conclusion is unavoidable, that the sick and suffering poor might be made to derive much more good from county infirmaries than they do at present, and that certainly without any increase, and perhaps with a diminution of expense, to the counties.

CLARE COUNTY INFIRMARY.

This hospital has been regenerated by the late change in its medical officers from a state of sad confusion, inefficiency and neglect. The large accession of funds which the election brought, has been most wisely and creditably expended upon the premises. Monopoly and abuse have been banished, and the institution is no longer a close borough, maintained at the public expense, for the benefit of one to the prejudice of the poor. This is the first county hospital in which we have seen more than one chief medical officer. Here there are two able, well-educated men, who divide the duties and the emoluments equally between them; and not only protect the charity from falling again into abuse, but give an additional practical surgeon to the neighbourhood, and an additional advocate to the just claims of the poor.

LIMERICK COUNTY INFIRMARY.

The crying wants of the county and of the city of Limerick in the way of hospital accommodation, have far outgrown the capabilities of the infirmery, if they were ever commensurate. There are now but 30 patients in the house; 20 males, 10 females; but there is room for 30 more beds; whilst the applications for admission are quite overpowering. One patient, noted for admission on the 28th of August, has but just arrived at the top of the list of candidates. He comes in to-morrow, 6th of November. Yet not all who ought to be provided with hospital accommodation, nor nearly all, apply for admission, knowing the almost interminable time those who do apply may have to wait. When we add to this melancholy fact, that Typhus fever, and all diseases reputed to be contagious, are utterly inadmissible, and that this small hospital of 30 beds is the only general hospital for a population of 200,000, besides one-fourth of 65,000, the population of the city, how pitiable must be the state of public destitution of the sick poor of that community!

The rules adopted for the management of this charity, in August of this year, appear to be wisely constructed in most instances; but it is rather remarkable, that there is nothing said as to an airing ground for convalescents, although the hospital is built on a considerable area. There is in fact no spot for the patients to walk in, all the space, not covered by building, being, as is always the case, turned to the private use of the resident officers, who in this case are, 1, the apothecary with his wife and family; 2, the matron (mother of the apothecary.) There are a garden and two walled courts or yards: one of the latter occupied by rabbits, the other by fowls. The very unfavourable influence which the residence of married officers within the walls of medical charities never fails to exercise upon their management, cannot be too strongly noticed, nor too rigorously watched, if the source itself of the evil cannot be removed.

The plans for registering and checking the orders for, and expenditure of diet and extra allowances, are worthy of notice, and are due, we believe, to the zeal and intelligence of the medical officers, assisted by their able registrar.

QUEEN'S COUNTY INFIRMARY.

This hospital is now very remarkable for the high grade and striking importance of the medical education it affords, and for the very superior tone of the professional care devoted to the sick. There is, however, but one chief medical officer, and he, besides being both physician and surgeon, receives a salary as apothecary to the institution.

There

There are at present nine pupils, all apparently well educated young gentlemen. Two of them, a senior and a junior, do the duties of the apothecary together. Every pupil, when of a certain standing, acts, in his turn, as physician's clerk. Each has charge of a certain number of patients, and each patient is in charge of some pupil, who attends to and records his case. There is one pupil always on guard, who does not go out.

This is the only county hospital at which we found any organized system of education; and certainly that which we have just examined here, with so much satisfaction, is highly creditable to the physician, and must produce good practical men.

It is much to be lamented, that more extensive advantage is not taken of the educational facilities afforded by the provincial hospitals in this country, by admitting a greater number, both of professors and pupils; for however zealous and scientific one man may be, it is the division of labour which multiplies produce, as well in the moral as the physical world.

HOWTH AND BALDOYLE DISPENSARY, COUNTY DUBLIN.

Class (B.)

The physician was about to resign, and had published an advertisement, without the sanction of the committee or treasurer, inviting candidates to send in their qualifications to the secretary. The former medical attendant, he states, did the same when he resigned.

Ninety-three cases of small-pox are returned by the physician, in his printed report, for the year ending on the 31st July 1833, "although vaccination had been resorted to at the usual time." Yet, upon going over his register most carefully with him, in which every name (829) is written with his own hand, and to every name is appended a disease, only eighteen cases of small-pox are found. His own remarks show that there was no mistake. There is no date to any of the last 280 names entered in the register, although an occupation, residence, age and disease for each are stated at full length. In the report to the grand jury for 1832-1833, fourteen deaths are stated to have taken place, yet only three are found in the register.

In the course of the above examination, it was impossible not to be struck, first, with the smallness of the fraction of the income of the charity applied to the relief of the sick poor; secondly, with the two successive advertisements of the medical vacancies (in the present instance, without the collective sanction of the committee); thirdly, with the extraordinary discrepancies between the printed report drawn up by the physician, and the records of the charity, from which the facts of that report are professed to have been extracted; fourthly, with the highly culpable and unfounded discredit attempted to be fixed upon vaccination as a preventive to small-pox, calculated to cause extensive mischief, by weakening the confidence of the public in that inestimable preservative against a most fatal disease.

JULIANSTOWN DISPENSARY, COUNTY LOUTH.

The medicines are supplied by contract with the subscribers, since July last; the contractor being allowed 40*l.* per annum for this station, and for those presenting recommendations at his father's apothecary's shop. This dispensary was founded upon the proposition of the son of an apothecary residing four miles or five miles off. He procured thirty-one names, five or six of whom at 10*s.* per annum, upon which a presentment was applied for, and obtained.

Some articles were exhibited, which had been brought down in a basket this morning, such as sulphat quiniæ, &c.

No medicine is stated to be kept at the other dispensary. Upon visiting that place, however, the dispensary there is found to consist of a small old cupboard, containing three or four bottles, and placed in the corner of a narrow room, in which there is a bed. The rent charged for this establishment is said to be 3*l.* per annum. The chief applicants are the inhabitants of a common, who have built themselves houses, planted gardens, and prevent all others from settling there. Should any person attempt to build a cottage, the established residents demolish it forthwith.

FORKHILL DISPENSARY, COUNTY ARMAGH.

The situation of this charity, in a remote mountainous district, densely inhabited by very small farmers holding from three to ten or twenty acres, is particularly well-calculated to render it of great and extensive utility. There is no medical man residing within five miles on any side of it. It was founded upon a portion of the charitable bequest of a gentleman, upon which also nine schools are supported for the education of the children of this extensive parish.

The funds of the charity being involved in litigation, the county has given a grant in aid of the dispensary, which, with the private subscriptions of the resident, and most active trustee, and of other gentlemen, makes the situation of the medical superintendent an object worth the ambition of a regularly educated surgeon.

The present surgeon is a licentiate of the Dublin College, a young man of considerable attainments, and performs the duties of his situation in a manner most satisfactory to the trustees, highly useful to the neighbourhood, and most creditable to himself. His register is neatly and accurately kept; his pharmacy is well supplied with the best medicines, orderly, clean and well arranged; his expenditure economical. He submits a report of the proceedings of the dispensary, every three months, to the trustees of the charity, who meet quarterly to inspect the schools, and audit the accounts. A dinner is provided for these gentlemen by a separate bequest, left for that purpose.

The rector of the parish, the resident trustee, is most active and zealous in rendering the dispensary efficient. Its benefits are not intended to be confined to the absolutely poor and destitute. The small farmer, who could not conveniently pay for good medical advice brought from a distance, is permitted to participate fully in its advantages; and thus the charity fulfils its purpose,—that of providing competent medical aid for all, where it could not otherwise be had. The county hospital is of little or no use to the inhabitants of this remote district.

It is to be hoped that when the funds of the bequest, which amount to 1,800*l.* per annum, are freed from litigation, a small hospital of six or eight beds will be attached to the dispensary; and thus, without adding much to the annual expense, confer upon the surrounding population all the benefits which a county hospital, however well administered, never diffuses beyond a certain extent.

BALLINASLOE DISPENSARY, COUNTY GALWAY.

Although this dispensary has now existed for more than ten years (we have not been able to ascertain the exact number), and has been constantly under the charge of the present medical superintendent, there was not a single line of record to be produced, either as to the patients admitted to the benefits of the charity, their diseases, their treatment, their number, or the date of their admission; no invoices of medicines purchased; no memoranda of visits made to the sick poor at their own dwellings. In short, the whole of the medical business of this charity appears to have been at all times carried on without the use of writing materials.

The very imperfect and reluctant history which the medical attendant gave to us of this establishment, and of himself as connected with it, was remarkable.

1st. A document was submitted to us, as having been furnished to the grand jury, in 1830, "as directed in 1829." That document begins with the assertion, that there were "On the books, in January, 1829, 153 cases." But there are no books in existence, nor is there any proof that such books ever did exist. Indeed, there is no apparent source of information, from which the numbers stated to have been "cured, relieved, died," &c. could then, or can now, be taken. There are a few tickets of recommendation on a file, mostly signed by initials, from which nothing can be collected.

2d. It was stated, and we noted it down from dictation, that the salary of the medical attendant is 80*l.* per annum, with an allowance for a horse 10*l.*, and house rent 10*l.*; that he orders the medicines from a Dublin druggist, which are paid for by the treasurer; that the dispensary medicines are kept separately from those of his own apothecary's shop. These assertions were most fully disproved by the treasurer, who showed from his book that he has, for some years, paid the medical attendant 100*l.* per annum as salary, and 60*l.* per annum in lieu of all charges for medicine. These are the only two items of expenditure. The only two items of income are,—

Subscriptions from four individuals annually	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	£. 74	4	6
County annual Grant	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	74	4	6

This latter sum, as will be perceived, falls short of the medical attendant's annual claim for his dispensary services by 11*l.* 11*s.* But the treasurer is also treasurer to an establishment in this town called a fever hospital, and the apothecary, is the sole medical attendant of that charity also. Accordingly we find that 23*l.* 4*s.* were taken from the funds of the fever hospital, in March 1830, and applied, in January 1831, to liquidate the debt which the dispensary funds had contracted, as we presume, to the attendant during the two previous years. He now admits that he does not keep the dispensary medicines quite separately from those of his own shop. As the annual 160*l.* continue to be paid to the treasurer on account of the dispensary, and as the subscriptions have but slightly increased since 1831, when that establishment was placed out of debt in the manner described, its funds are again indebted to the treasurer in the sum of 19*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*

There are no regulations, nor bye-laws, nor rules of any kind, for the government of this charity; no meetings of governors are ever held, at least there are no minutes of such meetings. None of the inhabitants of the town subscribe to it, excepting the rector and the treasurer.

This dispensary, in itself, but more especially as connected with the fever hospital, is a strong example of the utter carelessness and inefficiency with which the best intended public charities are too apt to be administered, when those to whom they are entrusted are left without superintendence, and relieved from responsibility.

DUNMORE DISPENSARY, COUNTY GALWAY.

The following facts and statements have been so clearly brought home to our conviction, they have been so fully confirmed by the admissions of the chief medical officer, and they leave so little doubt that great abuses have existed, and still exist, in the administration of this charity, that we feel ourselves compelled to report them.

The examination was conducted in presence of the rector of the parish, and of the head of the Revenue police of the station.

1st. The chief medical officer resides eight miles off; never comes to the dispensary oftener oftener than once a week (on Monday), and sometimes not so often, although in his written replies to the queries of the Board he states, under his signature, that he comes twice a week. He is set down in a book shown to us as the treasurer's book, as receiving 100*l.* per annum. There is a person residing in the dispensary-house, who is paid a salary of 30*l.* with a free house from the funds, as stated by the chief officer, and who does, or is supposed to do, his duty at all other times than those mentioned. This person is acknowledged never to have passed any examination, nor even to have completed the term of his apprenticeship as an apothecary's pupil; yet he was recommended by the chief medical officer himself to his present employment.

2d. The pharmacy does not contain the value of 3*l.* sterling of medicine, if a huge cask of Glauber's salts, and a quarter-cask said to contain molasses, be excepted. There is no opium, no tincture of opium, no tincture of any kind. The drawers are without either labels or numbers, and contain only rubbish. Many of the labelled bottles are empty, and some, without label or stopper, contain destructive or poisonous drugs, such as sulphuric acid, and corrosive sublimate. The few medicines in the pharmacy are being spoiled by damp, yet there evidently has not been a fire in the chimney for months past, although "turf and lard" are charged 6*l.* 10*s.* for last year: as to the lard, there is not a particle of ointment of any kind to be seen.

The assistant keeps a little shop in another room of the dispensary-house, in which he sells medicine for his own profit. He was absent at a fair during our visit; and the medical officer thought he recognized in his shop the tincture of opium bottle which ought to have been in the dispensary, but remarked, that as the assistant has his private medicines from the dispensary druggist, he could not be sure of the fact. It would be difficult to form an idea of a medical establishment more miserably provided, or kept in a more slovenly manner than this dispensary. There had been a pretty fair supply of instruments, but the amputating case is at present nearly if not utterly unserviceable from rust, the effects of damp and want of care.

3. There is a book kept as a registry of patients, diseases, &c.; and at the end of each year a summary is made out, such as the following for last year, to be laid before the grand jury, viz.

Ditto relieved	-	-	-	940
Results unknown	-	-	-	195
Deaths	-	-	-	45
Remaining on books	-	-	-	130

Total number of cases - - 2,035*

After a most diligent search, we could not discover, nor could the medical officer point out any note or observation from which the elements of this summary could have been collected. The numbers set down, therefore, must have been purely arbitrary, but so arranged as to form a total equal to the number of names in the book for the year. There were no dates, either of months, weeks or days.

4. The subscriptions to this charity are stated by the medical officer to have been for each of the last three years, 110*l.* 10*s.*, and one item, "Subscriptions," of that amount, is entered in what is called the treasurer's book for each of these years. The treasurer, as we were informed, has hitherto made the usual oath, or declaration, to be laid before the grand jury, as to the correctness of these amounts; and an equivalent sum has been regularly granted thereupon in aid of the dispensary, making the annual income of that charity for the years stated, 221*l.* The sum of the annual subscriptions, it will be seen, has been exactly the same.† Yet several of the subscribers, as we afterwards found, had been defaulters; some for three years, some for two, some for one, and some had never paid at all. But the medical officer states, that he has been in the habit of making up these deficiencies, whatever they may amount to, from his own purse, and that he always takes care that the treasurer shall receive the full amount specified in the declaration; taking upon himself the risk of being repaid or not, his advances, by the defaulting subscribers. There was no official list of subscribers or governors in the treasurer's book, nor could the medical officer furnish any original list. He produced one, however, which he said was authentic. Upon going over this list with him, name by name, (amongst which are those of two of his brothers and his own) he acknowledged that the deficiencies of payment last year amounted to more than 30*l.* It follows, therefore, from his own showing, that the county of Galway was assessed last year in at least 30*l.* more than the nominal subscribers of the dispensary contributed to its funds; and that he received back, two-fold, whatever money he advanced to make up these alleged deficiencies.

5. The book, in which the accounts of the charity are kept, called the treasurer's book, is never out of the possession of the medical officer or his assistant. The entries are made in the handwriting of the latter, but are, in some places, altered in the handwriting of the former, after the balance had been struck. For instance, in the expenditure of the year ended 30 June 1834, the item "medicine," charged in the first entry, "27*l.* or 29*l.* or 22*l.*" is is altered by writing over that sum, "42*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.*" At the foot of this account, and of this only, which is manifestly incorrect, independently of the fact of larger sums being substituted for smaller sums, there is a certificate, said to be in the handwriting of the treasurer, certifying that the account had been examined, and found correct. To account for the substitutions alluded to, the medical officer produced some receipts signed by the druggist, which it was alleged would amount to the substituted sum, by adding to them 2*l.*, the amount of a gentleman's subscription for the year. But this would evidently serve only to render the account still more incorrect, by charging against the funds of the charity a sum received for its benefit.

The charges entered in this book appear to be perfectly arbitrary, but shaped to square with the apparent income, two or three pounds, more or less, at the end of the year. Thus,* "Carriage of Medicine" is charged for the two years ended in June 1832 and 1833, at 12*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*, which, at the rate of 3*s.* per cwt., the price paid, according to one carman's receipt, produced by him, for 9 cwt., would show that 4 tons and 3 cwt. of drugs had been received at the dispensary within the two years mentioned.

6. There are no invoices of medicines forthcoming; there are no rules nor regulations; no meetings of governors are ever held. Every thing connected with the charity centres in the medical attendant, who is in himself chief medical officer, collector of subscriptions, treasurer de facto, and, along with the functions of these various offices, represents all the nominal, with some of those set down as bonâ fide subscribers to the Dispensary.

9th October, 8½ o'Clock, A.M.

The above had been written and concluded, and we were just setting off, when the medical officer called, bringing with him his treasurer's book, and three invoices of medicine. At this interview he stated, that he does not receive more than 30*l.* or 40*l.* of the nominal annual subscription of 110*l.*, and that of the whole list of 40 subscribers, not more than four or five individuals pay.

In the county of Galway we are informed by a grand juror that the money purporting to be the amount of subscriptions for the year, whether these subscriptions be bonâ fide contributed by the subscribers whose names are given in as such, or made up by an individual interested in the concern, must be lodged, with the equivalent sum given by the grand jury, in the bank at Galway, payable to the orders of the respective dispensary committees, and not to the order of the treasurer only. But this measure of precaution affords but little or no security against the abuses described in the foregoing observations, more particularly in cases where the patron, or the medical man, with a few dependents or relatives, constitute the whole machinery of the institution.

KILLYAN DISPENSARY.

At the foot of the yearly accounts, which are all in the medical officer's handwriting, we find the following form of oath, or affidavit, which he states he has actually sworn to, at the suggestion of the treasurer, at the two last assizes, on which his presentments were passed. A copy, written by the medical officer, is annexed, with other documents, to this report.

"I _____ do make oath, on the Holy Evangelists, that I have regularly attended the dispensary in my charge three days in each week within the year, with the exception of a very few days, the greater number of which I procured another medical attendant; and that I visited with all possible despatch, and regularly, all patients whom I conceived required my personal attendance.

"Sworn before me, this 27th day of March 1834.

If the taking of the above oath were made an indispensable condition to the obtaining the county grant, we consider it highly vague, and tending to no useful purpose, but on the contrary, rather unfavourable to moral rectitude, and that high sense of honesty and truth which ought to distinguish the medical man worthy of being entrusted with the administration of charitable relief to his suffering and destitute fellow-creatures.

In the printed "Abstract of undischarged Fines, and new Presentments at Spring Assizes, 1834, for the county of Galway," we find the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That in future, the treasurer and committee of dispensaries be directed to draw their checks on the bank in favour of those persons only for whom the money is intended, and that every check shall be signed by the treasurer and three at least of the committee."

If subscriptions to dispensaries have been sometimes found to be merely nominal, as we conceive has been pretty clearly proved in the Reports, and if the money said to be subscribed be merely lent for exhibition, to procure real funds by a county assessment (and the resolution quoted seems to bear out this view of the case), the precaution implied by having the amount produced as subscriptions to dispensaries actually lodged in the bank, with the amount of the county grant, and the whole afterwards drawn for, in the manner described, affords only the appearance of protection against the contemplated abuse. It will be observed that the salaries given to the medical officers of dispensaries in the county of Galway are much larger than those we have met with in the other counties through which we have passed.

KILLANE DISPENSARY.

The difficulty of finding fit and willing persons to undertake the duties of the treasurer-ship of a dispensary, and who reside near enough to the institution, particularly in remote districts, to execute these duties efficiently, has rendered that office almost merely nominal, or honorary, in a great majority of cases in this county. The medical man generally keeps all the accounts himself, and furnishes a copy or abstract to his treasurer, who goes through the necessary forms at the assizes, or grand jury meetings.

EYRECOURT DISPENSARY.

Whether the accounts of dispensaries be kept by the treasurer, or by the surgeon, or by the latter really, and by the former nominally, which is most frequently the case, we have found, almost invariably of late, that the druggists' invoices and receipts produced, do not tally with the charges entered in the treasurer's book for medicines, say for the three years last past. Either all or some of the vouchers required had been lost or mislaid, or were in the hands of an absent officer of the charity, or were not preserved, not being thought necessary, after the accounts to which they referred had passed the grand jury, or the unconnected vouchers produced had been preserved by mere chance. Or the treasurer states in explanation, that the surgeon had ordered the medicines and sundries from the druggists and others, and produced the receipts of these persons to him, when he made the necessary entry in his book, having first given the money to be transmitted or paid by the medical superintendent who had furnished the particulars.

CLARANBRIDGE DISPENSARY.

The pharmacy is plentifully supplied with the very best medicines. We found pearl-barley and rice here for the first time in an institution of this class. These articles should, in our opinion, be more frequently given to the poor at dispensaries. What a blessing would these easily-digested substances be to the famishing mother, who has no other food to give to her sick and half-starved infant, than a morsel of lumper potato, which she first carefully masticates, and then transfers, medicated with her own saliva, to the parching mouth of her child. One of us has witnessed this mode of feeding an infant of the very tenderest age, and was informed that it is very generally adopted by the poor nursing mother.

The medical attendant assures us, that no instance has occurred to him of an attempt to procure the articles alluded to by false representations, or as food for the healthy.

ARDRAHAN and GORT DISPENSARY.

The present dispensary affords one more proof that medical charities are generally ill-placed in this country, and found where they are least required.*

Where the wealthy and the benevolent reside, there medical men abound, and certainly in such places there is no danger that the poor will perish from want of medical aid. In the remote and poor district, if there be a medical charity established, it is generally little better than nominal, for not only the paid medical attendant, but the drugs that belong to it by right, will be found at some distant point amongst the wealthy, who could well spare both, because they can command others as good or better.

PRIVATE DISPENSARY at GORT.

Being particularly anxious to have an opportunity of examining a dispensary supported by private subscriptions exclusively, and having heard that such a charity existed in this town, established by the medical officer himself, we begged permission, and obtained it most kindly, from that gentleman, to see his institution.

We found a very neat though humble pharmacy, built by the Doctor himself, in his own back court. It contained a very respectable supply of all the most efficient and necessary medicines. It had been three years established. He sees 300 patients at least in the course of a year; and assures us that his drugs do not cost him, one year with another, quite 15*l.* per annum. He prepares no medicines of any kind, but gets every thing ready prepared from Dublin. He never gives medicine without a ticket of recommendation, and sees fevers and other serious diseases at the dwelling of the patient. The whole amount of the funds for this year does not exceed 30*l.*, as stated by the Doctor. The Parish priest is a subscriber.

Every thing seems to be fairly and honourably conducted. There is, in fact, no motive to a contrary line of proceeding. The Doctor's friends confide in his integrity and skill. They contribute a certain amount annually for him to dispose of as he pleases, on condition that he will furnish medicine and advice to those whom they recommend. Here charity, or friendship, or patronage, or all three, flow in a strictly private channel, and no public authority can claim any right to interrupt or question their course, or the application of their gifts. But if money levied off the rate-payers of the county be destined to be divided between the poor, and those employed to distribute that money, mixed up with real or nominal private subscriptions, and if there be no adequate responsibility, no superintendence, no check, the consequences to the poor are not difficult to foretell.

BALLINASLOE FEVER HOSPITAL.

We were not aware of the existence of this institution until after we had been some time in the town, the medical attendant not having made any return to the Queries of the Board either for the dispensary or the fever hospital, although he was, and is still, sole medical officer to both.

The fever hospital has existed since 1828 as a public charity, supported by the county. In that year the grand jury granted, and the treasurer received 198*l.*, being double the amount of the subscription sworn to, viz. 99*l.*, * which gave a fund of 297*l.* at once for its maintenance.

The house consists of a cottage rented at 14*l.* per annum, and contains two wards on the ground floor, holding each four beds, and one small ward on a boarded loft, extending over about one third of the cottage, holding two or three beds. There are besides a small kitchen and two small rooms for the nurse and her family. The cottage is at this moment in a very ruinous state. The floor of the loft ward is falling to pieces. One of the walls is cracked, and the thatch lets in the rain in some places. The bedding is damaged, worn out, and much reduced from its original quantity.

There are at present three patients in the house; viz.

1. A woman who has been living in the house on the funds of the hospital, now six years, with an interval of about five or six months, when she was sent to the sea-coast at the expense of the funds. She labours under a cutaneous disease, suspected to have been originally syphilitic, aggravated by an imprudent use of mercury.

2. A youth labouring under dropsy. He has been in the house about five or six weeks.

3. A man said to be in low fever.

There is no written evidence, either in the shape of register, prescription, diet-roll or memorandum of any kind, that any other than the three patients just enumerated, had ever been admitted into or treated in this hospital, nor indeed is there any written record to be found connected with these individuals as patients. The medical officer, upon being asked how many persons he thought, or could guess, had been treated in this hospital during the last twelve months, stated, after a great deal of vague conjecture, that 40 persons at least had been admitted. But upon examining the account kept by the nurse, of the milk and bread purchased for the use of the patients by her, it appeared, and was admitted by the medical officer, that for the last two years she never had more than three, seldom more than two patients, of which number the syphilitic woman was always one, and that this woman was sometimes the only patient. The nurse also stated that each patient generally remained in the hospital about six weeks.

The diet consists of Milk	-	-	-	-	2 quarts	} Daily.
„ Bread	-	-	-	-	2 pennyworth
„ Oatmeal	-	-	-	-	1 pint

The nurse is allowed 5*s.* per week, without food. She washes for the patients, and charges but 1*s.* 8*d.* per month for soap and candles. She often sits up with patients who are very ill, for several nights in succession.

There is no medicine kept in this hospital, although it is a considerable distance, say half a mile from the medical officer's house. We have not been able to learn exactly how the prescribing department is managed, but it is quite certain that there is nothing written to be seen.

The nurse states, that four persons have died here since Christmas; but these deaths have not been recorded. Some cholera patients were treated here during the local epidemic, and several deaths occurred, but no account can be obtained of the number of deaths, recoveries or admissions. These patients were supported from a separate fund. This is stated to have been the only cholera hospital in Ballinasloe; there is only one medical attendant. We could not see enough of the treasurer to ascertain whether this fever hospital has had any other grant from the county than that received in 1828. From his books, however, which he was kind enough to place at our disposal, we perceive that the expenditure up to March 1832 nearly equalled the original funds, viz. 297*l.*; that the outlay from that period to December of the same year was about 90*l.*; but as no entry has been made since, we cannot judge how the funds of this hospital stand at present.

The very name of fever hospital generally acts as a bar in this country against all superintendence, even of those who are most zealous and most liberal in their support. The immediate charge, therefore, of these institutions, should always be given to persons of known humanity and conscientious feelings; but above all things, the most precise and ample written details of their internal government and discipline should be insisted upon and enforced. The absence or gross neglect of records to show that they had been adequately and efficiently managed, should for ever disqualify the medical superintendent from, as it would assuredly prove him to be unworthy of being entrusted with so important a charge.

GALWAY FEVER HOSPITAL.

This establishment does infinite credit to the philanthropy, professional zeal, and eminent sanitary experience of the medical officer of this town, late a distinguished military physician physician and surgeon. To his unpaid and purely gratuitous services, Galway is indebted, if not for the very founding of this admirable charity, certainly for its continuance, and for all the good it has done during the last eight or ten years. The building, which was erected for its present purpose, originated in the deplorable want of such an institution, felt by all, during the terrible epidemic of typhus fever in 1817. It contains four wards upon two floors. In each of three of the wards there are twelve beds, and in the fourth ten beds, all occupied. Every thing about this little hospital, although plain and economical, is clean and wholesome-looking. But the poverty of the building fund has caused a sad deficiency of out-offices. There is no turf-house nor dead-house.

The accounts of daily expenditure of diet, and of the quantity and amount of extra comforts allowed to the sick, are kept with great exactitude, and are highly satisfactory. If less than the standing diet be consumed, less is charged, but never more; as an example, in 1833 there were admitted, fed and treated in this hospital 253 patients, at the cost, for the whole, of

The only circumstance in the management of the affairs of this charity which under any change of officers could be remarked upon, is, that the meetings of the corporation and of the committee appointed by them are irregular, and therefore that the vouchers for the subsistence expenditure are not duly and publicly examined. But under the vigilant eye of the president of the hospital committee, this is of little consequence, however wrong the principle might be under a less zealous and less able surveillance.

This charity was found to be of signal service in the cholera of 1832, and in return had a large accession to its present stock of bedding from the cholera funds.

ARMAGH DISTRICT LUNATIC ASYLUM.

We remarked a very striking want of employment, more particularly amongst the male patients. They sat or moped about in their day rooms; in one of which there were twelve, in another seventeen, and in another fifteen, in every stage of muttering, restless idiocy, isolated, melancholy and raving, unquiet lunacy; without a single object being present to attract attention, or bring into exercise any gleam of reason which might be returning to the diseased mind of the individual. It is true that the state of the weather prevented these wretched persons from being employed on the farm, but surely, in a disease, for the successful treatment of which occupation is proved to be, far above all other plans, the most essential, such employment should be provided for lunatics both within and without doors, as would engage their attention, and assist them in combining their thoughts. There are few, if any, lunatics not requiring personal restraint, who are not capable of performing some work, more or less useful and profitable.*

There are at present 120 lunatics and idiots in the asylum, of whom the manager considers only 17 curable, and 103 incurable. There are but two beds vacant, one of which by a death. If this state of things be not remedied, the asylum is likely to become within a very short time utterly useless, as far as regards the objects for which it was established; viz. the treatment and restoration to sanity of curable pauper lunatics. Either hospitals for incurable cases of that class must be established, or the present asylums will inevitably become devoted to that purpose alone, if the manager's statement (assented to by the governors present) be correct, that the engagements entered into by the friends of the lunatic to take him away when required, are in most cases found to be of no avail.

The manner in which the expenses of this establishment, and the specific application of its resources, are accounted for, might in our opinion be more satisfactory. No credit is given for, nor is any account submitted to the board of directors of, the produce of the labour of the lunatics, unless some portion of that produce shall have been sold. The only account furnished on these subjects, is the charge for the raw material, for garden and agricultural seeds and implements, &c. To the apparent public expense, therefore, of feeding and clothing these persons, must be added the amount which the articles manufactured by themselves, and the produce of the farm and garden which they exclusively cultivate, would fetch, if sold in the market. The grounds belonging to the institution consist of three acres of grass-lawn, two acres of walled garden richly cropped with vegetables and fruit, eight acres of farm, producing potatoes, corn, &c., with an extensive yard and piggery, containing nine large pigs, a cow, horse, geese, turkeys, &c., the private property of the manager. The yard abuts upon the centre back front of the building. Although the whole has very much the air of a farm cultivated at the public expense for the benefit of an individual, yet we have reason to believe that the manager, who seems to enjoy the full confidence of the governors, applies a fair proportion of the produce to the support of the lunatics; but this should appear in his accounts with the Board; and we are the more surprised that it does not, as he keeps a book relating to the garden and farm, from which some of the items might be collected.

The

* The only employments provided for males in this asylum, are field or garden labour, weaving for six or eight, and stone-breaking, but we could discover no recent traces of the last-mentioned kind of work.

The medical officer keeps all the accounts of the asylum himself, and is the only clerk connected with the establishment; writing alone, therefore, must occupy much of his time.

ENNIS HOUSE OF INDUSTRY AND MENDICITY.

This institution merits, in our opinion, particular attention. It is established on the same tenement as the county infirmary, and was formerly a lunatic asylum. The income for last year, ending January 1834, was 630*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* A large portion of which consists of a grant from the county rates.

There were fed within the walls, on Friday, October 31, 1834, viz:—

Whoever is found by the proper officers begging, and destitute of the means or ability to procure food, is fed. Claims for admission as a permanent inmate are closely examined.

The scale of diet is sufficiently ample; nearly equal to the mixed diet of the gaols:—10 oz. of oaten meal made into stir-about weighed 3½ lbs. This was the allowance for breakfast for two boys, with milk.

We saw eight old men in the incurable ward, all bed-ridden, all above 80 years of age. Every thing around them was clean and wholesome, as were all the other wards, dormitories, and day-rooms. There is a dry and comfortable garden for the inmates to walk in, with seats enough for all. They have unrestricted access to this garden, which was lately rescued from the usurped exclusive occupation of the late county surgeon, who was also surgeon to the house of industry.

Upon a strict review of all the inmates out of bed, in the garden, we found that the claims of six or eight to be fed at the public expense, might be very fairly questioned; but, in general, the selection had been made with sound discrimination. One man complained loudly that his allowance of food was not sufficient. To this one of us replied, that most probably the governors would not object to his quitting the establishment. He would not like, he said to go out, for he was nearly blind; this we had already observed.

This institution, reflecting honour upon the town and the county in which it is situated, and most highly creditable to every individual connected with its management, is approaching, if it has not already touched, that dangerous point, when the cunning, lying idler will exert all his ingenuity to get into it, or to keep in when he ought to be turned out to make room for a fit object. The printed statement of expenses is most striking, and the mode in which the accounts are kept is highly deserving of imitation, as well as the system of management, by which the expenditure and receipt of provisions are checked.

This is the only instance in which we have seen realized an hospital for the (sick) curable and incurable poor, united with a refuge for the starving impotent; all within one enclosure, and under one system of administration; the accounts kept by the same person. Well may the humane authorities call attention to the effects of the "unnatural diet" of the poor. They have shown how cheaply wholesome food may be substituted, when there is integrity and attention enough applied to the management of the funds. The county grant makes this, in principle, an English workhouse, or poor-house, or both combined. The streets are free from beggars, and from the disgusting exposure of frightful diseases exhibited to excite pity; whilst the public-spirited inhabitants of that enlightened town have established, and have now actually in operation, a system of public relief to the starving impotent poor, which would prove a blessing to the country, and an honour to humanity, if generally adopted, and equally well administered in all other districts.*

* "The number of persons fed each day for the last five months, at the House of Industry and Mendicity, averaging 195 persons, at an expense for diet of 1½*d.* per day, allowing for cooking, fuel, soap and candles, straw, new furniture, clothing, bedding, building and repairs, contingencies, salaries and wages, at an average of ¾*d.* each, making in gross for maintenance, &c. 2½*d.* per diem each."

DIETARY:—

Breakfast: Grown Males and Females, Meal, 6 ounces; Milk, 1 pint, Irish measure.—Children, 5 ounces Meal; 1 naggin Milk.

Dinner: Grown Males and Females, Potatoes, 2¾ pounds; Milk, 1 pint Irish.—Children under 10 years, Potatoes, 2¼ pounds; Milk, 1 naggin.

It is rather curious, as bearing upon the very striking superiority of the food, lodging, clothing and temperature now afforded by gaols and houses of industry in Ireland, compared with those of the wretched peasant in his own miserable wigwam, that the annual number of prisoners which have passed through the county gaol, has increased within six years from 403, which it was in 1827, to 723, who found a comfortable lodging there during the last year. With the exception of restraint as to locality, there is no class of His Majesty's subjects whose health and indispensable wants are more judiciously, carefully and successfully attended to, than those of the inmates of Ennis gaol, which, by the way, is quite a model of cleanliness, wholesomeness and mild discipline.

Infirmaries were first established in Ireland by an Act of the 5th and 6th Geo. III., intituled, "An Act for establishing Infirmaries or Hospitals;" eleven additional Acts have been passed to amend this Act. It cannot be necessary to mention here what new powers were obtained by each of these latter Acts; suffice it to state what the laws for establishing and supporting these charities now are. And, 1st. For establishing a county infirmary, i. e. for erecting the building:—

For this purpose a voluntary subscription must be first raised to the amount of at least 500*l.*; the Lord Lieutenant may then direct the treasury to give a sum not exceeding 1,500*l.*, provided the infirmary in question is to be erected at a distance not less than ten miles from any previously existing infirmary. There is no power to raise money by rate on the county for building an infirmary.

2d. For supporting a county infirmary, it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for the grand jury of each and every county in Ireland to present a sum not exceeding 600*l.* in the year in addition to 100*l.* to be paid by the treasury to the surgeon of the charity. This income is increased by voluntary donations and subscriptions, and by fines at petty sessions.

The management is vested in the primate, the bishop of the diocese, the rector or vicar of the parish in which the charity is situated (these are governors ex officio), together with donors of 21*l.*, and annual subscribers of 3*l.* 3*s.* A corporation is thus formed, in which all direction, &c. is vested; by it the officers are elected, bye-laws passed, and each individual of it, and no other, has the power of granting tickets of admission.

By 46th Geo. III. c. 96, a power is vested in the Lord Lieutenant to direct county hospitals and infirmaries to be visited and reported upon from time to time; and the General Board of Health, under the direction of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, addressed Queries to the managers of county hospitals, and printed, in 1829 and 1831, Reports on the then county infirmaries of Ireland. These contained, besides much other valuable matter, some strong recommendations relative to the introduction of one general system for regulating the consumption of provisions at these charities, in order "that the average expense of supporting one patient for one day in each hospital might be ascertained with the exactness which its importance demands." It does not appear that any steps have been since taken in consequence of these Reports.

For the use of the sick poor, an infirmary, supported by a county rate, is established in each county; but the accommodation afforded, i. e. the number of beds, is not in any determinate proportion to the population of the county; for example, a fixed number for every 10,000 inhabitants, &c.

The situation has been usually determined by that of the county or assize town; hence the hospital, instead of being central, is frequently placed at the verge of the county; in the spot therefore least convenient for the majority of the inhabitants.* But supposing the situation the best possible, and the accommodation adequate, the charity would still be of no great service to the bulk of the people. A population at a distance exceeding ten or fifteen miles from an hospital for accidents and acute cases, receives very little benefit from it. Delay and motion are obstacles of the most serious nature, often such as cannot practically be overcome. There is another circumstance not to be overlooked; the repugnance which still unfortunately exists against going into an hospital at all; a feeling which has irresistible force when the hospital is at such a distance as to render frequent communications with relatives impossible.

County hospitals have not been built according to any general plan: the earliest established were in some instances placed in, and still occupy, buildings intended for other purposes, and contain small, ill-ventilated, inconvenient wards.† Of late years, however, several very handsome buildings have been erected, and on excellent principles;‡ yet in one of the most recently opened, a very large portion has been appropriated for the residence of the chief medical officer;§ an arrangement respecting which much difference of opinion may arise, whether the chief medical attendant, or indeed any officer with a family and servants, ought to be permitted to reside within the walls of the hospital.

To most of these charities, from a few roods to two or more acres of land are attached, not occupied however according to any general regulations, part being usually cultivated as a kitchen garden, and the remainder given up to the resident medical officer; very little is left for the use of the convalescent patients. The chief medical officers must be licentiates of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland; generally there is only one, who may undertake in addition the duties of the apothecary, and reside within the walls. A more recent and improved plan is to have several non-resident surgeons and one resident unmarried house surgeon and apothecary.

The salary fixed by the Act for the chief medical officer is 100*l.* Irish currency, but he almost invariably holds some other appointment at about the same salary; || viz. medical attendant to the gaol or lunatic asylum, perhaps to both. At those hospitals to which there are several medical officers of equal rank attached, the salary is equally divided among them.

The election of all the officers is vested in the corporation; the county grand jury have no voice.

At all the hospitals we inspected, the registry department appeared to be well and accurately kept, and to afford correct data from which the average expense per annum of one bed might be calculated.

Any

Any member of the corporation may give a ticket of admission to any poor sick person in the county; accidents, provided they occur in the county, are admitted immediately on application without a ticket.

Under the present system, many cases of a very chronic nature are admitted, and the hospital thus rendered little better than a poor-house, beds being for a length of time occupied by individuals who would do equally well in a poor-house or at home, whilst a succession of persons suffering from acute diseases, and to whose cases immediate attention is of the utmost importance, are excluded from want of accommodation.*

It is the custom at almost all infirmaries to give advice and medicine to extern patients, but not to pay domiciliary visits.

We always observed that an ample supply was provided of good food, and of such articles as are usually denominated extras.

The regulations and arrangements for serving out the daily ordinary diets are in many instances defective;† but to these the strictest attention ought always to be paid, otherwise the public can never feel sure that the institution is economically and justly conducted.

Most of the county hospitals which we visited are admirably calculated for affording good surgical and medical instruction; this is but rarely given; we cannot help, however, particularizing one instance. A system has been established at Maryborough, which appears admirably calculated to produce the desired effects.

In most counties are found one or two gentlemen (belonging to the infirmary corporation) who devote great attention to the affairs of the charity.

The treasurer is responsible, and gives an annual account of the sums received by him; but we did not always find in operation that system of management which is the most likely to ensure the expenditure of the funds to the greatest possible advantage. It is one (and a comparatively easy) thing to guard against embezzlement, another (and a much more difficult) thing to have the funds laid out so as to produce the greatest amount of good. A great deal towards effecting this latter object might be done by introducing into the management of civil hospitals, one general system with graduated responsibility and regular inspection, such as exists, and has been found so advantageous, in the army hospital department.

CHAP. II.—Dispensaries.

SIR D. Barry and Dr. Corrie, after a careful inspection of nearly 100 dispensaries, distinct Reports on each of which are already before the Board, beg to submit the following general observations.

These remarks will be best introduced by a very brief notice of the Acts of Parliament relative to these charities. Dispensaries are first mentioned in an Act of the 45th of George the Third, intituled, "An Act for establishing Public Infirmaries in Ireland;" and it is therein enacted that it shall be lawful for the grand jury to grant a sum of money "for establishing a dispensary" ‡ equal to a subscribed sum, the whole to be expended in affording medical relief to the sick poor, and to be placed under the control of the infirmary corporation, together with subscribers of not less than one guinea.

2d. By an Act 58 George the Third, c. 47, the entire management is vested in the said guinea subscribers alone, not conjointly with the infirmary corporation; and the sum or sums received are to be applied under their direction, or such committee of them, not fewer in number than five, as they shall appoint for that purpose. The presentment must be paid to the dispensary treasurer, who must account to the grand jury half-yearly for the whole sum expended.

3d. Dispensaries are again mentioned in an Act 3d of George the Fourth, which, in consequence of a doubt that had previously existed, enacts that it shall be lawful for all grand juries, "term" as well as "assize," to grant a presentment. In no other Act do we find mention made of these charities.

1st. The Acts, therefore, only legalize the presentment; there is no clause which compels the grand jury to present any sum, and though the sum presented is generally equal to the sum subscribed, there are many cases in which it is less.

2d. The entire direction is vested in the subscribers of not less than one guinea, who may pass bye-laws, &c., for the regulation of the dispensary; but they are not called upon to frame any; and where bye-laws are passed, however judicious, there is no person whose duty it is to see that they are properly attended to.

3d. The grand jury cannot directly interfere in the management of a dispensary; but by diminishing or refusing a presentment, it exercises an indirect control, and in some counties enforces a compliance with a few general regulations.

It is, however, most important to recollect that though the diminishing or withdrawing of the funds may inconvenience the parties really to blame, it is the sick poor, who have been, it is supposed, already wrongfully used, who must necessarily be the severest sufferers.

1. Our inquiries on these particulars could not often be answered with any exactness; frequently neither the medical officer nor the governors present could give us any accurate information thereon: the greatest diversity, however, in both respects exists; and examples are reported of districts containing 20,000 inhabitants, others only 9,000 or 10,000; § and a population population varying between these extremes is found dispersed over a district, in some instances, more than 15 miles in diameter, in other instances not more than eight or ten.

The larger districts have not been divided, it having been found impossible to procure any augmentation of the funds, and they being barely sufficient to support one establishment.

Some gentlemen whom we had the honour of meeting, and who had paid some attention to the subject, thought that with a rural population such as, on an average, Ireland possesses, a dispensary district should not have a diameter of more than six or eight miles; others thought that one with a diameter of ten miles was not too large to place under the care of one medical officer;* the engagement being, as now, that he should, when called upon, visit any part of his district at any hour of the day or night.

We do not find the number of dispensaries in a county to be proportionate to the size of the county, nor is the situation determined by that of the population. These two important circumstances depend upon the feelings and wishes of the subscribers. We are not aware, however, of any county in which dispensaries are too numerous,† neither did we meet with any instance of a dispensary not having an adequate population depending upon it; but examples of the contrary are too easily found.

There are many extensive districts, some of them containing considerable towns, in which there is no public medical charity of any description.‡

In some districts good and substantial buildings, more or less conveniently contrived, have been erected expressly for dispensary purposes, which contain rooms for the medical attendant, a good dispensary and a waiting room for the patients.§ Sometimes, however, a miserable cabin is deemed good enough,|| though scarcely weather proof, certainly not fit to keep medical preparations in, and without a waiting room, or even a sheltered spot for the poor sick patient to sit down in, although he must in many instances have come on foot seven, eight or nine miles, and may be heated and tired; having a similar journey still to be performed before he reaches home. It may well be questioned how far, under such circumstances, a dispensary may not be productive of injury, rather than benefit to the sick poor.

The qualifications requisite to entitle a person to be elected a medical attendant to a dispensary are not defined by law: the Acts for establishing these charities contain no clauses relative to this important point; consequently persons who have no diploma whatever, and who are, at best, but students, are found in charge of dispensaries, and have confided to them a large number of poor, who are unable to apply for advice to any other medical person. We are happy to be able to state that such cases are rare. In general the medical officers are Edinburgh physicians, members of the London College of Surgeons, &c.; and possess likewise a midwifery certificate from Dublin. Some few are licentiates of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

It might be considered essential that the medical officer should reside in his district, but this is not imperative, and examples of the contrary are too numerous. We do not so much mean to notice those where the salary is low, and the district secluded and small; but those in which the medical officer is well paid, has a large district, and yet lives in a town several miles distant,¶ where he keeps his dispensary drugs often placed promiscuously with his own, sees what poor he likes, and pursues his private practice, always professing to be ready, at any moment, to visit a poor sick patient in any part of a district, the nearest point of which is sometimes five or six miles off, and the most distant ten, fifteen or twenty; thus undertaking to go twenty, thirty or forty miles to make one visit. It is evident that this will be but seldom done. In some extreme cases, a poorly paid unqualified assistant resides on the spot.

It is very seldom, however, that there are assistants, although it appears to us that a dispensary can scarcely be so conducted as fairly to keep its register, and other documents to prove its utility and necessity, in the way most grand juries require, without one assistant; at least, if the principal medical officer is to have any time for private practice, which is necessary to eke out, in most instances, a very limited income. Besides, there should be always some one at the station to dispense the medicine, and to render instant assistance in case of accident, during the unavoidable absence of the chief medical officer.

At all rural dispensaries there is only one medical officer, and such is likewise the case in some towns; but in others they are numerous, having certain parts of the town allotted to each, or the arrangement is, that every medical man shall see at his own residence what pauper patients he chooses, and have his prescriptions made up at the dispensary, where a paid apothecary is stationed expressly for that purpose.

The payment of the medical officers is derived from the general fund raised, as explained under the head of Accounts, and varies not only in amount, but also in other respects equally important for the interests of the charity. It frequently is, as it ought to be, fixed and certain; but it may be made to depend on the state of the funds, and to consist of the amount of whatever balance may remain, after all other expenses shall have been paid;†† a most objectionable plan, in our opinion, and leading directly to great mischief;‡‡ or it may be partly fixed, and partly dependent on the number of domiciliary visits paid: a good plan in itself, but one which requires a complicated arrangement of tickets, to be carefully filed and counted by a vigilant committee, at fixed periods; an advantage rarely to be calculated upon. Indeed, without regular superintendence, no plan can succeed; and the want want of it is the chief source of many of the errors it has been our painful duty to record. Another, and certainly a very simple mode, is to pay the whole sum raised to an apothecary, and bargain that he shall provide medicine and attendance to all the sick poor of the district; a plan similar to that adopted by many parishes in England, but against which a strong, and we think a very reasonable feeling generally prevails.

In large towns, where the medical men are numerous, and the prospects of private practice good, gentlemen are found undertaking the dispensary duties without any salary; but a decided division of opinion exists amongst those best able to judge, whether this or is not a desirable plan, or ultimately tending to the general good.

The election of the medical officers rests entirely with the subscribers of not less than one guinea. The grand jury have nothing to do with it. In large towns, where the subscribers and the medical men are both numerous, there is competition; diplomas and testimonials are required, and pains are taken to give great publicity to the election; but in rural districts, where the charity mainly depends on one family, the appointment is of course virtually in the gift of that family, and as far as regards the law, any person may hold it.

The room in which the medicines are kept, is generally the sole apartment belonging to the dispensary: in some cases sufficiently large, well-aired and commodious; but too frequently presenting the most slovenly appearance. Medicines were found spoiling in damp paper, or evaporating from unstopped bottles. Drugs of a powerful kind were seen in bottles not labelled, or, what is worse, with a wrong label. In more than one instance, no measure, weight or scale could be found on the premises.*

In most places, dispensary medicines are kept distinct from the medical officer's private stock. Sometimes the dampness of the dispensary shop is urged as a reason for removing some drugs to the private house, or the plan may be to keep the medicine, private and public, in the same shop.† In one instance, neither the dispensary drugs, nor the bottles destined to contain them, could be pointed out as distinct from the private stock.‡ In another, a large quantity of Glauber salts, and one or two other cheap medicines, were all that could be shown to justify a charge of 60*l.* per annum. In most places, a good supply of medicine, from a well-known druggist, was seen at the time of our visit; but this by no means proves that the poor are fairly supplied with the more delicate varieties; for prescriptions are rarely entered, invoices frequently not forthcoming, private apothecary's shops kept, and no sufficient and effectual control exercised over an individual wishing to make an improper use of his appointment.

At dispensaries medicine is always a very considerable item in the accounts, and it has been our anxious wish to ascertain how much a patient ought to cost in medicine, by taking the average resulting from the frequent calculation of what he actually does cost; but we have not been able to arrive at any very satisfactory conclusion. In a very few instances only could the requisite data be obtained; viz. the number attended, and the whole cost of medicine. The register, as explained under that head, is almost always defective, and the exact cost of medicine rendered difficult to be made out by the habit, which is too general, of having bills with neighbouring shopkeepers§ for such items as paper, string, whiskey, lard, turf, calico, &c.

In some instances, however, we did obtain the requisite data with accuracy, and found that from 4*d.* to 6*d.* per head per annum only had been expended for this important article, and appeared to be sufficient.

Instruments for the more important surgical operations are seldom met with at dispensaries, and still less frequently are the property of the charity. A stomach pump is however frequently provided from the public funds. All the surgeons have belonging to themselves the instruments necessary for the minor operations.

As leeches are expensive, it is only in a very few cases that they are employed. This is the more to be regretted, as the other modes of abstracting blood, viz. cupping and venæsection, cannot be much resorted to, where there is only one medical officer, the patients numerous, and the distance to their homes considerable; cupping occupies much time, and the immediate effect of venæsection is great debility.

We are most happy to be able to give a decidedly favourable report of the efficacy of vaccination in that part of Ireland we visited. There is an almost universally favourable opinion entertained of it by the Medical Profession; and though it cannot be denied that some persons have been affected with small-pox after vaccination, the number almost vanishes when compared with that of those who are not so visited. Of those secondary cases, very few indeed are severe, scarcely any fatal; so few, that when they do occur, they form the subject of conversation and remark through the whole neighbourhood. In the North-east of the island the confidence of the public in vaccination is almost universal. It is to be lamented that no general system has been adopted at dispensaries to have vaccination regularly performed; at most places it is performed at any time, and no register kept; in some places pains are taken to have the patient presented a second time, after an interval of about a week, in order that the medical officer may see whether the constitution has been properly affected, and the characteristic vesicle produced, and that he may procure a fresh supply of matter. This second visit, however, is too seldom paid. One objection to it on the part of the patient is no doubt the trouble; another is, the notion which exists, to some extent, that taking matter from the vesicle impairs the security of the patient. The plan sometimes adopted is to require that 1*s.* should be deposited sited, at the first, to be returned at the second visit; but too many are ill able to provide even such a sum, and this must operate very much against the introduction of vaccination into a neighbourhood where a strong prejudice exists against it, as is still the case in some districts of the West of Ireland.

In no instance was it an established rule that there should be always a stock of vaccine matter at the dispensary for the supply of the neighbourhood; but we were frequently told that there was matter at most times to be had, and that it would not be refused to any medical man who applied.

The register of a dispensary is, for various reasons, a most important document; by it some estimate may be formed as to the good done by, and consequently the necessity for such a charity; by it the consumption of medicine is accounted for; by it the state of the public health in a district may be ascertained; but then the register must be fairly and accurately kept; and that this may be done is proved by its actually having been done in several instances;* but for the most part no reliance can be placed on the register exhibited; the number registered is in some places so great as to induce an inquiry into the proofs of attendance, viz. whether tickets, signed by a governor, are required, and filed, and the register thus checked. On the other hand, at some stations only a few are registered, those perhaps who bring tickets; the greater number being prescribed for without a ticket, and no entry made. In some cases one person is entered several times for the same illness without any possibility of ascertaining how often this has happened; in others he is entered once only for one illness, however numerous his attendance. Sometimes a register without date is produced. In short, the registry department, taken generally, is so defective as not to afford safe data for any average conclusions. As a rule, no register ought to be confided in which is not checked by properly signed tickets, which each patient ought to be able to procure without difficulty; in urgent cases the ticket might be obtained and filed after the patient had been seen, and thus no impediment need be thrown in the way of immediate attendance when necessary. In most registers the name, age, residence, disease of patient, and name of recommender, are required to be entered, and may thus be ascertained; but the result of the case (for which there is almost always a column in the dispensary book) cannot be stated with accuracy, unless all who cease to attend or report themselves are to be considered as "cured." In no case, indeed, did we find this column satisfactorily filled up. In a very few instances only were there prescriptions written, and this was done only where there was an assistant; indeed, as we remarked above, it is scarcely possible for one person to keep a full register, and enter the prescriptions; the time which would be required for such entry being so great that the patients might suffer material injury from the delay, thus greatly diminishing both the amount and value of any aid the dispensary could be expected to afford.

What class of persons are relieved, and how do they become entitled to such relief.

The contract understood to exist between the medical officer and the subscribers is, in by far the greater number of cases, that all sick poor who apply at the dispensary shall have advice and medicine, and that all sick poor resident in the district shall, if the illness require it, have the domiciliary attendance of the medical officer. At the foundation of the charity, perhaps tickets signed by a subscriber were used, but as they were never filed to check the register, or inquired after by the subscribers, the medical officer neglected them, attended patients without them, and thus after a few years they are scarcely thought about by any of the parties interested. This is practically the state of things at most dispensaries at present.

In those instances, where the districts are large and populous, or in which the medical officer does not reside, it is difficult to understand how this usual compact can be carried into extensive and effective execution.

There are other arrangements however,—1st, † The medical officer sometimes is not bound to visit beyond a fixed and moderate distance from the station, far within the limits of the district; or 2d, If he is called upon to go further he is paid extra. 3d, In some places the rule is, that only the poor resident on the estates of the subscribers shall have the advantages of the charity, in order that those who are proprietors in the district, and yet refuse to subscribe, may, if possible, be compelled to do so; but though the resident clergy and gentry may, in committee, approve of such a bye-law, they do not and cannot practically act up to it. No one refuses a really sick poor neighbour a dispensary ticket, because the superior and natural protector is absent or refuses to subscribe. Moreover, it is the opinion of some, that as part of the funds are provided by the county at large, every sick pauper has a right to the benefits of the charity. 4th, In many districts the rule is that all the tenantry on the estates of the subscribers shall have a right to the gratuitous assistance of the medical attendant. ‡ 5th, Another plan is to have very small subscriptions, the stipulation being that these subscribers and their families shall in return, be themselves entitled to the full benefits of the charity; a practice completely at variance with the spirit and expense of a charitable institution.

Midwifery.

With respect to midwifery cases, the custom of the poor generally is to depend upon some country-woman who is in the habit of acting as a midwife, and there are few of these who have had any instruction; in cases of difficulty the dispensary attendant is often applied to, and is bound either by rule or custom to attend; but nearly all agree that great mischief often arises from the want of instruction in the person first employed.

Sect. 12.
Management.

The management of dispensaries is vested by the Act of Parliament in the subscribers of not less than one guinea; and in towns where these are numerous, there are generally persons persons found who look carefully to the affairs of the charity: judicious bye-laws are resolved upon, and carried into effect. But in the rural districts the case is far otherwise. If the charity depend on some great proprietor, it is usually part of his agent's duty to superintend it; but it too frequently happens that every thing is left to the medical officer, who thus has public funds placed entirely under his own control. So fully aware are grand juries of this want of superintendence, and of the absence of documents in proof of the good effected by the dispensaries, that they have from time to time passed resolutions relative to those charities, with which, as they can diminish or refuse a presentment, they require the medical officers to comply; but their best intentions have as yet been ineffectual.

* Banbridge Dispensary, County Down. † Warrenpoint, County Down. ‡ Forkhill, County Armagh; Outerarde, County Galway.

1. They (the grand juries) require a register to be kept, and a summary of it laid before them: the latter document is, however, easily made.

2. They require the register itself to be sent in: but a register, unless inspected from time to time, and authenticated by tickets or otherwise, is of no value.

3. They require a list of the names of the subscribers: such may be produced, and yet the money be never bonâ fide collected.

4. They therefore require that money should be placed in the Bank and remain there some time; but even this regulation is no protection against a fictitious account of expenditure.

It is true that there is always a treasurer, according to the Act; but, unfortunately, he too frequently allows his name to be used, whilst the accounts are really kept by the medical officer, who may himself contribute, though in other names, a part of the money said to be bonâ fide subscribed, obtain an equal sum from the county, dispose of it as he chooses, and send in his own account, without vouchers, to the grand jury.*

In short, not only is the want of judicious bye-laws for every dispensary severely felt, but likewise some system of superintendence to insure their being properly and constantly observed; for not unfrequently good rules and regulations are found at dispensaries which certainly are not, and perhaps never have been, fairly executed.

The income of a dispensary arises from two sources, voluntary subscription and county presentment; and it is important to remark that the subscription must always be first raised. The grand jury cannot, on hearing that a district is in want of medical advice, declare that it will grant a certain sum, a similar sum being raised by subscription.

The voluntary subscriptions must come first: hence dispensaries are found placed where, comparatively, they are least wanted, i. e. where there are resident gentry; whilst a poor, remote, unfriended district does not share, and is not likely under the present system to share, any of the money which it equally with the rest of the county contributes for the relief of the sick poor.

With regard to the county grant, it can never be more than equal to the sum subscribed, and is in fact generally less; nor is this a matter of surprise when it is recollected how little control the grand jury have over this branch of expenditure, and what imperfect, unsatisfactory documents are produced in proof of its just appropriation.

Lastly, The income, from the circumstance of its depending on voluntary contributions, is necessarily precarious; and a division of opinion (about the selection of the medical officer for example) will often cause the withdrawal of subscriptions, and thus destroy, or at least impair, the usefulness of the charity, and the sick poor are the victims.

No accounts need be, and, where properly attended to, none are, more simple than those of a dispensary. The medical attendant's salary, the druggist's bill, the rent of the premises, are all the necessary items of importance; and with a very few sundries of trifling amount, such as repairs, stationery, postage, stamps, constitute the whole bill. They are rendered complicated, however, in various ways.

1st. Drugs are ordered and the bills are paid at uncertain periods of the year, payments perhaps being sometimes made on account; so that it is impossible at once to ascertain what invoices, and how many, there ought to be; and frequently none are forthcoming.

2d. The medical officer will sometimes have running accounts with several neighbouring shopkeepers for honey, turf, whiskey, lard, calico, &c., for the receipt of which at the dispensary there are no vouchers†: indeed, it is in very few cases that any account or proof whatever can be given of the due appropriation of the articles charged against the charity.

3d. As the medical officer generally has a private apothecary's shop near at hand, and employs the same wholesale druggist as the charity, and orders for both establishments, it is not difficult to understand how errors, to use no harsher term, may not unfrequently arise.

There can scarcely be said to be any medical or surgical education at dispensaries; they afford, however, a good opportunity for a pupil to learn how to take and register cases, and to acquire the art of compounding and dispensing medicines. Some of the more important stations present a fair field for acquiring practical medical skill, and in them this advantage is not wholly overlooked.

No article of food, nothing analogous to the diet at infirmaries, is ever supplied from a dispensary; we have not met with any example of a plan for supplying nourishing food when such appeared more likely to effect a speedy cure than any article usually denominated medicine. Wine is, in some very few instances, and in very small quantities, provided at dispensaries. It is not unusual, however, for the surgeon to have the privilege of giving a note to a patient, which, on being presented at the landlord's residence, insures the bearer that of which he is in want. In one solitary instance, a little barley and rice were seen at a dispensary.

CHAP. III.—Fever Hospitals.

Fever Hospitals are established by Acts of Parliament, the first of which was passed in the 58th Geo. III., since which period six other Acts, in amendment, have been passed. By these Acts, "one body corporate and politic is created in every county, county of town and county of city in Ireland," which consists of the archbishop or bishop, the representatives in Parliament, and all the justices of the peace in the county; and in every county of a city or county of a town such corporation shall consist of the chief magistrate, sheriffs, recorder, representatives in Parliament (if any), and of the justices of the peace. This corporation, entitled "The President and Assistants of the Fever Hospitals," may elect such other persons resident in the county, city or town, as they shall think fit; those who contribute a sum not less than 20*l.* or subscribe 1*l.* 1*s.* per annum, are likewise to be members of the said corporation.

This body thus appointed, or any five of them, are to appoint all the officers, enact the bye-laws, and make all the necessary arrangements; in short, in it the management is vested.

For building, repairing or enlarging one fever hospital in any county, county of a city, or county of a town, it shall and may be lawful to and for the grand jury to present any sum or sums of money to be levied within the period of six years, by half-yearly or yearly instalments, the Lord Lieutenant to advance the money.

It is further enacted, for the support of fever hospitals, that it shall and may be lawful for the grand jury to grant such a sum of money, not exceeding 250*l.* at each assize, as shall appear to the grand jury and to the judge to be required.

Having laid before the Board reports on each of the fever hospitals inspected by us, we beg to add the following short general observations:—

In the first place, the capabilities of these charities, though they vary exceedingly, are not in any calculated proportion to the population of the respective districts, but have probably depended entirely upon financial considerations.

The situation has been, however, determined by the want of such an institution, and it is not necessarily, though generally, confined to the county or assize town.

This species of charity, though it may be established, and is partly supported by a county presentment, cannot be of much use to that part of the population of the county which is situated more than 10 or 12 miles from it.

Some of the erections for fever hospitals are extremely good, and space and ventilation are properly and carefully attended to.

This is the case at Downpatrick; indeed the whole arrangements at the fever hospital there are well deserving of imitation.

The only hospital at Belfast is called the fever hospital, but it is in fact a general hospital, in which are certain fever wards, and to be received into which, fever cases have the preference. It appears that the large and rapidly increasing population of Belfast required a general infirmary, and as there can be only one county general hospital, and that one was at Lisburn, the only assistance the inhabitants of Belfast could receive from the county was in aid of a fever hospital, and for such an establishment a presentment is obtained; to the sum thus procured, subscriptions, &c. are added, and a general infirmary thus supported. It is most important to remark that though there are always fever cases in the fever wards, and though the staircase is common to all the wards, fever has never been communicated to the general wards. It is indeed an admitted fact, that where space is allowed and ventilation is properly attended to, there is no danger in placing fever patients in the same wards with other patients of all descriptions. In other wards no distinction need be made relative to the supposed communicable or incommunicable nature of that disease, and hence there is no necessity for fever hospitals as distinct establishments. When there is an epidemic no building can be of adequate size, and if it were, it would be highly dangerous to all parties, both patients and attendants, to fill it with patients all suffering from the same malady. When there is no epidemic, one hospital may safely receive almost every variety of disease. At Londonderry the fever hospital consists of two wards, under the same roof and same management as the general hospital, but having a separate staircase. There were no fever patients in the fever wards at the time of our visit, and consequently they were of no use.

This is another reason why fever hospitals, as separate establishments, perhaps need not exist. These wards would be always used in a general hospital.

At Armagh, the Primate has erected, and maintains at his own private expense, an excellent fever hospital, into which all fever cases occurring in the town are received. The being affected with fever is the only, but the full and sufficient title to admission. The greatest benefits have resulted from it. Fever has not spread in Armagh since the establishment of this hospital.

At Cavan there is a fever hospital capable of receiving 30 patients, but not half the number of beds were occupied at the time of our visit. There can be no doubt that it and the general hospital might be safely united. The medical charities at Ballinasloe exemplify the want of some more efficient system of superintendence. The fever hospital there is scarcely more than a name. Some addition to the funds which have been expended on it, and on the dispensary, would support a general hospital for that town.

In the county of the town and town of Galway, an hospital exclusively for fever is the only charity for intern patients; and as the crowded state of its extremely poor population constantly presents fever cases, it always contains a great many patients. The income, however, is very limited, and nothing but the great exertions of one gentleman could have effected what has been and is being done. The wants of the town require a general hospital.

The

The corporate body, in whom, by law, the management of these charities is vested, meets at intervals to transact the necessary business; but as there is a great unwillingness on the part of non-professional men to inspect fever hospitals, all the internal system of management is left to the medical men; and the excellent state in which we found many of these charities is due to these gentlemen.

There does not, however, as yet exist any system of management common to all these institutions, which, whilst it might ensure, as far as may be, the best possible expenditure of funds, would afford, at the same time, a means of fairly comparing together these charities, situated in different parts of the kingdom, and having probably local peculiarities.

CHAP. IV.—District Lunatic Asylums.

THESE general observations are drawn up after a careful inspection of seven asylums, viz. Belfast, Londonderry, Armagh, Ballinasloe, Limerick, Maryborough and Carlow, and with the greatest pleasure we feel it a duty to report, that, in our opinion, these establishments, are in the more essential respects, well and ably conducted; they reflect great credit on all connected with them, and on the country whose generosity supplies the means of erecting and supporting them. In venturing, therefore, on the following remarks, we are actuated solely by an anxious desire to improve, if possible, these admirable institutions.

In adopting the plan observed in the previous Reports, the Acts of Parliament relative to these asylums are first noticed; they are four in number, viz. 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 33, 6 Geo. IV. c. 54, 7 Geo. IV. c. 14, and 1 Will. IV. c. 13. By them the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council are empowered to cause to be erected a number of Lunatic Asylums, sufficient for all the lunatic poor of Ireland; no one to contain less than 50 or more than 150 lunatic poor, with the express exception of the Richmond, for which there is a special Act to enable it to receive as many as it can accommodate.

The Lord Lieutenant likewise appoints two classes of directors; 1st, directors resident in Dublin, in number not exceeding eight, for general control, and upon their suggestions and recommendations are framed rules and regulations; and, 2dly, directors or governors resident in the district of their respective asylums. Some of these latter reside so far from the asylum that there is an instance in which it was difficult to form a board, even at the very opening of an asylum.

There is no mention made relative to qualification or otherwise of the persons under whose care the lunatic patients are to be placed. Why no asylum should contain more than 150 lunatics, does not appear; that there should be some limit no one can doubt; but 300 or 400 may be advantageously placed in one building; in fact this restriction is not attended to. The Belfast and Limerick Asylums contain already more than 150 each, and are being enlarged. We were frequently informed that these asylums were intended for curable cases only; the Acts however expressly state that all are to be admitted; considerable discretion is, however, vested in the Lord Lieutenant by section 5, 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 33.

These asylums are all erected on much the same radiated plan, and are handsome stone buildings, only two stories in height. This is an arrangement very generally approved of; the cells, wards and corridors are airy and spacious, and the accommodation for the intended number of patients ample; but we could not but be surprised to observe alterations being made to gain additional accommodation in buildings so new as scarcely to be finished. This has arisen perhaps from a want of accurate returns of the number of insane in the district, or perhaps from the admission of a class of patients not originally contemplated, viz. the incurables. How to dispose of the incurables has been a question of serious consideration in France, and M. Ferrus, M. D., of Paris, physician to the lunatic asylum at the Bicêtre, in an elaborate report to the French Academy of Medicine on the lunatic asylums of that country, has recommended the addition to the present buildings of distinct wards for incurables. This plan is being adopted at Belfast; it may not however be undesirable, in at least one instance, to erect a distinct asylum for incurables only, in a situation where land can be obtained on moderate terms, and the patients be enabled mainly to support themselves, by the cultivation of a farm. A building might be so contrived as easily to admit of enlargement, in case the plan proved advantageous.

Those asylums have for the most part been judiciously placed near some considerable town, on dry elevated land; at Ballinasloe, however, such is not the case; the asylum there is in a low flat meadow, scarcely affording any descent for drainage.

The patients are all of one rank,* and are all supported at the public expense. They are classed according to the nature of their disease, the noisy with the noisy, the clean with the clean, &c. &c. This classification might in some instances be more completely and carefully attended to, and the number in each class diminished; 15 or 20 are as many as ought to be placed in any one class. At meal times we have observed the patients uncomfortably crowded together, without any necessity, from want of pace.

Employment is provided for many of the patients; but it appeared to us that more might be done in this respect, and a greater variety of in-door occupations introduced; the conversion too of a few acres of land into nursery ground, or the cultivation of successive crops, would afford more and pleasanter work than the mere cultivation of potatoes and wheat, and might be equally profitable. Occupation must be considered one of the chief means of cure in cases of insanity, and therefore demands the best attention.

The

* In some county lunatic asylums in England several ranks of patients are admitted, and the expense of the establishment partly defrayed by the payments of the upper ranks. For the details of such a plan, see "Report on the Staffordshire County Lunatic Asylum," in supplement.

The treatment of the patients appeared to us mild, kind and judicious; coercion and personal restraint as little resorted to as possible.

Though these asylums are for the pauper poor, yet certain guarantees and securities are required, such as it may not always be in the power of this class of patients to procure. The most pressing want, however, is increased accommodation; a long list of applicants is to be seen at many asylums; and as the more recent the case the greater the chance of cure; it is highly desirable that the incurables be removed, (if especially these buildings were not intended for them), and then recent cases would be more frequently and immediately admitted. This subject we think most pressingly demands attention.

The name, age, residence, &c. of each patient is carefully registered, but to make this department complete, a full medical history of each case ought to be drawn up, with a statement of the treatment and result; such a document is kept, we believe, in every county asylum in England, under the joint care and responsibility of the physician and chief resident officer, who in them must be a medical man; and will afford data from which new and improved modes of practice may be safely deduced, and annual returns of the patients should be published at the end of the year, tabularly arranged, thus:—

An annual statement of the proportion the relieved, cured, and dead, bear to the whole number treated should accompany the statement of the actual numbers.

The physician is the sole medical officer attached to these asylums. He does not reside on the premises, but usually in the adjoining town; he attends at intervals; his duties and authority are not properly defined; at least a misunderstanding in this respect exists in some instances.

Manager.

The principal resident officer, on whom the management of the patients chiefly depends, is styled the manager, and is not a medical man. With every disposition to concede all the credit that is due to the gentlemen who at present occupy this, the most responsible and important,

GENERAL REPORT upon the existing System of PUBLIC MEDICAL RELIEF in Ireland, by CUSACK RONEY, Esq., Medical Assistant Commissioner.

Cusack Roney, Esq.

HAVING very maturely considered what would be the most useful mode of conveying to the Board my sentiments on the medical institutions of this country, I have adopted the plan of following the series of Queries which were printed for the purposes of the medical investigations in which I have been engaged, and of attaching to each of them a distinct and specific opinion. For the justification of each opinion, all founded upon evidence taken by me, I can refer to some individual case in the returns which I have sent in.

important post connected with these asylums, we are of opinion that the chief care and management of the patients ought not to be entrusted to persons who have not received a regular and full medical education. The having evinced talents, attention and good conduct as keepers, is no doubt a very important recommendation, but nothing definite in this respect seems at present imperative; indeed, we are not aware what knowledge or experience is deemed necessary to qualify a person for the office of manager.

That medical men of character and of sufficient standing in their profession, willing to devote themselves to the office in question, are to be found, cannot be doubted. In England the chief resident officer must be a member of the London College of Surgeons. The treatment of the patients might otherwise be merely imitative and empirical, and not calculated to improve our knowledge of the best treatment of this lamentable disease.

No medical instruction, with the marked and excellent exception at Maryborough, is attempted at these institutions, although they afford admirable opportunities for the study of the treatment of the insane. The attendance of pupils, under proper rules and regulations, could be allowed without detriment to any party, and it appears to us that no medical officer (and none but medical men ought to be appointed) should be placed at the head of a district lunatic asylum, who cannot produce testimonials of a diligent attendance at a large lunatic asylum for a definite length of time. An address by Dr. Conolly to the Provincial Medical and Surgical Association, which met at Birmingham in 1834, has been lately published, and we cannot refrain from making the following quotation, as it is in entire accordance with our observation:—"In the chemical study of mental disorders no advance can be reported; it is yet entirely overlooked in English medical education. Hospitals for lunatics are closed for the students, and the knowledge of mental affections makes little or no progress. As a consequence of this, not a year passes without some notorious case of insanity being brought before the public in a manner reflecting little credit on the conflicting medical authorities, whilst instances of injudicious or improper confinement of patients are not unfrequent. To the same negligence of the whole subject it must be attributed that we have so few aids to a knowledge of the condition of the brain in the various forms of insanity, that the pathology of insanity is so uncertain and incomplete, and the treatment so generally empirical. Our larger lunatic institutions have contributed little or nothing to our knowledge. When the public establishments are, as under proper regulations they might be, schools of instruction, we shall learn how much our practice in these distressing disorders may be improved."

The income is derived from the counties of the district, through an order from the Lord-Lieutenant; the produce of the land attached likewise goes towards the support of the patients, but as yet no estimation of its value appears in the accounts.

Every item of expenditure seems to be regularly entered; there should, however, be annually made up and published a statement of the expense per head per annum, calculated from the average number of patients in the asylum during the preceding year, apportioned under the heads of salary, clothing, food, by means of which the expenses of various asylums may be easily compared and checked; or to make this department as available as possible for other institutions, a table of expenditure, as underneath, might be made out, in a form similar to the one subjoined.

The population and extent of country to which a dispensary can be considered as capable of affording adequate relief, must of necessity vary according as its sphere includes a rural or a town district. Amidst the dense population of a town or city, a single medical man can, with advantage, extend his attendance to a much larger number of persons than in the country, where, from a general review of the evidence which I have been able to procure, I should say, that if a dispensary were placed in the centre of its district, the utmost distance to which its attendant should be required to go, ought not, in any case, to exceed five miles. There are many cases, as of strangulated hernia, retention of urine, inflammation of the bowels, &c. which, though of comparatively rare occurrence, are yet of such a nature as to require unremitting attention and frequent visits during the day. If the persons labouring under them be at a greater distance from the dispensary than that indicated indicated above, it becomes absolutely impossible that they can receive that care from the surgeon which cannot be dispensed with. In the counties which I have visited, the medical institutions are too few, except in particular places, where their number have been increased for the personal purposes of a medical attendant, or the convenience of some country gentleman, who has obtained their formation for the aid of his own immediate tenantry. In few cases, however, has their situation been selected in conformity with the rule contained in the above observations, and I know of no other guide by which to regulate their location. It is to be observed of the accommodation or assistance at present afforded by dispensaries, none who apply for a participation in it are ever refused, if properly recommended, or rather if recommended according to the existing Acts of Parliament; but from the nature of most of these establishments, and above all from the remoteness of many of the places to which the attendant is liable to be summoned, that effective aid which, in my view of the case, should always be at hand, is seldom if ever capable of being given. Of the dispensaries visited, a very small proportion possessed internal arrangements for the reception of patients. This want is often severely felt when sudden accidents or acute and serious diseases occur. The county hospital or infirmary (generally the only place where internal accommodation is to be obtained) is often twenty, thirty and even sometimes fifty miles off. The removal of certain urgent cases to such a distance exposes the sufferer to the imminent risk of loss of life; and it has occurred more than once that the patient has expired on the journey. This state of things can, in my opinion, be only remedied by attaching to each dispensary a small "local infirmary," capable of containing from six to twelve beds, according to circumstances. Without some arrangement of this kind, which would be eminently calculated to arrest, at their commencement, the progress of infectious disorders, I must express a decided conviction, grounded on experience, that no permanent and real succour can be extended to the sick poor.

Dispensaries, together with the small hospital which it has been recommended in every instance to unite to them, should be substantially built of brick and stone, and they should have attached a comfortable and respectable house for the medical attendant, in which he should, under pain of dismissal, be bound constantly and permanently to reside. It would be necessary, as a matter of course, that a waiting room should be provided in which patients might remain until prescribed for. There should be a supply of solid and useful furniture, not only for the department of the institution devoted to public purposes, but also for the use of the physician and the other officers and servants. For this furniture, and for all stores, such as beds, blankets, sheets, &c. which the extent of the establishment might require for the use of the intern patients, those individuals ought to be held responsible, to whose custody they had been entrusted. The close, confined and unwholesome position in which several medical establishments are placed, induce me to point it out as a matter peculiarly worthy of attention, that every hospital should stand detached in the centre of some clear ground, where the contiguity of other houses would neither prevent the free access of circulating air, nor facilitate the diffusion of contagion. I should say, therefore, that at least one acre of ground should ever form an appendage to an establishment destined for the curing of disease, and be peculiarly devoted to its use. In it vegetables might be cultivated for the consumption of the patients. I would approve of no locality, however otherwise eligible, which did not ensure a copious supply of pure water, an article intimately connected with the preservation not only of cleanliness but of health. Of equal, if not of more importance, would be an apparatus for the giving of hot or warm baths. Such a provision is indispensable, as there are many diseases, especially of the skin, in which its application would constitute, if not the sole, certainly the most effectual mode of treatment. I would impress upon the Board, that a dispensary, and every thing belonging to it, should be the bonâ fide property of the governors, whoever they may be. In this manner would be avoided the possibility of any annoyance arising from the caprice, the avarice or the change of the landlord on whose property they might be placed. Thus also would be obviated the frequent jobs which have come to my knowledge during the course of my inspection; medical attendants, who had hired but a single room for the objects of the institution, have contrived to get credit from the management for the rent of the entire house, and have withheld the necessary accommodation from the poor who sought relief. On no pretext whatsoever, in my opinion, ought the dispensary, its offices and the ground they stand on, be the property of any person or body other than of the governors.

The age of the medical attendant of a dispensary or other such establishment should never be less than 21, and in the present advanced state of medical education, it would not be unreasonable to require that every candidate should produce a degree or diploma from some college or university in Great Britain or Ireland, especially one qualifying him to practise surgery and midwifery. In addition, his testimonials should prove that he has given due attendance for a sufficient length of time at the hospitals where the latter branches of his profession are taught. It requires much consideration to determine in whom the power of making appointments to medical charities should reside. Under the present regulations of those establishments, many persons have been appointed who are totally unqualified to discharge the trust reposed in them, never having taken any medical degree, and never having attended either hospitals or lectures at which they could acquire any acquaintance with even the slightest duties of their profession. I would, therefore, suggest, as a preliminary step, that the governors of an institution should select two or three individuals, and that then one or more competent persons should be authorized to hold a personal examination of these candidates, and ultimately to appoint whichever of them might appear the best educated and the most fit. But the control of the Board or some equivalent supreme authority ought not to cease with his appointment; it should extend at all times to every department of the manage-management of dispensaries and hospitals in the fullest sense of the word. It should not be permitted that appointments to more than one hospital or dispensary should be united in the same person, and he should be required to give his full and undivided attention to the institution which had been committed to his care. The only exceptions to this restriction would be in cities, where, as the visiting of extern patients forms no part of the office of the hospital surgeon, of whose time a limited portion only is required within the walls of the hospital, a plurality of appointments is often held, with the utmost efficiency, by the same individual. Even in these cases the special permission of the Board should be necessary for an exemption. A medical attendant should be required in all instances to act as surgeon, physician and accoucheur; also as apothecary, except in large hospitals. I would never, under pain of dismissal, allow the duty to be performed by deputy, saving when sickness incapacitated the principal; and in this case the substitute should be regularly and properly qualified for the task he undertakes. I would refer to my Report on the dispensary of Donoughmore, in the county of Cork, as containing a most flagrant instance of the contrary practice. It would not be necessary to prevent altogether the acquisition of private practice; but I would not by any means encourage it. If a medical man were rendered independent by his salary, his exclusive attention might justly be claimed for his public duties, which ought, in truth, to occupy, if not the whole, at least the greater part of his time. I would not, however, be understood as wishing to debar those residing in his immediate neighbourhood of the advantages of his experience and assistance in circumstances of emergency or of serious illness; at the same time, leave of absence, even for a single day, ought to be refused, unless the Board were perfectly satisfied of the justice of the pretext. There should, in short, be but one medical attendant to each institution, and he should be well paid and well worked. Where the duty of any situation, however subordinate, is performed by deputy, the same privilege will ultimately be claimed for the rest. The duties of a large hospital, it is true, cannot be performed without an apothecary; but none ought to be admitted to act as such who had not taken out the qualification of Master at the Apothecaries' Hall in Ireland. It should be in the power of the poor, who conceive that they are aggrieved by the irregularity or want of attention of a physician, to lay their complaints before some controlling authority, whose province it would be to investigate and ascertain the accuracy of their grievances. I may be permitted to observe, that such matters ought to be managed with much discretion, as I well know that a frequent source of dissatisfaction to the poor is, that they do not get that medicine or preparation which they think proper and apply for. Let all complaints be committed to writing and forwarded to the Board, who should have the power of fine, suspension and dismissal. For the relief of sudden accidents, no hospital should ever be without the presence of some student, of at least two years' standing in the profession. He might also dispense medicines, or assist in so doing, where a regular apothecary was not retained. In dispensaries, this provision would not be practicable. As to the administration of medicines, they are or ought to be always given by the nurses in hospitals; but in dispensary practice it must be entrusted to the patients themselves after their return to their homes.

To each dispensary there ought to be but one medical attendant. He should be held strictly responsible for the performance of the entire duty, and, in consequence, he would be entitled to a fair remuneration; I should say that his salary ought not in any case to be under 200*l.* a year. Such compensation would ensure to the country at large a number of well-educated individuals, and we should no longer see important appointments held by the description of persons who are too often to be met with. The source whence the physician's salary is to be drawn, is by no means an indifferent matter; at present his payment depends on the whim of a number of individuals, whose ends are attained, and whose subscriptions are frequently withdrawn as soon as the dispensary has been established, and their friend has been appointed its medical attendant. This and some other abuses or inconveniences can, to the best of my judgment, be only remedied by making the salary a charge upon the county or barony, to be levied in the same manner as other taxes. At the same time every facility and security should be afforded for the endowment of the institution, by the donations of benevolent individuals. I would not permit any committee or body of governors to regulate the amount; the Board above alluded to should alone have the power of dictating it. By an arrangement of the nature which I have taken the liberty of recommending, coupled with a proviso that the physician should consider himself bound to give the necessarily increased attention demanded by the presence of an epidemic, receiving afterwards for such aid adequate compensation from the Board, much money would eventually be saved to the county on occasions of such visitations as the recent cholera, when mere boys, uneducated and even unapprenticed, received in many instances considerable sums for their miscalled services. If all expenses, salaries, &c. were completely brought under the control of the Board, there would be created an effectual check to a system of jobbing which is too common between nominal subscribers and medical attendants, for the purpose of procuring an increase of salary. The authority of the grand jury has been found quite inadequate to the prevention of this practice.

I do not take upon me to decide to whom the power of election should be entrusted, but I do not hesitate to declare that it would be indispensable that all appointments, together with the qualifications of the person appointed, should be submitted to the approval of the Board. In order to ensure a legitimate competition, it would be necessary that notice of all vacancies should be given by advertisement in at least two newspapers. I would direct attention to this point, as in the present state of things persons are almost always appointed by their friends, without any regard to testimonials or to competence. The local governors should not be at liberty to return for selection to the Board the names of any candidates who did not possess the necessary degrees which have been before spoken of. A thorough knowledge of the practice of midwifery should be particularly insisted on; on this latter point the wants of the poor have been hitherto greatly neglected. A due attention to it would entail much and severe duty on a medical attendant, and it would be just that he should be remunerated accordingly. Having already adverted to the age which a medical officer ought to have attained in order to become eligible, it remains for me to add, that I am of opinion that no one should be selected who had passed the age of 45. I am aware that the Army Board limits the age of its candidates much more narrowly, but the justness of its rules does not apply to civilians. I have to add, that, of course, I would not displace a physician merely because he had reached 45 years; but after 20 years' service I think that he should be entitled to the choice of retiring, with an allowance of half salary as a superannuation. This, however, should be subject to the opinion entertained by the Board of his services and good conduct. The Board also should be empowered to grant compensation for any injury suffered, or any disease contracted by the medical officers in the discharge of their duties. I would, on no account, accept the gratuitous services of any man, though such are easily obtained in districts where many physicians are to be found; experience proves that the hope of a deserved reward is the most active stimulus to exertion. A medical man ought not to be retained against the known feelings of the poor; if they be unwilling to apply to him, however ill-founded their motives, his utility ceases in a great measure.

Pharmacy.

On the supply of genuine drugs and well-prepared medicines, depends, in great measure, the utility of a dispensary. A list of the necessary articles would not extend to any great length, but every thing should be in sufficient quantity, and above all be procured from a respectable and recognized druggist; on no pretext from any officer of the establishment; and be paid for quarterly by a draft on the treasurer. I think it so important to the securing of good drugs to an institution, that no officer should be concerned in the supply of them, that if I permitted private practice of any kind, I would most certainly not permit the medical attendant to practise as an apothecary, or even to keep or dispense medicine on his own account. To his care should be entrusted all medicines and pharmaceutical apparatus, and he should be held strictly responsible for their preservation; I would forbid him to entrust them to any servant, or to sell or dispose of the drugs, under pain of dismissal. I would hold him equally responsible for the more indispensable surgical instruments, which it would be always advisable to provide for the use of the establishment, to the purposes of which, as a general rule, they should be altogether confined. There would of course occur urgent cases, where a deviation from this rule might be permitted. The use of leeches, unless resorted to with much discretion, would, in inland towns, entail a very heavy expense; but as there are not a few conditions of the body in which they alone are applicable as a means of extracting blood, I conceive that it will be necessary to permit a certain latitude to the medical attendant, and to rely upon his judgment for the avoiding needless outlay. Notwithstanding the doubts which have recently been thrown on the preventive efficacy of vaccination, its utility still remains so obvious, that it ought to be made imperative on every medical attendant to vaccinate, on two or three appointed days in each week, the children of all poor persons who might apply for the purpose. If, in addition, he were required to keep an accurate register of the dates and results of this practice, he would most materially contribute to the adoption of true views on this subject of universal concern. The use of vaccine matter would, however, be seriously diminished, if each medical attendant be not enjoined under explicit regulations, and under pain of dismissal, to refrain from the insertion of variolus or small-pox virus; a custom which I have found to be far more general than I could possibly have conceived (see Report on French Park Dispensary, County Roscommon). In no point of view have I found the existing dispensary system less conducive to public advantage than with reference to the disease of small-pox. They seem to have exercised no influence in checking the inclination of the people to have recourse to the numerous mendicant inoculators, who diffuse the distemper so extensively; I entertain such decided opinions on this subject, that I think the powers of the Legislature would, as in France and Austria, be most beneficially exerted in imposing severe penalties on all parties, whether medical or not, who should be found guilty of inoculating with small-pox.

The several particulars towards which I have endeavoured to draw the attention of the Commissioners under the general head of Pharmacy, are of a nature that require constant vigilance and attention to attain the object which should be always kept in sight; that is, the administration of perfect medical relief to the poor. If a Board were formed, its members would, of course, be confined by their duties to the metropolis, and at any rate it would be impossible to make themselves acquainted with the minute details on which good management depends. I conceive it would be found necessary to appoint two or three inspectors, whose duties ought to consist in personally inspecting from time to time, and without notice given, all dispensaries and hospitals; they should carefully examine whether the medical attendants and other persons employed had acted in perfect accordance with instructions and regulations, and they should make, in writing, periodical returns of all these things to the Board.

Patients' Registration.

The affairs of a dispensary can not be regular unless a register be kept. This should be done by the medical attendant, and he should enter the date of the admission of each patient, and of his dismissal, also the name of his disease, and the mode in which it may have terminated. A register should likewise contain an enumeration of all capital or important operations undertaken in the institution, and an account of their results. Under an improved system of dispensaries, I should expect that poor lying-in women should always receive every necessary attention, and I would advise that mention should be made in the register of all cases of midwifery which had been attended to. The notice of the competent authority, whatever it may be, should be frequently directed to the accuracy of these registers.

Relief.

A dispensary should extend its assistance to all the inhabitants within its district, unable to pay for advice and medicine. Upon all such persons the medical attendant should attend, without requiring a recommendation from any one. He should not be at liberty to refuse any applicant. To this it may be objected, that many whose circumstances would enable them to pay for medical aid, would not hesitate to avail themselves gratuitously of that relief which was intended solely for the destitute and the poor. Of such conduct there would no doubt be occasional instances, but it is permitted to think that less loss would arise to the county from the fraudulent participation of a few individuals, than injury to humanity, if one really indigent person were deprived of that relief which the community had provided for the necessitous. The servants of subscribers have hitherto been always considered as fit objects for medical charities. It appears to me that domestics of the upper rank, as butlers and housekeepers, are not fit objects. I think that other servants are. I could mention many instances where absentee landlords, and even resident proprietors, have altogether declined contributing to dispensaries, from which nevertheless their poorer tenants were relieved to a very considerable extent. I have found it also to be not uncommon for farmers and others of moderate means to become subscribers of a small sum, often half a guinea. In this manner the subscription list, which was laid before the grand jury, and on which the amount of the presentment depended, was swelled, whilst the subscribers drew aid from the charity, often far exceeding in value the sum which they had given. These abuses could not possibly take place if the funds of medical institutions were supplied from a rateable tax which had been levied from all in just proportions; a mode which has been already suggested. Such an arrangement would no longer leave a pretext for refusing relief to any one soliciting it. All would, in truth, become entitled to it.

In all hospitals and dispensaries, extern patients should, daily and at fixed hours, be attended to, and prescribed for. Persons rendered incapable, by disease, of presenting themselves at the institution, should, within the limits of an assigned district, be visited at their own dwellings. In cases of severe illness a single visit in the 24 hours would be by no means sufficient. Here the medical attendant should be obliged to attend to the condition of his patient as often during the day as may be necessary. Sudden accidents should, at all hours, claim his especial attention, and even during the night it should be incumbent on him, in such cases, to afford every assistance in his power. For this purpose it would be necessary that he should have at his disposal all requisite bandages and splints, and a judicious supply of instruments calculated for the occasion. A refusal or needless delay of assistance in the emergencies just mentioned, should never be allowed to pass without incurring an expression of the displeasure of the Board. Diligence would be ensured on the part of the medical attendant, if there were an order that he should keep an account of all visits paid by him, and that in addition to his register of intern patients, he should have a book for externs, to contain the number of those prescribed for on each day, and an entry of the prescription made use of in all acute diseases. It would be the duty of the inspector to examine these journals, and to decide whether the practice of the attendant was characterized by proper energy and discrimination. The ordinary run of complaints in dispensary practice are of such a nature as not to require, each, a distinct prescription. I would not allow of any prescriptions being compounded in the shop of the dispensary, except those of its medical attendant. In speaking of extern patients, I cannot avoid again reverting to the signal benefits which dispensaries may be made to yield to lying-in women. Such persons are, at present, if of the poorer classes, obliged to have recourse to the services of grossly ignorant midwives, whose unskilfulness and obstinate prejudices are not infrequently the cause of death to both mother and child. The greater number of the institutions which I have visited throughout the country, do not provide gratuitous aid during parturition, and in consequence recourse in difficult cases to a qualified medical man is usually postponed until his intervention is no longer of any utility. I am of opinion that every poor lying-in woman should be aware that she can, in case of need, or indeed in all cases, call for the assistance of an educated accoucheur, and that the latter should be not only bound to attend her, but also have the power of ordering for her such comforts, as wine, gruel, flannels, &c., as her condition may demand. I would even extend his power of ordering extras to other diseases, of which there are several, that in their progress would derive more benefit from proper regimen and soothing diluent drinks, and when convalescence had commenced from nutritious diet, than from any medicine whatever. I do not point out whence these, in my opinion, indispensable matters should be supplied; at present there is no source to afford them.

All cases of sudden accident should be entitled to immediate admission into every hospital, and one or two beds should be allowed to remain vacant for the purpose of receiving them. The same facilities for the admission of fever patients should exist in every institution destined for the relief of that disease, and I would propose that a recommendation should not be deemed necessary for either class of patients. For other maladies, on the contrary, I think that the demanding of a recommendation, previous to receiving them into the house, would be attended with good consequences, as it would induce many to subscribe to the charity for the sake of having it in their power to assist their dependants. At the same time the permanent stability of the institution should in no degree rest on the continuance or cessation of voluntary subscriptions. The friends of patients (excepting of those who labour under contagious fever) should be admitted to visit them on two days in each week, and only at appointed hours. The conduct of patients, at all times, and of visitors, during their stay, should be regulated by strict rules enforcing decency of behaviour, &c. Of these rules a printed copy should be suspended against the wall of every ward. I would not permit patients, on any condition, to leave the bounds of the establishment until the period of their final discharge. There are many objections to the performance of work by the patients in hospitals and dispensaries, whose usefulness may, in some degree, be measured by the numbers who have been aided in them in a given time. If labour be required from any of the inmates, there is danger that persons might contrive to be retained longer than necessary, to the exclusion of the really sick. The only deviation from these observations should be, that convalescents might assist in the domestic economy of the hospital, as in sweeping and cleaning the rooms and passages. The erection throughout the country of district lunatic asylums, promises to render superfluous the appropriation to lunatics of any room in general infirmaries; but it would be well that some arrangement should be made for their temporary detention until they could be sent to the asylum. A patient should not, under any pretext, be prevented from having communication with whatever clergyman he may wish to see. A right should be recognized in the regular clergymen of all sects to visit the wards at all times, but they should be bound to confine themselves strictly to individuals of their own persuasion, not even speaking to others, unless a desire to that effect had been expressed to some of the medical officers. A note of such desire or request should be made at the time, to which the other clergymen should be permitted to refer for their respective satisfaction. None but regular clergymen should be allowed to speak on religious subjects in the wards; and if any of the sick wish that a friend, or another patient, should read to him a religious or controversial book, this should be done in such manner as not to reach the ears of persons professing a different faith. Neither religious nor controversial books should be publicly distributed, and if any patient receive such, he should not be permitted to circulate it among the others. If there be chaplains attached to the hospital, their names, their duties, and the days on which they are to attend, should be inscribed in a book devoted to the purpose; and if any of them be known to have deviated from the line laid down for his conduct, he should be bonâ fide dismissed.

Diet.

Those only who have taken a part in the management of an hospital, can understand the economy and satisfaction arising from the establishment of a regular and well-defined dietary, adapted to the varying circumstances of its inmates. A systematic table can meet almost every case; and if it should be deemed requisite ever to order "extras" it should be done sparingly, and with a prudent regard to the funds of the charity.

Clothing.

On the admission of a patient, his clothes should be delivered into the hands of one of the officers, to be cleaned, purified and laid by, whilst the owner remains in the house. For those individuals whom it is not necessary to confine to their beds, there should be provided by the institution loose clothing, of a coarse but cleanly description, and patients should never be allowed to wear their own clothes in the wards.

General Management.

If a sufficient number of the respectable inhabitants of a district, for which a dispensary is intended, could be procured to form a standing committee of management, and if a quorum of this committee would, if it were only once a month, attend to and investigate the affairs and accounts of the charity, I know of no mode in which such institutions would be likely to be more judiciously carried on. But, from the evidence which I have been able to procure, I much doubt whether disinterested aid of the kind can be any where expected. The greater number of dispensary committees have entirely neglected the objects for which they were appointed, and have been accessory to the most extensive abuses, by suffering the entire management of the institutions to pass into the hands of the medical attendant, or some other single individual. I would therefore be inclined to propose that every thing should be carried on under the immediate directions of the Board, which I have before alluded to; and, in carrying into effect its orders, I would allow to the medical and all other officers as little discretionary power as possible. The Report upon the North Cork Infirmary shows the evils which result from permitting individuals to assume the authority of managers ex officio. The interference of such persons should be put a stop to. If, however, the formation of a committee can be effected, it must, in order to be productive of good, meet, if not once a fortnight, at least once a month. A quorum should not consist of less than three members. Of the meetings of this committee, and of the names of those attending them, and their proceedings, minutes should be entered in a book kept for the purpose. This book should always be open to the inspection of subscribers; and if the establishment derive any assistance from a tax, to rate-payers, who would thus be enabled to satisfy themselves of the expediency and justice of all disbursements. Subscribers should alone be entitled to vote at the election of committees, and proxies should never be received. In the intervals between the meetings of the committee, it would be well that one of its members should be appointed to visit the dispensary officially, and to superintend the working of its details. Where he sees any thing requiring correction or remark, he should write his observations on the point in the visiting book, which ought to be submitted to the inspection of the chairman at the next meeting, and be then by him signed.

Officers not medical.

It has frequently come to my knowledge during the course of my inspection, that large additions have been made to the list of subscribers just previous to an election, for the purpose of securing the appointment of some individual. To prevent this practice, the election of all non-medical officers should be vested in the committee alone, if it exists, subject to the approbation of the Board, and if it do not exist, in the Board. If in the committee, the system of open voting should be adopted; and the appointments, which the Board should have the power of annulling, ought to be renewed every year. Amongst the non-medical officers, the most important is the treasurer. The evidence which has been laid before the Board will prove, that hitherto the Act of Parliament, which expressly requires that the treasurer shall give due security, has been most culpably neglected. The consequence has been, that the grossest frauds have taken place, and that some institutions have suffered severe losses. I am induced therefore to give it as my opinion, that a bank should should be the only treasurer, and that all payments should be made through drafts upon this bank. Wherever recourse cannot be had to a bank, let the required surety be never on any account remitted; and let the treasurer, whoever he may be, be really responsible for the trust reposed in him. The salaries of the various officers must of course vary according to the nature of the establishments to which they may be attached, and the amount of duty which they may have to perform. I have proposed that the duration of appointments should not exceed the space of one year, in order that at the expiration of that period, the Board might dispense with the services of any person, with the propriety of whose conduct they had not reason to be perfectly satisfied. I think that a check or authority of this nature will be productive of the best effects.

The number and the duties of the necessary attendants cannot be generally defined. They must depend altogether on the purposes of the establishment. Their wages also must be calculated in some measure with reference to their being employed in town or country; but whatever they may be in amount, they should never be paid otherwise than by a draft on the bank or treasurer. All the attendants should be provided with both board and lodging within the institution, and the enjoyment of any perquisites should be very strictly forbidden, and punished when discovered.

Contracts for articles required for the use of the institution should be invited by advertisement. None of the officers should on any account be allowed to supply any thing, but if sufficient publicity be given to the notice, I see no reason why a governor should be precluded from becoming a contractor.

It would be desirable that there were a general code of regulations equally applicable to the government of all hospitals and dispensaries, even in their minutest details. This would most materially lighten the task of the directing authorities in the vigilant attention which they would be called on to bestow on each and every institution; and from the absence of some uniform system of regulations much injury has often arisen, and even in some instances considerable loss of property. I fear, however, that perfect uniformity will not be attainable; but the exceptions should be as few as possible.

It has long been the custom in the army medical department to require that their medical officers shall present monthly reports, embodying an account of all matters concerning the performance of their duties. It appears to me, that the adoption of a similar practice with reference to the institutions under consideration, would be attended with the greatest advantage. Each medical attendant should send a written report to the Board at least once a month, and a printed report should be published for general inspection at the end of the year. The gentry, in many places which I have visited, in expressing a wish that more extensive attention were devoted to the wants of the poor, especially of the infirm, the sick and the aged, have concurred in the opinion, that a district medical institution might most usefully be made a convenient place of meeting, whence those individuals, such as the clergy, rate-payers, &c., who were concerned in the distribution of any relief to the indigent beyond that flowing from a dispensary, could very advantageously direct their operations.

The fluctuating amount of the receipts of medical charities has been found to have interfered most materially with their well-being. It frequently happens that, as at present constituted, the main support of their existence consists of the large subscriptions of one or two individuals, which are liable at any moment to be withdrawn through the caprice of the contributor, in whose power may thus be said to be the stability of the institution. If we look into the nature of a large proportion of other subscriptions, it will be seen that they are often accompanied by a tacit stipulation, that if given by individuals of the lower classes, not only the donor, but all his family, shall be attended gratuitously and provided with medicine; and if given by the more wealthy, that all the household servants of the contributor shall equally receive every kind of medical aid in return. Many physicians have said that the claims upon their time, under these circumstances, are often most exorbitant, and that they have been afraid to demand any remuneration for their trouble. It appears to me, that subscriptions received under the conditions just detailed, cannot with justice be considered as gain, when we take into computation the degree to which the services of the medical attendant, and the medicines and stores of the charity are given as an equivalent. I have already proposed a remedy for this state of things, when I suggested, that the maintenance of all hospitals and dispensaries should rest on a fixed income, to be drawn from the public resources of the country.

With the exception of some small sums allowed to remain in the hands of the medical or other resident officer, to meet any unforeseen contingency, all monies should, immediately after being received, be lodged in the hands of the banker. It is unnecessary to repeat, that adequate security should be required from any person to whom either the funds, or the title-deeds, or other property of the institution is at any time entrusted.

In the payment of bills a definite line should be followed, which would prevent even the possibility of imposition. The officer or attendant, to whose care any article purchased had been committed, should certify on the bill that it had been duly received. The bill should be then presented to the committee or other managing authority, and after it had been examined by them, payment should be made by a draft on the treasurer, and in no other way. It would be well that all debts incurred were discharged at the end of the month, and that receipts were taken, to be afterwards submitted to the committee at their next meeting.

Medical charities are hardly more useful as modes of conveying assistance to the poor than as constituting the only genuine source whence those, who are destined to administer that assistance, can draw the information and experience which are necessary to make their services valuable. Conformably to this view, I would recommend that to all hospitals and dispensaries medical attendants should have free access, for the purpose of observing the practice of the attending physician, and following him in his rounds through the wards, into which, as a general rule, they should not be admitted at any other time. There could be no objection to permitting the performance by the pupils of some of the minor operations in surgery; but in this, as in every thing else, there should be explicit regulations for their conduct. An hospital may be made to yield much instruction beyond that which is merely demonstrative. I would, therefore, always encourage the medical attendant to give clinical lectures, and any emolument arising from them should be altogether relinquished in his favour. It would be expedient to confine the instructions to clinical lectures, since there is too much ground to expect that the dissections which anatomical demonstrations would require, might have the effect of deterring the poor from taking advantage of the institution. From these observations, post mortem examinations are of course exempted, and also those required for the satisfaction of coroners' juries.

Nature and Causes of Disease.

Having thus far developed (venturing for the most part to rely on my experience as an hospital surgeon during a period of nearly 40 years) a general system for the organization of hospital relief, it may not be superfluous to add a few words on the change which has taken place in the nature of the prevailing diseases within the last few years. Formerly, in this country, the spring months were marked by various inflammatory and febrile maladies, affecting in particular the lungs and other organs of the chest. Fever of the most malignant type generally showed itself in summer, whilst the autumns were distinguished by dysenterical and many anomalous abdominal or bowel complaints. In winter, besides other distempers, there was always a recurrence of asthmas and chronic diseases of the lungs and windpipe. At each season cases of all diseases were of course to be met with. I have only mentioned the characteristics of the various periods of the year. The fevers, which seemed to have their origin in the heats of summer, and also in some measure in the humidity of the autumnal season, were usually of that low nervous type which all experience has shown to be always fatally aggravated and widely extended by scanty food and insufficient clothing. Of late years spasmodic cholera would, according to the statements which have been supplied to me by medical men, in many parts of Ireland, seem to have taken the place of these typhus fevers, which have, in a truly remarkable manner, declined in frequency since the appearance of the former disease. To this fact, as to a point of practical importance, I would beg leave to direct the attention of the Board, because there is but too much reason to expect occasional returns of cholera for at least some time to come. It would be necessary, therefore, that a provision should be in permanent existence to meet it, and check it at its very commencement; I think that the means towards both these ends are to be found in a law which should require that every hospital supported by public funds should receive and treat all patients labouring under malignant cholera, and, indeed, I may add, under all epidemic diseases. Fever hospitals, which we have supposed to have rather fewer claims upon them for admission, under the circumstances may with much benefit be diverted from what their name implies. But the opening of the hospitals would not alone meet the emergencies which are contemplated, unless external aid were provided for the poor at their own houses. The physicians, under the control of the Board, should be bound to visit cases of cholera occurring in their own district, and if it should be deemed, that in so doing, the extension of their duties would be unreasonably great, the Board should appoint other medical men as assistants.

Boards of Health.

If dispositions of this kind had been available on the occasion of the late visitation, not only much injudicious outlay of money would have been avoided, but in all probability the progress of the distemper would have been impeded. I am inclined to expect little or no assistance from local Boards of Health (further than in matters of medical police, as in cleansing sewers, streets, whitewashing houses, &c.) from the timidity and want of knowledge which has hitherto obtained among their members. The services which it was thought they could render can reasonably be expected only from medical gentlemen whose business it has been to render themselves familiar with disease, and from whom energetic assistance in circumstances of danger and emergency may with justice be expected, in consideration of the increased emolument to which additional duty would entitle them.

* I met with an instance of this in the town of Maynooth, having a population under 2,000. Some subscribers objecting to have a physician who did not reside in the place, recommended a practicing apothecary of the town as medical superintendent to the dispensary. The recommendation was disapproved of by others, and the parties not choosing to coalesce, separate presentations from the grand jury were applied for and procured, and two dispensaries established and carried on together for some time where one would have been sufficient. Occasional reference will be made in this Report to other dispensaries in the County of Kildare, as Clane, Newbridge, &c.

It may be stated, in passing, that whenever particular instances are not adduced in the course of these remarks, abundant proof is to be found in the Medical Evidence, to which the reader is referred.

GENERAL REPORT on the existing System of PUBLIC MEDICAL RELIEF in IRELAND, by W. P. Borrett, Esq., M.D., MEDICAL ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER.

On the Dispensaries.

THE DISPENSARIES established in the counties of Kerry and Roscommon, and in the East Riding of the county of Cork, to which my inquiry was directed, would, if well situate, well supported, and well conducted, furnish an invaluable means of relief to the sick poor. There are, however, several objectionable points in the present system, which I proceed to notice in the order and arrangement adopted in taking the Medical Evidence.

DISPENSARIES.

The first and one of the most important points for consideration is the allocation of dispensaries. Although, generally speaking, they occupy suitable positions, they are in some parts unequally distributed over the country, being unnecessarily close together, and frequent,* or scarce, and even entirely wanting, where the public convenience most requires them. Thus the district is either circumscribed within a narrow compass, or vague and undefined, and extending a long way; for it is the custom to swell the subscription-list by receiving contributions from every quarter, without reference to the extent of duty imposed on the medical attendant, who is sometimes called upon to visit as far as 8, 10 and even 12 miles from the dispensary. The reason of this partially existing state of medical relief (for which it may be observed there is a tax levied upon the county at large), as well as of seeking contributions so far off, is to be attributed to the present plan of allowing any number of subscribers to originate a dispensary where they please, and making the grand jury presentment to depend upon the amount subscribed.

and Population.

The law, as it now stands, leaves the selection of the spot to the subscribers; and hence it may be applied rather for their own accommodation than for the benefit of the public. Some amendment of it is therefore required by restricting the establishment of a dispensary to certain localities and a certain population; and at the same time to make its establishment under such circumstances compulsory. It was the general opinion of the witnesses who were examined on the subject, that, supposing it were in contemplation to map out the country into dispensary districts, a tract of four miles or thereabouts, extending in every direction from the residence of the medical officer, might very well be assigned to his charge; having reference also to the population, diminishing the distance where the people are collected into towns and villages, and increasing it, on the contrary, in those parts which are thinly inhabited.

The building was in general a decent-looking, commodious house, consisting of two apartments, one a surgery, the other a waiting-place for the patients; or a room was set apart in the rear of the house of the medical officer, with a separate approach. Occasionally it was hired of a subscriber at a high rent. It was seldom the property of the county; but the witnesses admitted this would be a better plan, for then, if they had fixed upon an eligible place, they might be sure of keeping it. But from the want of some such regulation, exceptions to this kind of building were not wanting. Thus, at Oysterhaven, it was an outhouse; at Tulsk, a dismal, filthy barn, in a state of dilapidation; at Innishannon, a small detached stable in a lane off the main street; and in several instances the dispensary was held in the shop of the medical attendant, or in a small room, which also served as a residence for the assistant or servant, or in a mere cabin,† consisting of only one apartment with a partition run across it, without reference to situation, condition or convenience of any kind.

Building.

Among the medical superintendents to the dispensaries, there were two individuals who had no kind of license to practise, whether as physicians, surgeons or apothecaries. Several were only qualified as apothecaries, and were without a midwifery certificate. But by far the greater number of them had received a highly respectable professional education, and were members of the Irish or English colleges of surgeons, or graduates in physic of the Scotch universities. No specific qualifications being required by Act of Parliament to entitle

Medical Officers'
Qualifications.

* I met with an instance of this in the town of Maynooth, having a population under 2,000. Some subscribers objecting to have a physician who did not reside in the place, recommended a practising apothecary of the town as medical superintendent to the dispensary. The recommendation was disapproved of by others, and the parties not choosing to coalesce, separate presentments from the grand jury were applied for and procured, and two dispensaries established and carried on together for some time where one would have been sufficient. Occasional reference will be made in this Report to other dispensaries in the County of Kildare, as Clane, Newbridge, &c.

† It may be stated, in limine, that whenever particular instances are not adduced in the course of these remarks, abundant proof is to be found in the Medical Evidence, to which the reader is referred.

† French Park, Clanmaurice or Causeway, Kinnataloon, Glanworth, Cloyne, &c. were among the worst of this description; and at Clane, the dispensary was held in a wretched hovel, crumbling for want of repair, and rented at 10*l.* per annum. It was visited on one of the days of attendance, but the shutters were closed, and no patients present.

entitle a person to hold a dispensary appointment, the determination of this point rests with the subscribers, who are in general anxious, as well for the sake of the charity as on their own account, to procure competent men, as the public appointment often leads to their becoming the medical attendants in the families of the subscribers. Thus at Dunmanway a stranger had been preferred to other candidates who were personally known to the subscribers, because his testimonials were most approved of. But this plan of private patronage has its disadvantages, for sometimes, and especially where there are not many resident local gentry, persons not duly qualified for the office obtain the appointment. Hence it would be better if the law imposed some restrictions which might insure the selection of competent individuals in every instance.

Election.

Some advance to such a security for a good appointment has been obtained by the amendment of the law as to elections. Now, in the event of a vacancy, public notice must be duly given of the ensuing election. No person can now vote at once on paying a guinea subscription; he must be a previous subscriber at least of a year's standing, or he must become a subscriber for life. Before the law was thus amended, it was a common thing for a man, who had a certain sum of money to expend, to make votes enough to ensure his election by subscribing in the name of friends. Advantage was also taken of the occurrence of a vacancy to get up an opposition, and so recruit the funds of the charity at the expense of the contending parties. The existing law has put an end to these irregularities.

Residence.

Non-residence, which had become a common custom, has of late been disallowed in several places in the county of Cork, as at Black Rock, Watergrass Hill, &c.; but I found it still tolerated at Glenville, Douglas, Glanworth, &c. In the latter instances the medical officers resided at a distance of three miles from the dispensaries; in the first, at Fermoy, at a distance of six. In Kerry there was not a single instance of non-residence, while in Roscommon it was very frequent. It was so at Brideswell, Tarmonbarry, or Ruskey, Tulsk, French Park, Lough Glynn, Croghan and Lecarrow. These places furnish one-half the number of dispensaries in the county.*

The practice of compelling the medical officer to reside on the spot should be everywhere adopted, if it be the intention of subscribers to make the dispensary of real service; for how can medical aid be said to be fairly placed within the reach of the sick poor, and least of all, when immediate help is necessary, if the medical officer attend at the institution one day only in the week, as is the case at Croghan, or even oftener, and is away the rest of the time at a distance of several miles? Tarmonbarry is full eight miles from Strokestown, where the medical officer lives; and in the other cases of non-residence just cited, the distance is not less than five or six miles. It must nevertheless be admitted, that placed as these dispensaries are, in remote and impoverished districts, it is scarcely to be expected that medical men, of any pretensions, will be found willing to come and live on the spot, so long as the highest salary attached to such an appointment is limited by the grand jury to 60*l.*, which is the case throughout the county of Roscommon.

Where there is a non-resident medical officer, the onus of his duty is generally thrown on a neighbour, to whose dispensary the patients resort, in the absence of their proper physician; or they are left to shift for themselves till the next day of the dispensary being open, which may not be before nearly a week's interval.† In other places, on the contrary (so widely do the regulations differ), instead of appointing only one day in the week, the subscribers are not satisfied with less than daily attendance at the dispensary; and this, too, where the medical officer resides close at hand, and is ready to give assistance in all cases of sudden illness or accident.

Days and Hours of Attendance.

If stated days and stated hours were assigned, either two days in the week for four hours long, or three days for three hours, sufficient time would be allowed for the due discharge of dispensary duty, while opportunity would be afforded for visiting the poor at their own houses. At the same time it would be necessary to restrict the medical officer to the service of that institution which has been given him in charge. In some few instances there were two, and in one instance no less than four such appointments, held at the same time by one individual.‡

In towns it was not unusual to find more than one medical officer, as well as an apothecary, attached to the dispensary. They had their respective days of attendance, or they attended for a week or a month in turn. At Tralee the duty was shared in this way among the physicians resident in the town. At Kinsale the physicians were in the habit of receiving the poor at their own houses. The patients took the prescriptions to the dispensary, and were supplied with medicine by the apothecary. In the country parts the business of the apothecary devolved upon the medical officer, who was obliged to compound and dispense his own medicines, or he delegated this duty to an apprentice or servant.§ But the employment of uneducated and unprofessional persons was not confined to the manipulation of drugs. They were sometimes allowed to bleed, and perform the minor operations of surgery, and even to tap, in cases of dropsy. The Phlebotomist at the Cork Dispensary, who was a person of this description, had a salary of 20*l.*; and the servant at the

the French Park Dispensary, who was naturally enough very proud of his surgical skill, was anxious I should go and see a dropsical patient whom he had under his care, and had tapped repeatedly.

The determination of the amount of salary rests with the subscribers; but in no instance did I find they had carried it beyond what is reasonable; indeed they seldom had the means of allowing adequate pay. Occasionally it amounted to 100*l.*, but it never exceeded that sum; it was generally considerably less, even falling below 50*l.* In the county of Roscommon it was limited by the grand jury to 60*l.*, but the witnesses who attended the examination at Castlerea acknowledged that it was hard upon the medical superintendent to fix his stipend at so low a rate.

The uncertain amount of payment, as well as its inadequacy, was made the subject of grave and constant complaint. Instead of having a fixed salary, upon which they can calculate, the medical officers seldom know from year to year what sum they are to receive for their services. It depends upon the amount of subscriptions and presentments, alike fluctuating and precarious. Of late the Act of Parliament having been construed not to make it imperative upon grand juries to grant a sum equal to the private contributions, they have reduced the presentments in those counties in which, owing to the multiplication of dispensaries, or the weight of the public burdens, it was thought right to take advantage of this recent interpretation of the statute. At the same time the subscribers are apt to fall off, because the custom of granting pound for pound has been discontinued, or they require to be so much importuned before they pay, that it becomes irksome and disagreeable to apply to them; and the medical officer, rather than do so, is in the habit of supplying the deficiencies from his own purse, taking upon himself the risk of being repaid his advances, so that the treasurer may receive the full amount of subscriptions specified in the declaration, and thus be enabled to obtain a proportionably greater grant from the county.* But notwithstanding this precaution (the propriety of which I do not stop here to consider), the funds had continued to decline, and to such a degree, in some instances, that the means of providing a salary were altogether wanting, and they barely sufficed for the purchase of necessities.† Although it was to be expected, under such discouraging circumstances, that the functionaries would relax in their efforts, and neglect the trust they had undertaken, it was gratifying to see that the loss of pay or non-payment did not indispose them, for the most part, from attending carefully to the interests of the charities. The medical attendants gave their services gratuitously and unremittingly in several instances. Nevertheless it is desirable that a fair and certain compensation should be given, so as to impress them with a consciousness of their responsibility; and in many places it is absolutely indispensable to secure the services of a salaried officer, where there is not a sufficient number of individuals in the neighbourhood capable of supporting a medical man, independently of the emolument of office. As a general rule, the salary should be in an inverse ratio to the size and wealth of the place; it should decrease in proportion as the opportunity is greater of acquiring private practice, and increase, on the contrary, as the inhabitants belong more to the labouring and lower classes. But it is to be apprehended, that so long as the medical officer has to depend for his pay upon the chance amount of contributions, and to court subscribers, so long will he be disposed to consult the convenience of the rich before the necessities of the poor; that so long as he is unworthily paid, so long will the duty be inefficiently performed, and the charity more or less inoperative to all good and legitimate purposes.

Upon the whole, the dispensaries were well supplied with medicines of a good quality, obtained from druggists of established character, and judiciously selected. As much cannot be said as to the supply of surgical instruments, splints, bandages, &c. What few instruments there were belonging to the institutions, were often unserviceable through rust, and the other things were not uniformly provided as they should have been in case of accident.

I had occasion to remark that those dispensaries were furnished with but a moderate and scanty supply of drugs, in which it was the custom, after defraying their cost, to hand over the surplus funds to the medical officer in the shape of salary. If, however, the salary was fixed at a low amount, then medicines would be provided in a sufficient, nay, sometimes in a superfluous quantity. They became in such instances a heavy item in the expenditure for the year; but since vouchers for the payment of the druggists' bills were not always producible, having been either wilfully destroyed, or lost through carelessness, it could not be ascertained whether the entire sum had been applied to the purchase of medicines. Occasionally the medical officer was allowed to charge a round sum for supplying medicines; a bad plan, as it gave him the opportunity (if disposed to make use of it) of substituting inferior articles, and so gaining the difference in cost between good and bad. Sometimes there was not any distinction made between the stock of private medicines for sale, and those belonging to the institution,‡ or the latter sort were stowed away in a slovenly manner in the corner of a shop, kept by the medical officer, while those he had upon his own account were well appointed and arranged, and ostentatiously displayed, which led to the impression, among the poor applicants, that they had better pay a something for a good article than put up with a one. But not only was the trick resorted to, of giving the public clearly to understand, from appearances, that, if they wanted good medicines they must purchase them at the shop, but the fraud was committed of selling the medicines belonging to the dispensary, without putting the money thus obtained to the credit of the charity. I mention this fraud as having been detected, although but in a very few instances; I by no means wish to imply that it was common, or to cast any imputation of the kind upon the medical attendants ants in general; and I wish as much to be understood, when I state, there was, at times, strong reason to suspect that the pharmacy had been dressed up for the occasion of the visit of the assistant commissioners, and drugs procured for exhibition, but which did not belong to the dispensary. Sometimes* little else was to be seen in the shape of medicine than a large cask of Glauber Salts, or numerous bottles of Castor Oil, the latter being much in vogue with the people: or there was a very scanty store in hand, not more than what could be contained in a small cupboard or press, and the nature of the establishment was only made apparent by a board stating the days of attendance, posted up over the door or the window. The more delicate medicinal preparations recently brought into use, were met with in some places, but not generally. Indeed on account of their concentrated form and drastic power, they are not well adapted to dispensary practice: persons taking them require to be constantly seen by the medical attendant.

There is still another point connected with the pharmacy; I mean the deterioration of drugs, from want of proper care and keeping. At Freemount, Maynooth and Elphin, the medicines were spoiling from damp; and in a few instances, not only were no pains taken to preserve the medicines, but the room was kept in the most dirty and slovenly state, or the building was in a ruinous condition. This was the case at Tusk dispensary, where, owing to the wet dropping from the rotten thatch, or driving in through the gaping chinks in the mud walls, and the wretched condition of the interior, the few ordinary drugs which were found jumbled together in the drawers of a musty press, proved upon inspection damp and damaged. At Oysterhaven, the filthy outhouse which was used for the dispensary, contained scarcely a pound's worth of medicine.

Registration.

Much useful information in regard to the statistics and sanitary condition of the districts might be furnished by a register, to be kept at each medical station, accurately and fully drawn up, recording the number of cases admitted, with the names and residences of the patients, the nature of the diseases, the treatment, and the result. A document of this kind was insisted upon, but with a different intention, by the grand jury of the county of Cork, for each dispensary. It was thought it would prove a check upon the medical officer, and afford some clue to the amount of relief compared with the cost of medicine. But it was alleged by the medical men that it was next to impossible, in the press of persons sometimes attending at the dispensaries, to enter the required particulars, and they were in general content with putting down a certain number of cases, when their duty was done, according to the best of their recollection. Moreover, as tickets were not constantly demanded, nor when presented, regularly filed and kept, the vouchers were wanting to count and compare with the entries, or there were not the proper means of verification, or of testing the truth of what appeared on the face of the books. But little dependence, therefore, could be placed upon the register, which was, to my mind, neither a check upon the occurrence of an abuse, nor a criterion of the utility of the institution.

Who entitled to Relief.

One of the chief abuses of the present system is the diversion of the funds of the charity from its proper objects. When sickness and poverty combine in an individual, the joint affliction fulfils the condition requisite to entitle him to claim relief. But it is not the sick poor alone who obtain aid from the dispensaries. It is a very common notion with servants in many places, that their masters subscribe on their account, and as far as the lower class of servants is concerned, perhaps little objection can be made; but the case is different with upper servants. At Castletown Roche I was told of housekeepers and ladies' maids being driven up to the dispensary, and substantial yeomen riding up booted and spurred, and demanding relief in the names of their landlords, whose displeasure and the withdrawal of whose subscriptions they threatened if their applications were not attended to. "I was sent for," said the assistant medical officer of the Kilworth Dispensary, "to attend the wife of a nobleman's shepherd, who has a salary of 40*l.* or 50*l.* a year. She was in labour of her first child. I remained in attendance the greater part of two days, and made first and last a dozen visits. No pay was offered, on the ground that if they had asked for a ticket of the secretary or the agent, they could have obtained it." "This," he added, "occurred five months ago, and I was called only last week into the country, a distance of nine miles, to visit a dispensary patient, who rented a snug farm of about 40 acres, and was well able to pay." He also stated a third instance, in which a respectable farmer, seven miles off, was visited twice by himself and thrice by his colleague on an order of his landlord upon the dispensary. Similar instances of gratuitous relief improperly procured will be found, upon reference to the medical evidence, to be by no means uncommon.

It is absolutely essential to the right working of dispensaries that this abuse should be done away with. It is one of the very worst features of the present system. It has been carried to such an extent, that subscribers have been supplied, through fear of disobliging them, with medicines for their dogs, horses, and even private families, at the expense of the charity. They have even gone further, and procured medical advice for themselves as well as medicines gratis.† True it is, that the poor have access to the dispensaries, but it is equally true that others, as in the cases just cited, assert their claim to assistance who are anything but proper objects for it, and thus these charities must in some degree be considered as established, not solely with a view to affording medicine and medical relief to the sick poor, but also for securing professional attendance for the domestic servants, tenants and dependents of all kinds, of the gentlemen who contribute to their support. The subscribers cannot lay claim therefore to credit in all cases on the score of having been influenced by charitable motives alone; they must be regarded in the light of mutual insurers, or contributors to their own convenience and advantage. But besides being an abuse in itself, this kind of imposition upon the charity presses very hard upon the industrious and independent practitioner of medicine. If he resist it, on the one hand, he runs the risk of giving offence to the subscribers, whose good opinion he is of course anxious to conciliate; while if he yield on the other, it makes him the drudge of the place, debars him from acquiring private practice;—and for what? for a yearly stipend of a few pounds; and entails upon him at the same time a most laborious, troublesome and thankless office.

* Tralee, Newbridge, Boyle, Lecarrow.

† Thus I was told of a medical man being sent for to the house of a subscriber to see a servant, whom he found in bed, but ailing nothing; he was requested, on leaving the house, "just to look at one of the children who was slightly indisposed." The child was seriously ill, and he gave his advice, but his dispensary salary was considered to be the proper fund for remuneration.

In general it was necessary to obtain an order for the aid of the institution. This is required On obtaining an with the view of inducing persons to become subscribers, by making it their privilege alone to Order for the Insti- recommend to the charity: and sometimes as a further inducement to raise the subscription, the tution. number of orders allowed is made proportionate to the sum subscribed. But such a plan is open to objection. It sometimes happens that medical help is quickly wanted, and there is no subscriber at hand; or if the number of tickets is limited, he may have already distributed as many as he is entitled to; or there may be an unwillingness on his part to assist the applicant, or what is more probable, he may not like the trouble of it. In places* where there was only one subscriber resident on the spot, he has been known to be called upon to issue more than 50 tickets in a morning. And as such a system opens the door to annoyance, so also a market is sometimes made of the patronage incidental to the subscription. If the subscriber is a shopkeeper, he may turn it to account by stipulating that all those to whom he gives tickets, should deal with him; and in other cases a like advantage may be secured. Hence it would be well to consider whether the formality of obtaining an order, which may thus be made a means of abuse, may not be entirely abolished.

In that case the dispensary would be left open to all the sick poor belonging to the district, and they would have free access to it, and be able to get relief upon their own application, leaving a discretionary power with the medical officer to withhold it from such as he conceives to be improper objects for the charity. Such a plan should, however, be subject to the control of the managing committee, with whom the adjudication of all matters in dispute should vest. If the case be a doubtful one, assistance might at once be given, and information as to the condition of the person required for the purpose of being laid before the committee for their future decision. It would not be long before the medical officer would learn to discriminate between the deserving poor and those who are not in necessitous circumstances. Still it would be necessary for the protection of the poor patients that the medical officer should at all times be responsible to the managing committee for the proper discharge of his duties.

Domiciliary attendance is an essential point to be provided for in a well-regulated dispensary; but it would be much too onerous a task for the medical officer, if he is to be at the beck of every applicant who may not like to take the trouble of waiting upon him. The plan of visiting out-patients can only be recommended under certain limitations. A visiting ticket might be required, the issuing of which should remain with the subscribers or the committee, and be confined to such patients as they believe to be unable to attend at the dispensary.

The possession of this privilege, in addition to their vote in the election of officers, might be a stimulus with some persons to subscribe; and it would not entail any unreasonable degree of trouble upon the medical attendant, if at the same time a small ward were annexed to his dispensary, to which he could transport the worst cases; an accommodation which I would strongly recommend,† where there is not an hospital near enough to be of service, taking care that when a visiting order is presented the case be properly attended to.

With reference to vaccination, I found that, although its protecting influence upon the constitution was a principle acknowledged by the medical men whom I saw, and who were almost unanimous in declaring that it seldom failed to modify and mitigate an attack of small-pox, even in those cases in which it did not succeed in preventing it, the practice was but little in accordance with such views. Vaccination was seldom regularly performed, owing, as it was said, to the strong prejudices of the people against it, and the difficulty which was found in keeping up a supply of vaccine lymph, and in the neglect of the mothers to bring the children back for medical inspection at the proper time, after they had allowed them to be vaccinated. But the means taken to counteract the prevailing notion against vaccination were not likely to have any effect.‡ In general it was discontinued, or it was left to the apothecary to vaccinate, and he made a charge for doing it.

The trade carried on by professed inoculators was another great drawback to the introduction of the cow-pock. These men perambulate the country, carrying with them a supply of the infectious matter of small-pox, and ready to inoculate even for the price of a meal. The magistrates sometimes interfered to put a stop to a practice so replete with danger to the community, but could not succeed in suppressing it. Generally it passed unnoticed and uncontrolled; it had even the sanction of medical authority in one or two instances which fell under my notice. At Aghada Dispensary the medical officer was accustomed himself to inoculate with small-pox, which he declared he had done successfully, as he called it, meaning that he had had the good fortune not to lose a case. But at Doneraile several children died the preceding year, the subject of small-pox, artificially produced, not by itinerant inoculators alone, but also by the apothecary of the town. And the servant attached to the French Park Dispensary (whose handyworks I have had occasion to notice under a former head) told me he had under his care, at the time of my visit, between 40 and 50 children, in town and country, whom he had inoculated with small-pox; so that he kept the disease for ever rife in the place and neighbourhood. No objection to his doing it was taken by the medical officer or the subscribers, and no attempt made to introduce the cow-pock. I went with my informant to visit two little patients whom he had inoculated the preceding week. One took the disease mildly, the other was alarmingly ill. He was at a loss what to make of this case. "He had never," he said, "known one take on so before; he was always lucky." It is bad enough, when low and ignorant individuals are allowed to take advantage of the prejudices of the people, and turn them to their own account; but how much worse when it is done by paid and accredited persons connected with public charities? It were much better that such institutions should cease to exist, than that existing they should work evil instead of good to the community.

Midwifery.

In several instances which came under my notice, on inquiring into the qualifications possessed by those who held dispensary appointments, I found that they had not attended to the study of midwifery; and yet, notwithstanding their neglect of this important branch of medical education, and their incompetency, they were sometimes obliged, from the force of circumstances, to undertake the practice of it, when settled in remote rural districts, and being perhaps the only medical men in the way. Sometimes, but rarely, it was represented to be a line of practice which they did not choose to follow; when, of course, the usefulness of the dispensary was much abridged, by its not possessing the means of rendering any assistance to puerperal women. It was the custom, however, and in general incumbent upon the medical officers, to attend in all cases of difficult and dangerous labour; but it was a common complaint that they were not applied to till it was frequently too late to be of service. This they ascribed to the ignorance of the female midwives, who are not sensible of the alarming condition of their patient, or are too jealous of the medical practitioner to call him in to their cases.

Man-midwifery is advocated by the profession and sanctioned by the public, upon the ground that by superior skill and management of women, both during and after labour, much of the actual pain and peril of parturition is spared, and the occurrence of many complaints altogether prevented. Since, however, a great proportion of midwifery, as a matter of necessity, falls into the hands of women, and particularly among the poorer classes both in town and country, the competency of midwives in general to discharge their duty is a matter of the first importance to the public.

There were only a few certificated midwives in the districts which I visited; they had been sent to the Lying-in Hospital at Dublin, at the expense of the county; but the greater part had copied errors of practice from one another, or commencing as nurses, had boldly entered upon the province of midwifery. Repeated instances were adduced in the course of my inquiry, of severe injuries both to mother and child, and permanent disabilities, which had been occasioned by their ignorance and want of skill, or their meddling and mischievous practices.

Impressed myself with the necessity of providing against an evil so generally deplored, and yet so prevalent, I would suggest that all persons should be prohibited from engaging in the practice of midwifery, who do not hold a certificate signed by a lecturer on midwifery in a medical school, or a medical superintendent in a lying-in charity, and countersigned by a magistrate or some other public functionary.

Nourishment.

In Ireland, where the means of the poorer classes are so miserably low, that they cannot at times procure the common necessities of life, it is highly desirable that nourishment, as well as medicine, should be supplied during sickness and convalescence. The expense and abuse, which seem almost inseparable from such a system, are the chief objections; but they are more than counterbalanced by the certain amount of good which would flow from the introduction of this great auxiliary means of affording relief in the administration of dispensaries.

Sickness may be simulated, and an attempt made to get alleviation for the cravings of nature, by pleading its infirmities; but besides that where proper vigilance is used the imposition is easy of detection, it would be a sufficient check against the abuse to withhold in a suspected case other aid than that of medicine.

Neither would the relief which it is proposed to give in the way of sustenance be attended with a heavy expense. Any undue excess in the distribution of it might be controlled by the committee, and it should be confined to certain particulars of diet, as diluent and demulcent drinks, broths, wine, &c., which form part of the medical treatment, and are essential to its success. Medicine, without adjuvants of this kind, is of doubtful advantage; and although prodigally administered under the present dispensary system, and sought for with avidity by the lower classes, among whom a taste for physic has been created by the ready opportunity of getting it, drugs constitute of themselves but a slender means of real relief. Their remedial effects are counteracted by the unfavourable circumstances of the patient, especially in regard to diet. Potatoes, the staple food of the Irish people, are highly injurious in dyspeptic complaints, of which they are indeed a chief exciting cause,* and and in all cases attended with vomitings; and yet the poor, whether ill or well, are obliged to have recourse to them. Many diseases, which would be made light of in the house of a rich man, prove on this account fatal among the poor; while the period of convalescence is prolonged, and the proneness to relapse increased tenfold, by the want of suitable and nutritious support. If this description of relief came within the scope of a dispensary, if part of the money, which is now sometimes extravagantly applied to the purchase of medicines, were laid out in supplying oatmeal, pearl-barley, rice, &c., or if there were any charitable society in the place, for the distribution of such nutritious articles, with power to the medical officer to give an order, how much his means of doing good, in the exercise of his vocation, would be increased, and the chance of recovery improved in numerous cases. A charity of this kind was established at Bantry, by a benevolent individual who was struck with the sight of a sick poor man lying near the chapel, unable to purchase even a little drink. Its first object is to relieve those who are labouring under sickness, and, if the funds allow it, the aged and infirm come in next for a share.

The dispensaries are supported by voluntary contributions, and by assessment upon the county, upon the principle of making private charity indispensable, in order to obtain a public grant; but however excellent in theory such a plan may appear to be, it has not well succeeded in practice.

Indeed the collecting of private subscriptions seems generally to fail in Ireland. The higher orders, for the most part, enter but little into the feelings of the poor, and the appeal of suffering humanity to private benevolence is too frequently made in vain. There are, of course, many most exemplary acts of generosity on the part of the rich; but, while there are some who invariably give, there are others who invariably refuse; and persons who have been employed to collect subscriptions in the times of distress, or for the support of charitable institutions, know full well those who will assist and those who will not. "It is hardly," they will tell you, "worth while to apply to the latter class, so systematically and pertinaciously do they refuse all petitions, and yet they are the persons best able to give." The medical gentlemen who attend at the dispensary at Tralee give their services gratuitously, and yet the gentry will not subscribe money enough to pay for medicines. In almost a total absence of subscriptions last year, the players kindly came forward and offered the proceeds of a night's performance in aid of the dispensary, and 13*l.* was thus raised, to which the Board of Health added 10*l.*; and then the grand jury were called upon to contribute a donation equal to the amount thus procured.

There is a like dearth of subscriptions towards the fever hospital and infirmary at Tralee, almost the entire support of which is borne by the county. At Bantry, Kilworth, Kenmare and other places, it was stated there were gentlemen possessed of from 1,000*l.* to 2,000*l.* a year in the neighbourhood, who refused to subscribe to the dispensary, although its operations were crippled for want of funds. At Castletown Roche the names of as many as 15 persons were given, enjoying incomes from landed property in the neighbourhood, of 500*l.* to 5,000*l.* per annum, who contributed nothing to the support of the dispensary, but left their dependants to get relieved upon the orders of others. Even with actual subscribers, the contributions do not bear that proportion to their respective means and resources which might in fairness be expected from them. At Ballylongford there were eight large landed proprietors in the district, whose united subscriptions amounted only to 12*l.* Men possessing some thousands a year give but an annual guinea, as that sum entitles them to as many tickets as they want; while those who do not subscribe at all, insist on the needlessness of becoming subscribers, when their dependants can easily procure tickets in some other quarter.

The above are not extraordinary instances; the indisposition to subscribe is general, but it has its exceptions, as I have already stated, and these sometimes very splendid ones. Nevertheless the charitable purposes of the subscribers, who contribute liberally for the support of the dispensaries, are too often abused. Most of those who are living upon their estates, whether proper or improper objects, consider they have a right to be supplied with medicine and medical attendance, so that in such a case more than the full worth is had for the money subscribed. Hence it is that virtually the public institutions are made subservient to private ends, by the very means which are ostensibly for the public interest.

Although it is forbid, on the one hand, to grant assistance from the public funds, where there are no local private contributions, that assistance is made absolute upon the other, on the amount of subscription being certified. The law, in its present state, affords an opportunity to any person or number of persons to get up a dispensary, whether it be for his or their accommodation, or for that of the public. Whether it be paid by the medical man who wants an appointment, or by a gentleman who is desirous to establish a medical practitioner in the neighbourhood, to attend upon his own family or his tenants, if only a certain sum be raised by private resources, to be applied for the maintenance of a dispensary, and its receipt be declared on oath, it is obligatory upon the grand jury to present a corresponding sum, or at least a sum proportionate to it. In the first case which is here supposed, the medical practitioner may or may not be a proper person; but whatever may be the sum contributed from his own purse, or is above bonâ fide subscriptions, it follows that the county is assessed to the same amount, or nearly so, in violation of the statute. In the second case, it is probable the person so selected will be duly qualified; but whether competent or incompetent, in either case the formation of the institution may be unnecessary, from its proximity to a similar one; or again, even if necessary, there is no sufficient check to compel the medical officer to attend to his duty to the poor, especially when other than humane considerations have led to his appointment. Several instances were given, in which the relief of the sick poor seemed to be held of inferior moment, and others in which it was grossly neglected. For these reasons it would seem that the principle is objectionable, which makes the presentment necessarily consequent upon a certain sum being subscribed, as well as in the first instance to depend entirely upon it. With or without subscription, it should be granted if required, and only in such cases as required; and the power of subscribers to establish dispensaries should be restricted. The next point for consideration is the amount of the sum to be presented.

The ambiguous expression which is used in the Act (45 Geo. 3), viz. "That it shall be lawful for the grand jury to present a sum equal to the amount of private subscriptions," has led to a different practice under the law in different counties. In Roscommon it was the custom to present a sum equal to that subscribed; in Cork and Kerry the presentment was to a less amount. The grand jury had here availed themselves of a late construction put upon the Act, which declared the sum presentable to be at their discretion; but this deviation from the ordinary practice of granting pound for pound, in proportion to the money subscribed, was much complained of. It was felt as an encroachment upon the funds, which in their low state they were little able to bear; and great dissatisfaction was expressed, that the grand jury should cease to fulfil what has hitherto been presumed to have been the intention of the Legislature, because it was now decided not to be binding upon them, according to the strict letter of the law. The reluctance on the part of the grand juries to present, as they were wont to do, arose from the heavy expense which had been entailed by the system upon the county, and the embarrassed condition of the occupying tenants, upon whom the tax was laid. It had the effect, however, of raising an objection to subscribe in the minds of many, for it had become quite a matter of uncertainty of what amount the county grant would be, which might, after all, depend more upon the degree of influence which the superintendent officers happened to possess with the grand jurors, than upon the sum actually subscribed.

Thus the subscriptions falling off, and the presentments being curtailed at the same time, the resources of the dispensaries had so materially declined, that their continuance was in some places brought into great jeopardy. In one or two instances, on the contrary, the reduction of the presentment was to be approved of. There were ample funds belonging to the charity, which had been allowed to accumulate from year to year, while its immediate wants remained unsupplied. This was the case at Killarney, and here the permission given to the grand jury, of presenting at their discretion, or even withholding the presentment, was very properly taken advantage of. Hence it is clear they ought not to be called upon to assess a sum in all cases equal to the subscriptions certified, but only such a sum as may be equal to the necessity of the case. A supplemental assessment, however, should always be made compulsory, such as would be sufficient to meet the existing exigencies of the institution. If the subscriptions decline, the presentment should be increased, and vice versa, by which plan the funds would always be kept to a certain amount, not carried beyond, nor sinking below, what is deemed necessary for effectually providing for the relief of the sick poor.

If it be objected that this mode of supplying the deficiency of subscriptions by assessment will have a tendency to diminish, or even to extinguish private charity, it should be borne in mind, that although every encouragement is given to the present plan, it is attended with very imperfect success; indeed the low amount of subscriptions is scarcely worth considering, when the selfish stipulations are taken into account, with which the contributions are too often accompanied. The privilege of being an administrator of the affairs of the charity, of having in return a vote and a right to issue visiting tickets, would still be continued under the proposed plan, as an inducement to persons to subscribe; while the unfeeling would be forced to contribute, and the expense not fall upon the benevolent alone. But it may be asked, upon whom should the assessment be levied? Not upon the struggling shopkeeper, or the occupying tenant, who barely exists after paying a rent which absorbs all his profits; not upon those who are but one degree removed above the lower classes, and who are in many cases paupers themselves. Any increase of the county grant, under the existing circumstances, would only impose an additional burden upon the poor. But the evil would be in a great measure corrected, if the taxation were borne by the landlord, payable however in the first instance by the tenant. To whatever amount the occupier of the soil might be assessed, it should be taken in lieu of so much rent paid to the proprietor, or the money required for the support of the medical institutions might be supplied from a general rate.

Management. to annex a Ward to certain Dispensaries.

The entire management rests with the subscribers. They make bye-laws, elect medical superintendent and committee, appoint treasurer, &c.; and as they are unrestricted by the law, and independent of the control of the grand jury, in several important matters connected with the establishment and practical operation of the dispensaries, they differ widely in their mode of conducting them. The principal differences have been explained in detail, and various irregularities and inconsistencies noticed under the respective heads into which the subject is divided: and hence it may be gathered how much more it would be for the advantage of the public, if, instead of being left to the arbitrary direction of the subscribers, an uniform plan of management were established in every instance.

But to whom can the administration of the affairs of a charity be so well entrusted as to those who chiefly contribute to its support? With whom can there be so strong a motive as with with those who have raised the funds, to take care that they are economically and legitimately applied? They are, besides, best fitted, by their local knowledge, to undertake the trust, and if it were withdrawn from them, it is to be feared they would cease to subscribe. On such grounds it would be advisable, without doubt, to leave the management entirely in the hands of the subscribers, provided it were really found that they ably conducted it. But the fact is otherwise. Of course I state the general impression made upon my mind, by the result of my inquiry in those parts of the country which I visited. The particular instances which I met with of well-regulated institutions, should rather be adduced to the credit of the individual managers and the officers themselves, than in favour of the system which is usually pursued. The only security under the existing law for the proper management of a dispensary, is to be found in the combination of gentlemen who subscribe to it. But they are in general content with paying their money, and do not consider that they are bound to do more. They seldom visit the institution, or take part personally in the regulation of its affairs. Even the committee they elect is merely nominal; no minutes kept of their proceedings; no meetings held; but every thing left to the medical officer or to the treasurer, who is probably his friend; and it is not to be expected, that in such a case, without the corrective influence of an active and intelligent superintendence on the one side and a sense of responsibility on the other, the charity to which they belong should fulfil its legitimate ends. One or other of the following evils is liable to arise; either a falling off in the activity of the charity, or an inert and inefficient state; an irregular performance of duty, or even palpable neglect; a growing or total indifference to the wants of the poor; a waste of the funds or an undue diversion of them, and relief improperly bestowed. Lastly, instances of peculation and jobbing with the funds may be added to these and other abuses, which I have had occasion to notice in the course of my remarks. Thus, in May 1833, the treasurer of the Charleville Dispensary died in debt above 300*l.* to the charity. He had returned to the committee, as paid, the druggist's bills, the salaries of the surgeon and apothecary, and other items, which all remained due at the time of his decease. The funds of the Cork General Dispensary had also been considerably embarrassed by a defalcation to the amount of upwards of 700*l.* on the part of the late treasurer, who, it should be observed, was still kept as accountant to the dispensary, at a salary of 20*l.* per annum. To meet the deficiency he had given up a deed, secured upon house property, and producing 50*l.* per annum, to be held by the institution, till the debt he had incurred shall be paid off; but no interest is accruing to the funds of the charity; and it was necessary, in consequence of their low state, to apply a legacy of 500*l.* to the liquidation of unpaid debts, the interest of which sum is lost also.* It is clear, however, from the cases of flagrant abuse just given, that some better regulations are required in respect to the office of treasurer. Either he should be obliged to give security, or the money, instead of being left to his keeping, be deposited in savings banks, but not in the name of the treasurer only.

By making the law precise in the several particulars to which I have alluded, the enormities and abuses incidental to the present system, and the defects arising out of its imperfect organization, would be in a great measure obviated. Still some expedient is required beyond an alteration of the law, some amendment in the mode of conducting the dispensaries, so that their actual management may be in strict conformity with the law. With this view I would suggest that clergymen of every denomination should be associated with the subscribers in the administration of the affairs of the charity; and that they and the treasurer, in virtue of his office, whether they subscribe or not, belong to the Committee. By putting such persons on the direction, and in full possession of such privileges as are enjoyed by the subscribers, they would feel that a certain responsibility attached to them, which would ensure their attending regularly at the meetings, and duly discharging the duties committed to them. As a further check against mismanagement, the plan has been suggested and partly acted upon in the county of Cork, of appointing a Board of Superintendence from among the grand jury. They would represent the interests of the landed proprietors, upon whom it has been proposed to levy the rate, and who ought to have the power of protecting themselves against any misapplication or useless expenditure of the funds by a strict surveillance over the charity. Such a Board is appointed for the superintendence of gaols, and might be extended to the medical institutions. Its object would be to audit and certify the accounts, examine the reports, inspect the establishment; not however to interfere with the internal management so much as to exercise a controlling power over it. But besides visiting the charities themselves, the grand jurors should appoint a local medical inspector. This they already do for the gaols; and at all events a medical man is best fitted, whether it be for the inspection of the gaols or the medical institutions, and he could undertake the duties of both offices at the same or a small additional salary.

There is still another expedient to which I must direct attention before I conclude this part of my subject; I mean the annexation of a ward with a few beds to certain dispensaries.

It is objected that this appurtenance or appendage would tend to a permanent heavy increase of expense, the beds being always filled, or nominally so, with one or other description of patients; but it should be considered whether the advantages resulting from such a plan would not be more than commensurate with the expense attending it. A great deal of the the distress among the poorer classes is, beyond a doubt, to be ascribed to the inadequacy of medical relief, especially to the want of hospital accommodation. The second part of my Report will embrace this division of the subject, but it may be here remarked that painful instances were stated in the course of my inquiry to have occurred of late, in which persons seized with fever or cholera, or to whom an accident had befallen, were obliged to be abandoned to their fate, left under a hedge, or in a ditch or pit by the road-side to perish, because there was no place to take them to. If a wandering beggar were taken sick, he had no alternative, in several places, but to lie in the open air; sometimes the poor would build a hut over him. This had been done in the case of a wretched object whom I found by the road-side between Portumna and Eyrecourt (county Galway). A man seized with cholera at Bantry, after lying all day in a boat, was put into a store, where he died. A woman attacked in the same way had expired in a ditch. At Kenmare similar instances were adduced. Also in the evidence upon Athlone Dispensary (Westmeath side) the case is mentioned of some unfortunate persons being ill of fever, who were turned out of their lodgings, and could find no shelter; two of them died.

Besides the sacrifice of life there are other evils resulting from this exclusion; it tends much to the extension of pauperism. The external assistance afforded by the dispensary does not relieve the poor man from the expense attending sickness. His capital is consumed in procuring drinks, sustenance and other necessities to alleviate the sufferings of the sick bed; his clothes and furniture are pledged to supply his wants in the course of a protracted illness, and when at length he recovers, he finds himself and his family reduced to beggary.

However, to avoid expense, it is not proposed to connect more than from five to ten beds with each dispensary, and only in those medical stations where the distance of the county infirmary is so great that although taxed for its support, the inhabitants of the district cannot have recourse to it. To give an idea of the permanent expense of such an establishment, beyond the first outlay for fitting up, furnishing, &c., it may be stated that each bed, if constantly occupied throughout the year, would cost about 15*l.*, taking one case with another, which would include the maintenance of the patient, with medicine and nurse-tenders. There need be no additional expense for medical attendance.

County Infirmarys and Fever Hospitals.

County Infirmarys.

COUNTY INFIRMARIES have been established in Ireland under 5, 45, 47 Geo. 3, and various other Statutes, with an especial view to the treatment of accidents, casualties and surgical cases of all sorts. There is one Infirmary for each county, and funds are provided by voluntary contributions and by a cess levied upon the county at large, but which must not exceed 600*l.*, the largest sum allowed by Act of Parliament. Notwithstanding the small amount of this limit, it is chiefly by means of the cess that the Infirmarys are supported. Such at least was the case with those which I inspected. They were possessed of little or no property of any description; the subscriptions amounted only to a small sum, and the fines from petty sessions, as well as the grant from the Treasury, are scarcely worth taking into account. Thus it appears that the main charge is borne by the county.

There are several points of objection to the present law, and to the practice under it, for the regulation of the Infirmarys. First, as only one Infirmary is contemplated by law, or has, with very few exceptions, been established for each county, without reference to its size, the provision thus made for the relief of the sick poor, whatever may be its other defects, is wholly inadequate to the wants of a large and extensive population. Secondly, as a tax is raised off the land for the support of each Infirmary, and made payable throughout the county, a great portion of the expense, particularly in the large counties, falls upon persons who live in rateable districts, but at too great a distance to avail themselves of the institution. And hence the inmates of the Hospitals which I visited were generally confined to the immediate neighbourhood. Either means were wanting to transport patients from a distance, or there was no subscriber in the way from whom to procure an order for the Infirmary. Great inconvenience was felt under the present practice of allowing to subscribers alone the privilege of ordering admissions, nor had this restriction had the desired effect of increasing the number of those contributing to the support of the charity. Further, a subscriber's order being made absolute, the medical attendant was left without any discretionary power, and he might thus be obliged to reject urgent cases in order to make room for others of comparatively little importance, but in which the applicants were furnished with tickets. Whence it sometimes occurred to those who had been at the pains of sending a poor man to the county Infirmary, to be further called upon for the cost of supporting him in lodgings in the town until such time as he could be received in the Hospital. In the Roscommon Infirmary any expense thus incurred is defrayed by the institution.

Not only great expense is incurred, but great injury may result from the removing of patients, and the delay which is thereby occasioned before remedial measures can be had recourse to, if the distance be considerable. How frequently does the chance of recovery depend upon procuring assistance at the time and on the spot? In bad accidents, and certain cases requiring operation, life itself is risked by delay or removal.

The last but not the least objection, which I shall here notice, is grounded upon the exclusiveness of the cases admissible into the Infirmarys. I frequently met with persons labouring under disease, of an acute as well as lingering character, in the towns where the Infirmaries are situate, who were refused admission by the existing regulations, although suffering for the want of proper treatment, which could only be had where Hospital accommodation was provided. For these reasons it had become a very general opinion in the parts of the country where I went in the course of my inquiry, that it would be much more for the public benefit to establish District Hospitals, upon a smaller scale and for general purposes, in situations properly selected throughout the county, in preference to any single institution, of whatever size and however well conducted, which bore an exclusive character; for such an institution could at best effect only a local or partial good, for which it was considered hard, nay unjust, to impose a tax upon the entire county.

The town of Mallow afforded a striking exemplification of the truth of the foregoing remarks. Although possessed of a County Infirmary, and favoured, it would naturally be presumed, over other places on this account, instead of gaining by this circumstance, it seemed to be really upon the whole the worse off for it. In no town, which I visited did the sick indigent inhabitants stand more in need of medical aid; while, as far as the county was concerned, such cures as were undertaken at the Infirmary could only be appreciable at furthest to a very limited extent in the midst of so large and populous a community.

Three or four sheds placed against a wall, a mere temporary arrangement for the reception of cholera cases, low, narrow and ill-ventilated, crowded with beds touching along the sides, and barely leaving space enough to pass down the middle; such a mean and wretched contrivance was the only kind of accommodation for the treatment of fever for the town and neighbourhood of Mallow, distinguished as being the resort of numerous strangers and the residence of an opulent gentry. The calamitous consequence was, that by far the greater number of such cases were entirely unrelieved and unattended to, while the few which could be received into the cholera or fever-sheds were placed under such disadvantageous circumstances as very materially to diminish the chance of cure. Not only febrile affections, but all internal complaints, in fact the bulk of diseases with which humanity is afflicted, are inadmissible into this Infirmary, which is appropriated to the treatment of cases purely surgical; whence it happens that the beds are sometimes occupied by patients with old ulcers on their legs, eruptions on their skin, with ophthalmic, syphilitic and various chronic ailments of a mild and simple character, which might be treated for the most part quite as well if they only attended as externs once or twice a week at the Dispensary.

This anomaly, if so it can be termed, is not chargeable upon the medical officers appointed to the Infirmary. It is incumbent upon them to admit such cases as the above, in turn, when provided with a subscriber's order, and there was no lack of attention on their part to a proper discharge of their duties. It is not therefore to them that I impute the least blame, but it is to the principle that I object which obtains in the management of all these establishments; for of a truth that system must be bad which goes to provide intern accommodation in cases where it might without any injury be dispensed with, and leaves others at the same time to perish for the very want of it.

Instead of being an infirmary for the treatment of certain forms of disease only, and these neither the most common nor in general of the most distressing nature, it would be much more serviceable if converted into a general hospital, and thrown open for the reception of medical as well as surgical cases. Physicians and surgeons should then be alike appointed, and the beds distributed between them, and all truly necessitous persons admitted, if seriously ill, even without the form of a recommendation, giving a preference always to accidents and fever cases. There need be no fear of infection, if only the proper precautions be taken, if the ventilation be good, fumigation used, and a due regard had to cleanliness. This is well known to be the case by what is seen every day in the London hospitals, where no evil arises from the admixture of fever with other cases. But, if most approved of, one ward or more might be given up to those who are suffering from fever, and they might thus be kept strictly separate from the rest of the patients. In order to promote its usefulness, a dispensary ought to be attached to each hospital, either on the ground floor, but having no communication with the interior of the building, or a little apart from it, as at the lodge by the entrance of the Roscommon Infirmary. The same medical officers might take the charge of this department also; or if the hospital be large, others might be appointed whose duty it would be to make domiciliary visits to the sick poor, besides attending regularly at the dispensary, in the way I have already recommended when treating of this class of institutions. An hospital conducted upon a plan of this description could not fail to be of real service. It would provide intern accommodation for such cases, whether surgical or medical, acute or chronic, as stood in need of it, and for such cases only; and further, instead of their having to seek recourse at a great distance, as they are too frequently obliged to do under the present system, it would be within the reach of all persons living in the district allotted to it, where the rate is payable, and thus no one having a just claim to relief need go without it.

Tralee contains a fever hospital as well as a county infirmary; but upon the principle just explained, viz. that of establishing a general hospital, instead of hospitals for the relief of the poor being affected with fever or other particular forms of disease, which are not to be recommended except in large towns, I would suggest the propriety of consolidating the two institutions, and carrying them on together in the fever hospital building. This is a neat commodious edifice, capable of containing a hundred beds, and has recently been erected at a considerable expense to the county. It is well placed contiguous to the town, in an open plot of ground of about an acre. Thus it is exceedingly well adapted for an hospital, much more so than the infirmary, where the accommodation only admits of twenty-three beds; the rooms are small, and the site not so eligible. But on inspecting the fever hospital, I found that, owing to the scarcity of funds, it was made but little use of. It contained but 20 patients, and about twice that number of beds, and such wards as were occupied presented a comfortless appearance, being almost destitute of furniture, and not kept in a neat and cleanly manner.

As a fever hospital exclusively, so large a building is not required at ordinary times, and when fever prevails epidemically, it would not of itself prove sufficient. Temporary accommodation must then be provided, and a barn, house or other empty tenement be applied to the reception of fever cases. Ample powers are given by Act of Parliament (59 Geo. 3.) to meet an emergency of this sort. By this statute, parishes are enabled to elect boards of health, to remove nuisances, establish hospitals, and adopt such measures for precaution and cure as become necessary by the occurrence of the calamity; the expense of all such proceedings to be defrayed by a parochial rate. The provisions of this statute are well adapted to the exigencies of the case, if they be only acted up to, and officers of health appointed as the Act directs, but which I did not find sufficiently attended to.

A stronger argument may be adduced in favour of uniting the two establishments than that which I have grounded on the fitness of the Fever Hospital building for a general hospital, and the little need there is of it for its present purpose. From a return of the expenditure, which is given in the local report, and comparing it with the estimated expenditure for one hospital with as many beds as the two contain together, it will be seen that a considerable saving of expense may be effected by their consolidation; at the same time the efficiency of each may be increased and secured by an improved management. Instead of appointing a mere nominal committee, certain ex officio governors and subscribers as committee-men, who did not attend to their duties, but left every thing to the medical officers and treasurers, an active and vigilant supervision is required for the better administration of the affairs of the two institutions. Much complaint was made of the low state of the funds, and yet it was not usual for articles to be supplied by contract, and a heavy expense was sometimes incurred where it might certainly have been avoided. Thus in the account of the expenditure of the Fever Hospital for 1833, furnished me at my request by the treasurer, but not satisfactorily drawn up, I find an item of 70 l. set down for leeches. The number of patients as returned in the hospital that year was 225; in 1831, the number was 443, or nearly double, and charge for leeches, 36 l. 10 s. In 1832, the number was 291, and charge for leeches, 28 l. 15 s. The total expense for medicines for the three years was only 87 l. 7 s. 5 d. Upon inquiry, I learnt that the leeches were supplied by the apothecary to the institution at a charge of 1 s. each. The same charge was made at the infirmary, where the average yearly cost of leeches was stated to be about 25 l.

If leeches can only be obtained at so high a price, the obvious remedy would be to substitute cupping, or other depletory measures, as I found the medical attendants of other fever hospitals were in the habit of doing. I do not mean to prefer any charge against the medical officer; but I would observe, that the fact of these leeches being supplied by the apothecary, who was allowed, in some instances, if I mistake not, to prescribe himself, gives an opportunity for the imputation of bad management or jobbing, which ought not to be permitted in the economy of a public institution.

Roscommon.

The management of the Roscommon Infirmary, I found, was in like manner, left to the medical attendant and the acting or under treasurer. Here, however, I am happy to be able to state, that the very strictest economy was observed. Public notice was given of such articles as were required for the use of the institution, and every thing obtained upon the most reasonable terms. The medical duties were carefully performed, and great credit is due to the benevolent individual who took charge of the accounts, for the care he had bestowed on the subject, and for the zeal he evinced in the furtherance of this and various other charitable objects.

Qualification and Payment of the
Medical Officers.

The other statutory provisions for the regulation of the county infirmaries refer to the qualification of the medical officer, and the amount of his salary. The salary is fixed at 100 l., Irish currency, or 89 l.; and no person is eligible to the appointment, except he be a member or licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians or Surgeons in Ireland. (7 Geo. 3.)

The clause containing this restriction (invidious as it may now appear, but necessary at the time) was no doubt introduced into the Act for the purpose of securing the services of a skilful and efficient surgeon to the institution. The members of the Irish College of Surgeons are at great pains and expense to acquire sound professional knowledge and experience, and are subjected to a very strict ordeal before entering upon practice; and hence they are entitled to preference as a general rule. Still, the reasons just assigned do not constitute sufficient ground for keeping up a species of monopoly, which is objectionable at the present day; nor is it any longer desirable to adhere to a rule which excludes from the county infirmaries, graduates of the London, Edinburgh and Glasgow Colleges, or other persons duly qualified, who shall have obtained a liberal professional education, and have been examined and certified accordingly, in some other accredited school. It would also tend to the advancement of surgical science, and to the benefit of the public, if the number of the medical officers to each infirmary were increased, as well as the distinction in question done away with.

I have already explained, under the head of salary, in the first part of my Report, the general general principle which ought to be followed out in awarding pay to medical practitioners, in the discharge of public duties. For services of a higher order the rate of remuneration should be increased. Still the infirmaries being situate in towns, where there is opportunity and field for acquiring private practice, pecuniary compensation is not so much an object to the medical attendant, as it is in the country villages, where he depends for his livelihood, chiefly, if not altogether, upon the emoluments of office.

By the 47 Geo. 3. Grand Juries were empowered to raise certain sums for the support of FEVER HOSPITALS: but after the contagious fever of 1817, additional facilities were given, by advances from the Government, for their erection, repayable by instalments, and authorising Grand Jury Presentments for sums not exceeding double the amount of private subscriptions. (See 58 Geo. 3.)

Under these statutes, fever hospitals have been very generally established in the county of Cork. It was only in one or two instances that I could hear of the Grand Jury having shown any indisposition to grant assistance, when the expediency of the case had been fairly made out. At Bantry, however, in 1831, the clergy of the town raised a subscription of 78*l.*, and offered it to the Grand Jury to build a fever hospital with; but the application was refused, on what ground I could not understand, since there is an extreme want of hospital accommodation at this place, which I have elsewhere pointed out. At Kilworth, owing to its vicinity to Fermoy, the like necessity does not exist; but here, after a nobleman had expended 300*l.* in building an hospital, he could not make it available for want of funds. This was owing, however, to the gentlemen of the neighbourhood refusing to subscribe, rather than to the Grand Jury refusing to present. In Kerry only two fever hospitals* have been established; in Roscommon, none. It becomes, therefore, a question, whether their establishment under certain given circumstances shall not be made compulsory.

The principal fever hospital in Kerry, is that at Tralee, which I have already noticed. At Killarney, the funds of the hospital were in a flourishing state at the time of my visit. They had been recruited by means of contested elections for the appointment of physician, and were husbanded by the treasurer, doubtless with the best intentions, but not with the happiest effect. The furniture of the hospital was scanty; the bedding in a bad state; the pharmacy poorly supplied, and the wards in need of painting, cleaning and repair. The salaries of the physicians were low, and the apothecary paid by a paltry stipend of 15*l.* per annum, although daily employed at the institution. There was, however, every disposition, on the part of the treasurer, and the gentlemen subscribing to the institution, to make such arrangements as seemed best calculated to restore it to an efficient state. Meetings of the subscribers were summoned with this view, at which the assistant commissioners were invited to attend, and several regulations passed at their suggestion.

At Youghal and Kinsale the managing officers had done all that lay in their power to render the medical charities serviceable to the public. The physicians were in the habit of seeing poor patients at the hospitals and at their own houses, and of attending them when called upon, putting compensation out of the question: but their meritorious services were too often frustrated from want of sufficient funds and proper intern hospital accommodation.

At Bandon, a few years ago, the resident medical practitioners, five in number, offered to take charge of the hospital; but the committee declined their offer of gratuitous attendance, preferring to have a physician attached to the institution, who should be a paid and responsible agent. No fault could be found with the way in which the medical duties were performed by this gentleman; still it would have facilitated the means of procuring relief, if the committee had adopted the plan subsequently proposed, which was to allow each physician a share of pay, and so to enlist them all in the cause of the poor; but they over-ruled this plan also. At Fermoy and Cove there was no lack of attention on the part of the medical officers belonging to the fever hospitals; and indeed, generally speaking, these charities, too numerous too particularize, were well conducted. In all, however, so great was the necessity felt of accommodation for surgical cases, that either a wing was added to the hospital, or certain wards appropriated for that purpose. It was a common remark in all these cases with medical men, who did not live in its immediate vicinity, that as far as they were concerned there might as well be no County Infirmery at all in existence.

The medical institutions at Cork are the North and South Charitable Infirmaries, the House of Recovery or Fever Hospital, the hospital attached to the House of Industry, the Dispensary or Humane Society, and the Lunatic Asylum. From the enumeration of these establishments it would seem that the sick poor of Cork are well off for medical succour; but the fact is far otherwise. When it is stated that there are but sixteen beds, in the aggregate, for the reception of medical cases (not febrile), and less than three times that number for surgical cases and casualties of all sorts, it is plain that with such very limited means but little can be done for the alleviation and cure of disease in a city with a population of more than 100,000. This very defective provision in point of intern accommodation in the two infirmaries has contributed to the extension of pauperism in a very remarkable degree. It is become the common expedient with the poor, in the absence of all other means, to apply as as paupers to the House of Industry; where they are no sooner received than they complain of being ill, and so contrive to get passed into the hospital belonging to it. Here however when once admitted they are sure of being well attended to. It was most gratifying to remark how an institution which had sprung up under such extraordinary circumstances, and full even to excess, could be so well sustained by such slender means. Nothing could surpass the neatness and order conspicuous throughout, or the attention paid by the medical officers to the cases committed to their care and skill.

A like tribute of praise is due to the physicians and others concerned in the management of the House of Recovery: a more excellent establishment of the sort there cannot be; and it is only just to the medical gentlemen attached to the two Infirmaries to state that they discharged their duties with ability and zeal, receiving little or no compensation for their arduous services. That the charities, however, in the cause of which they were respectively engaged, did not prosper as they might have done, even with the very limited resources of which they were possessed, up to the date of my visit in the one instance, and in the other only till within late years—may be ascribed to the faulty, if not fraudulent, practices which obtained in the management, in spite of remonstrance on the part of the medical attendants, and through the neglect of the trustees. In proof of this I shall extract largely from the medical evidence upon the North Charitable Infirmery, and allow the facts there recorded, which were only elicited after a lengthened and searching investigation, to speak for themselves.

On referring to the book of proceedings, it appears that scarcely any regular meeting of the governors has been held for the last forty years to elect trustees according to the provisions of the Act of Incorporation of 1744: and although this Act requires that the accounts should be examined every month by five trustees, they seem for many months together to have been entered in the book at the same time, and frequently in the presence of only one and seldom more than two trustees. Indeed no other signature is to be found in the account-book for several years in succession than that of the late surgeon, who was also a trustee.

Having understood that a meeting of the trustees of the North Infirmery was fixed for August 5th, the assistant commissioners determined upon being there. After waiting for an hour beyond the appointed time, the son-in-law of the apothecary to the establishment made his appearance, but with this exception the meeting passed unattended. It may be taken as a specimen of the generality of the annual meetings, at which the attendance had so much fallen off, that the apothecary stated he was desired by one of the only two gentlemen who were present on the last occasion to re-appoint the same persons as trustees for the year following. The assistant commissioners attended also at the infirmery on August 6th, which was the day fixed for a monthly meeting; but no accounts were prepared, nor any trustee present. The treasurer did not attend either this or the former meeting, although he had fixed to do so.

At present it appears the whole business of the charity has been allowed to pass into the hands of the apothecary, who constitutes in himself the board of management; and besides being the apothecary to the institution, is the druggist, steward, accountant and collector, purveyor of stores of all kinds, whether food, fuel, medicine, furniture, or clothing. He finds the charity with every thing, and on his own terms, as nothing is obtained by contract.

As apothecary he receives a salary of 52*l.* 12*s.* per annum; but he has ceased to reside since 1832, when the hospital was given up for the reception of cholera cases. He has an assistant, however, at a salary of 37*l.*, who is provided with lodgings in the establishment. This assistant apothecary, as he is termed, is a young man and apprentice to the apothecary. He is totally incompetent to take the charge of the hospital, which is left to him in the absence of the attending medical officers; and there is no record of his appointment by the trustees or governors upon the books of the institution.

The medicines are all supplied by the apothecary, who keeps a large druggist's establishment in the city. Their cost appears to have been unreasonably high until lately, when the apothecary consented to charge the North Infirmery at the same rate that medicines were supplied by tender to the South Infirmery. On this account the bill for medicines has diminished of late years, although twice as many external patients have been prescribed for and supplied with medicine at the hospital: and although the number of beds has been increased by one-third since 1829, the annual expenditure is much the same as before that time. The same number of beds is, however, still maintained at even a considerably less expense at the South Infirmery.

The servants are all appointed and paid by the apothecary, and liable to be discharged at his pleasure. The number returned seems to be unnecessarily large for an establishment containing only 30 beds, or thereabouts. They consist of a door-keeper, a matron, two nurses, two kitchen-maids and an assistant kitchen-maid, as they were designated. It did not appear that there was any occasion for two of these servants, or, if in the house, that they were occupied in the service of the charity: and the washerwoman acknowledged that she had been employed for the last twenty years in washing for the apothecary and his family; and that articles were regularly sent from his private residence and made up at the institution, and no other work done by her, although everything was paid and found out of the funds of the charity.

The system of account-keeping—if system it can be called—which is also conducted by the apothecary, reflects anything but credit either on those who made up the accounts, or those who audited and passed them: and it really is matter of astonishment that a more clear, explicit and satisfactory statement of the expenditure of the public money should never have have been required by those who were appointed trustees to the charity for the express purpose of being guardians of the public purse. It would scarcely be supposed that the heaviest charges on the list, frequently exceeding fifty, and amounting occasionally to one hundred pounds and upwards, recurring monthly or nearly so, should be entered under the very vague and general head of "sundries." Under this head are included coals, chandlery, grocery, spirits, and repairs of all kinds, &c. &c.; and on examining the steward's, or rather the apothecary's private book to ascertain the average annual cost of such articles, it was found that they varied in a most remarkable degree, and yet they ought to have been pretty constant, seeing that the number of patients was for the most part the same. Many bills had been allowed to run on from year to year, and the charge for coals, soap, candles, grocery, &c. was most extravagant.

In the year 1832 a report was presented to the trustees by the physicians and surgeons of the infirmary, recommending the appointment of a monthly committee, who, in conjunction with them, should provide for the internal management and economy of the hospital. They urged the necessity of establishing a regular dietary, whereby there could be a daily check upon the consumption and cost, and also suggested that all articles should be supplied by contract after public advertisement. Their recommendation was referred to a committee, who never reported at all upon it, and things were allowed to go on as before.

The only person besides the apothecary, who seems to take any part in the management of the North Infirmary, is the treasurer. He acts without a salary; but he gives no security for the money placed in his hands, nor can he be said to account to the governors, as they scarcely ever hold a meeting. In 1832, a legacy of 500*l.* was left to the charity, and an order made by the board to have it lodged in the savings bank. This order bears the date of May 7th, 1832, but it had not been complied with in the summer of 1834, at the time of the visit of the assistant commissioners: and they were told that repeated individual applications had been made to the treasurer to have the money so lodged, but without effect. It is expedient that the money should not be thus left at the entire disposal of any treasurer, as in the time of the last treasurer there seems to have been a good deal of misapplication and trafficking with the funds. Various sums of money belonging to the charity had been lent to different persons for their own uses at different times, without, it would seem, any order of the board or the sanction of the trustees. Two large sums, one 646*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, and the other 369*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, were returned as still due, together with interest, which had accrued upon the latter sum to as much or even more than the original debt. And at this time there is a Chancery suit pending, in which the charity is concerned, a bill having been filed against the trustees to recover a property mortgaged to them for a sum of money lent by them to one of their own body. If the trustees be not personally liable, the expense of litigation must fall heavily upon the funds, and if the decision be unfavourable to the charity, it will be reduced to almost a state of insolvency.

Thus charged with debt, involved in litigation, the remnant of its property imperfectly secured, its income small and diminishing, (the number of subscribers being reduced to nearly the number of trustees appointed by the Act, and being for the most part personal friends of the officers), this institution seems to be fast approaching to a critical period, beyond which it is doubtful whether it can continue to exist. The establishment itself is as worn-out as its resources. Only 17 out of 34 beds were kept up at the time of my visit, and the furniture, sacks for straw bedding, sheets, blankets, domestic and pharmaceutical utensils, &c., whether from decay or dirt, were scarcely fit for use. Admitting that this in a great measure might be owing to the expectation of moving shortly out of the old building into the new one, still it is clear that the new infirmary cannot by any possibility be made available for any useful purpose, unless there be a total change in the system, unless each department be remodelled, except that of the physicians and surgeons, and above all, the Act of Incorporation be done away with, under which the North Infirmary has been mismanaged for so many years, and dwindled down into a mere family concern, while ostensibly existing as a public charity.

There is only one point to which I shall refer in the past management of the South Charitable Infirmary. It will be a much more agreeable and useful task to describe the praiseworthy manner in which it is at present conducted. The late treasurer, it appears, who continued to act even after he removed to Dublin, was in the habit of paying the debts of the institution by notes of hand or bills, and articles were declared paid for while in fact the payment was not effected till some time after. This serves as an additional illustration to the instances already given* of the faulty manner in which the funds of public charities are liable to be administered, even when entrusted to individuals of the highest respectability. At present the funds are very properly placed in the savings bank; and thus, besides being better secured, they are made to bear interest. A further improvement would be if they were so placed in the name of more than one individual.

The trustees of the South Infirmary, anxious to diminish as far as possible the great disproportion of hospital accommodation to the wants of the poor of so large a city, made in 1831, at the recommendation of the physicians and surgeons, an entire change in the management of the establishment. Since that period they have thrown open to free competition the supply of medicines, provisions, coals, and in fact every article which could be thus obtained on better terms. Contracts are also made every half year for particular articles when any advantage can be gained by it. They at the same time adopted the military system of diet-rolls, tabular extracts of expenditure, &c., with such modifications as were applicable to the institution. From these and other regulations they are now enabled to ascertain at any period not only the actual rate of gross expenditure, but also the most minute details of each article of consumption; and experience has fully warranted the confident opinion expressed by the medical officers in their recommendation, that the advantage of system and regularity thus introduced would be still less than its economy. This will be readily seen by comparing the average outlay and amount of relief of two years before, and two years after the adoption of these measures.

Thus we have, on comparing the two periods, an actual saving of 145*l.* 19*s.* 9½*d.*, with a mean increase of 35 Interns, 2,626 Externs, or 2,661 in the total number of patients: and this, notwithstanding a deduction which should be made for repairs in the latter period, added to the disadvantage of another circumstance which is not taken into account, that in the two former years, the lock wards being then open, nearly one-half the diets consisted of bread and milk.*

When retrenchments upon so large a scale (which allowed the opening of additional beds) could thus be effected by the adoption of a better system of management in the South Infirmary, it must be matter of surprise to all, as well as of reproach to the governing body of the North Infirmary, that they should persist up to the last in the old system, uninfluenced and unreclaimed by the good example set by their sister institution.

The new building for the North Infirmary has been raised by a fund of 3,300*l.* derived chiefly from a legacy which was left for the promotion of some charitable object, and applied in this way, and added to by subscriptions. It stands upon a piece of ground which was formerly the garden to the old Infirmary, in an elevated position, but hemmed in on all sides by houses of the poorest description. A lot of tenements in front of it, and much wanted for an approach, were offered for sale at a low price not long since, but as the trustees never held a meeting, nothing could be done in the matter. These dwellings have since been put in thorough repair, and of course cannot now be purchased, but at a considerable additional expense. The new hospital is substantially and neatly built, and well planned in the interior. It contains two large wards, several smaller ones, and apartments for officers and servants. It offers good accommodation for 140 patients; but when finished and paid for, the annual income will be under 500*l.*; a sum which is only sufficient to provide a fourth part of the number of beds it could be made to contain.† Unless, therefore, some means be found for supplying this deficiency, much money will have been expended to very little purpose, and the advantages of excellent intern accommodation which this building is capable of affording, and of which Cork is so much in need, will be in a great measure lost to the public. To obviate so deplorable a result it was proposed, in the absence of better means, to unite the funds of the two infirmaries for the support of the new hospital. It was shown that a considerable saving might be thus effected, that the number of beds might be doubled without adding to the expenditure, by only consolidating the establishments; and an Act of Parliament was at length obtained for this end at an expense of 600*l.*, which was taken out of the fund for the new building. It is certainly most desirable that this plan should now be carried into full effect, if sufficient funds can be paid for the support of only one infirmary. It would be worse than folly in such a case to attempt to evade the Act, and renounce the power thus afforded, after having been at so much pains and cost to obtain it, of extending hospital accommodation to double its present amount. In the event of a union, the medical staffs of both the North and South Infirmaries might be retained, and discharge alternate duty every month, or for six months at a time, until reduced to the required number by resignation or otherwise. But who can doubt that the two Infirmaries are indispensable? Reckoning 60 beds

* According to a calculation made by Dr. Harvey, the cost of a milk diet is only 3½*d.*, a low diet, 3*d.*, and a full diet, 4*d.*, at the contract prices of the South Infirmary. The average cost of one diet was about 5*d.* at other hospitals.

† The annual expense of an hospital establishment, containing 140 beds, may be estimated at £. 1,800, or at most at £. 2,000. Thus, —

60 beds to the South* Infirmary and 140 to the North Infirmary, what are 200 beds among a population exceeding 100,000, for medical and surgical cases, and casualties of all sorts, omitting fever cases, which are sent to the House of Recovery? In so large and opulent a city, considerable aid ought to be derived from private contribution. The feelings of humanity and a due and enlightened sense of what is owing to society, must ensure the accomplishment of so useful an object. But if this resource prove unavailing, so great are the exigencies of the case, that it should be done at the public expense, and a rate levied upon the town to the amount required. And should the plan of establishing district hospitals be adopted, one of them might most advantageously be placed in the city of Cork, and 40 beds appropriated for this purpose at the new infirmary; the expense of which, of course, would be borne by the county. If this proposition be carried into effect for the two Infirmarys, and the Fever Hospital be maintained on its present efficient footing, a great advance will be made in this place towards providing effectual medical relief for the sick poor; and it may be further increased by remodelling the Dispensary with branch stations in different parts of the city and the suburbs, so as to comprise the separate establishments at Douglas and the Strand Road. The officers of the Dispensary may thus be enabled to transmit into the Hospitals cases of acute and severe disease, whether medical or surgical, or of febrile form, as soon as they shall be duly reported. But at present there is no co-operation or understanding between the charities, and much mischief arises, together with waste of means, from the poor attending the Infirmarys and Dispensary all at the same time, taking the physic given at each upon the calculation, that if one be good, three must be better. This one of the medical gentlemen in the town assured me was a constant practice.

The Cork Lunatic Asylum is intended for the protection and treatment of the destitute idiots and insane of the county and city of Cork, who are received upon the certificate of two magistrates.† It is under the direction of the governors of the House of Industry, but with distinct funds, obtained by grand jury presentments, on the certificate of the physician (who is the chief officer of the establishment) as to the probable amount required. The expenditure of the governors is controlled by the grand juries at each assizes; but it is important to add that the single clause of 27 Geo. 3, under which the asylum is conducted, provides no mode of check or system of government, although it gives an unlimited power of obtaining money on presentment.

Cork Lunatic Asylum.

The asylum consists of 197 cells, 10 feet by 6, and of fifteen other sleeping apartments from 50 feet by 20, to 14 feet square, with eating rooms or day-halls for each ward. It contained 353 patients at the time of my visit, 177 being males, and 176 females. It was stated that an excess of males invariably came from the country, and of females from the city. The annual expenditure upon the average of the last four years was upwards of four thousand pounds (4,098*l.*).‡

From the great size of the county as well as the city, and the indiscriminate admission of all classes of the insane, the pressure of cases is always heavy, and the number constantly accumulating in the house, for which there is no vent but death;—such are congenital idiots and confirmed epileptics, of which there were as many as 88, and other incurable cases of the like kind. Thus the institution had become crowded far beyond the proper means of accommodation. No less than 40 of the inmates were huddled together every night into one apartment, littered down with straw, a practice which had led to the most disgusting consequences. In the yards too by day it was almost impossible to preserve order and quiet in such a promiscuous assemblage of persons in every stage and variety of lunacy. Neither was the want of a proper separation the chief evil; for although it cannot be denied that occupation of some kind or other is of the very first importance in the successful treatment of insanity, yet the lunatics were left in general with little or nothing to do, which could serve to engage their attention. Some sat moping about the day-rooms or in the corners, disgusting, drivelling objects, who had survived the loss of every sense; but the greater part collected in the open yards, mere idle spectators of the follies and ravings, which were being enacted before them by chattering, grinning idiots, or their more turbulent and contumacious brethren, who, although harmless from being confined in strait waistcoats, would still be threatening and vociferating. Thus it appeared that even those which were favourable cases for a cure, were placed under circumstances which could not but militate against their recovery.

To the present physician, however, even under the existing arrangements, imperfect as they unquestionably are (which as I have remarked, is chiefly owing to the excess of patients) the establishment is nevertheless much indebted. Before his appointment, as I was informed, no kind of classification had been attempted: idiots were mixed with maniacs, and these with convalescents, to their mutual torment and danger. From the inadequacy of attendants, 80 patients out of 287 had been for months confined to their cells, many of them crippled in consequence, and male keepers were in charge of female wards. Through his exertions additional wards have been built, and an hospital for invalids was being erected at the time of my visit. A kind of fourfold distribution of the patients had also been effected, and other judicious regulations introduced for their better management and treatment. The keepers had been doubled in each ward and yard, by which excitement was abated and confinement

* In the South Infirmary there is at present accommodation for this number, and it might be increased even to 100, at a small expense, if necessary.

ment and personal restraint dispensed with in many instances; and at the same time female delicacy was respected and preserved by the exclusion of male keepers from the female wards. Something too had been done with the view of finding employment for the lunatic patients. The cooking, washing, and the needle-work which used to be attended to in the House of Industry, are now performed in the asylum, together with the painting, gardening, scouring and cleaning; and the lunatic patients are in some cases induced to work by promising them a small gratuity, to be laid out in clothes or hoarded for them for the season of their discharge, to supply them with the means of returning to the distant parts of the extensive county. In addition, it may be stated that the greatest possible cleanliness was observable in the cells, wards and yards, and indeed in every part of the establishment.

That the principles of forbearance and conciliation direct the treatment of this asylum, may fairly be inferred from the little restraint which was to be witnessed, and the very few cases under confinement. One case, however, I shall particularly allude to, as a circumstance occurred during the visit of the assistant commissioners which was at the time made the ground for a report prejudicial to the character of the medical and other officers belonging to the establishment. It was the case of a maniac, of a hopeless and intractable nature. Upon going to his cell we found him with his hands tied and his feet secured to the bedstead, crouching under the straw, with scarcely any clothes about him; and anxious to ascertain whether he had been crippled or injured in any way by the coercive measures which it became necessary to resort to from the violent and outrageous bearing of the patient, we desired that his handcuffs should be removed, but the keeper was unable to loose them. He succeeded, however, after a time, by means of assistance which he had procured; and it was then found that the difficulty had arisen from the lock being stopped up with plastering off the wall, which had been driven in by the maniac striking his arms against the wall of the cell, as he was constantly doing. When released I examined him with care, but did not detect any bruises or marks of violence upon the wrists or other parts of his person. Understanding likewise that he had been visited from time to time during his confinement, I did not consider that a case had been made out, implying a want of proper attention or humanity on the part of the attendants; on the contrary, I looked upon it as an accident, which might have occurred in any asylum however well regulated.*

Some idea of the degree of success obtained by the physician, since his appointment, may be gathered from his reports, printed and published annually, from which it appears that the average annual admissions exceed a hundred for the last eight years, and that those cured or so relieved as to be removed by friends, amount to two-thirds, and the deaths to one-fifth, or nearly so, of the whole number. But even if this be a very favourable result, which beyond a doubt it is, it must still be presumed that the amount of success would be further increased, if the treatment were conducted under less adverse circumstances; if the institution was less crowded, employment found for the patients, curables and incurables less blended together, and that space which is now appropriated to the safe custody of incurable lunatics, was more usefully employed in the treatment of cases in which the probabilities of recovery still exist.

The physician enjoys a salary of 175*l.*; 100*l.* on account of the county, and 75*l.* for the city; but his duties are onerous; in fact he may be said to have the entire charge of the establishment; the moral governor, as he is called, being only a subordinate officer, and the surgeon admitted only when his particular skill is required. Whatever of success, therefore, there may be (and I have shown it is not a little, due consideration being had to all the circumstances), is fairly to be ascribed to the ability, attention and method of cure of the superintending physician. How far it may be requisite for him to undertake the financial and general, as well as the medical management of the asylum, I do not pretend to say; but there can be no error in placing a professional gentleman of liberal education at the head of the affairs of such an establishment, in conformity with "the principle, which has of late been fully acknowledged in the treatment of mental alienation, that in all attempts to benefit and cure insane persons, they should be assigned to the care of the physician, and treated in all respects with an especial regard to cerebral disease."

In conclusion, I may observe that the Cork Lunatic Asylum was the only establishment of the kind which it came within the scope of my instructions to visit. I cannot, therefore, offer any opinion as to the propriety of converting it into a district lunatic asylum. For information in regard to the new district asylums, I beg to refer to the joint report of my "collaborateurs," the late Sir David Barry and Dr. Corrie.

Supplementary Remarks upon the sanitary state of the Districts visited.

Having thus completed my account of the different medical institutions which came under my observation, having noticed their constitution, management and control, their practical operation, and the defects and abuses to which they are severally liable, I might at once bring my Report to a close, as having satisfied the points of inquiry to which I was especially directed. But having been at some pains to make myself acquainted with the actual condition of the poorest classes, by personal inspection, and having with this intention visited the sick and indigent at their own dwellings, in company with the medical and other gentlemen who attended at our examinations, I shall better, I think, attain the object proposed to

* The poor maniac, of whom I have spoken, was carried off soon after by a diarrhoea. In consequence of his death, and statements reported to have been made about him, the Lunatic Committee instituted a full inquiry into his case, taking the testimony of the different persons concerned in the management of the asylum; the perusal of which cannot fail to remove any unfavourable impression, if, indeed, such a feeling should anywhere exist, after the explanation already given.

to me by the Board, if, before I conclude, I allude briefly to the sanitary state of the districts which I traversed, and the amount, as well as the nature and cause of the diseases which were prevalent; for the proper and effectual treatment of which the medical institutions have been established. But so much has already been laid before the public, in reference to these matters, through the labours of commissions, through Parliamentary investigations, and various official documents and returns, that it is unnecessary for me to go into lengthened details; and further, I have already adverted to them in the first part of my Report, under some of the heads into which the subject of the dispensaries is divided.

It cannot be a question with those who are at all conversant with the description of hospital patients, such as they are met with in the two countries, that there is not only a greater amount of disease, but that it is of a more aggravated and malignant character in Ireland, generally speaking, than in England, in Dublin than in London; and the cause must be as evident to an unprejudiced observer as the fact itself. It is to be attributed to the greater destitution and distress of the Irish than the English people, to their being worse lodged, clothed and fed, and the more general and excessive use amongst them of spirituous liquors. To point, as some persons are wont to do, to a few sturdy and robust individuals, whose stamina and natural powers have been proof against the debilitating circumstances of their condition, and to argue thence for the general excellence of their physical state, for the wholesomeness of their food, and in favour of their mode of life and habits, is to make the exception the rule. Those who have really mixed with the lowest classes in Ireland, whether in town or country, know full well how much more frequent are wan and haggard countenances, shattered constitutions, and the signs of a premature old age; and will recollect how often they have turned in pity and disgust from the painful and sickening scenes presented to them by squalid human objects, disfigured by disease, or a complication of abject penury and disease.

In the rural districts, and in the outskirts of towns, the poor Irish live in huts or cabins of mud or loose stones. Each hut consists of but a single apartment, and nothing is to be seen within but a pot to boil potatoes with, and a truss or wad of dirty straw, and some rags for a coverlid, under which the different members of the family creep at night, herding together for the sake of animal warmth, and often in a state approaching to nudity. The straw is not changed for six months together, although a few pence would purchase enough for a bed. Sometimes a table or a couple of stools may be seen, and a dresser with some crockery ware, but these and other common articles of furniture are for the most part wanting. The pig is invariably found in the same apartment; he has his corner assigned to him, and is considered to have the best right to be accommodated, as he furnishes the means of paying the rent. The muck-heap, next to the pig, is an object of especial care. The children are employed in scraping up dung off the roads and collecting materials of filth and ordure from all parts. Unless they can accumulate sufficient manure for the patch of potato ground, the crop, or in other words the very means of subsistence, would fail. A lane or alley is made up of rows of cabins of this kind, each cabin having its dung-heap treasured up under the window, if there be one, or by the door, with its constant accompaniment of a pool of stagnant water, each cabin being occupied by one or two families, with from four to six individuals in each family, so that the lanes are floating in filth, stopped up with rubbish, poisoned with noxious effluvia, and at the same time swarming with inhabitants. If the poor dwell in houses instead of hovels, it is surprising how many a house is made to contain. Partitions are run across each room for the accommodation of two or more families. The landlord never repairs, but leaves the houses to crumble about the heads of the tenants. The rent is about 12*d.* a week for a whole room, or 8*d.* for half, so that a small house of four or six rooms will bring in a yearly rent of 12*l.* or 15*l.*

When visiting these cabins I have found the inmates so destitute of clothes that they were unable to leave their homes, and they had often parted with everything, even to the rags upon their backs. The Catholic clergymen told me it was a common thing for them to stop away from chapel for want of clothes. I recollect upon going to visit a sick patient with the medical attendant to the dispensary at Athlone (Westmeath side), that I saw a grown-up girl skulking in the corner of the cabin, who was ashamed to be seen, and unable to go out in search of employment, because she had no decent clothes to put on. But it would be impossible to enumerate the various instances of utter destitution and distress of this kind which came before me. Those alone which I saw at Cork in company with the Rev. Mr. O'Connor would suffice to fill a volume, and the picture of extreme misery bore the same revolting character, although it might be shadowed out a little more darkly in one place, than in another, whether in Bantry or Kinsale, Kenmare or Killarney, Strokestown, or elsewhere in the three counties where I went in the course of my inquiry.

To the want of clothing and exposure to wet and cold, it was usual for medical men to refer the great prevalence of pulmonary affections. Coughs, colds, rheumatic pains, together with consumptions in those who were predisposed by constitutional taint or the combining influence of impoverished food, were caught by lying on the damp straw or the earth floor, broken up and holding pools of water. Bowel and stomach complaints, and innumerable cases of a dyspeptic form, were ascribed to the potato diet, or rather to the poor partaking of the potato when unfit for use, either from decay or its being unripe or imperfectly cooked. The coarsest kind of potato, called a "lumper," is preferred from its producing a more exuberant crop and its much larger size. It is eaten when only parboiled, as it goes further in this state; it sits heavier upon the stomach, and prevents a feeling of inanition for a longer time. In most places it forms the only kind of food for the poor, who eat it dry morning, noon noon and night, if they can afford three meals a day, or at best with the addition of a little milk or the variety of a salt herring. Wheaten bread, an egg, or piece of bacon are luxuries they never think of. Although it did not seem to be the general opinion of medical men that the constant use of any one article of food, if wholesome, would of itself be productive of disease, still they were agreed that the potato diet, for the reasons just stated, must be more or less injurious to the general health. The food too given to children is by no means adapted to their tender age. Infants of 12 months old are often fed upon fish in maritime towns, and it is a common practice with the wretched mother to sustain her offspring by transferring to it the morsel of potato which she has first prepared by masticating it herself. Such digestible substances as barley, oatmeal and rice, are scarcely attainable on account of their cost, trifling as it is. The season of the year at which the poor are particularly driven to subsist upon bad food is in the interval between the consumption of the old stock of potatoes and the coming in of the new crop; and upon referring to the dispensary books it will be found that there is an increase of gastric and enteric affections, of pyrosis, diarrhoea, dysentery, &c. during these months. It is precisely at this period, too, that fever is apt to prevail. The existence of fever in a greater or less degree may be taken as a criterion of the poverty of the people, especially in regard to the supply of food.

The scarcity at this time may be so great that the poorer classes are obliged to have recourse to weeds or to shell fish or what else they can collect along the shore for sustenance. A yellow weed, known by the name of "Prassick" and found everywhere growing among the corn, was pointed out to me as affording a common means of support. During the months of last June and July there was a great dearth of agricultural employment, and so much destitution in consequence that many persons actually perished from want. The truth of this statement was attested in particular by the medical attendant of the Dispensary at Kildorrery, by the Roman Catholic clergyman of the same place, and the gentlemen present at the examination. "It was not," they remarked, "from the scarcity of potatoes, and their consequent high price, that this took place, for potatoes were selling at 6*d.* per weight of 21 pounds during the whole time, but solely and entirely from the utter inability on the part of the poor to buy them at all." "If potatoes," they continued, "had been only 2*d.* or 3*d.* per weight, they would have been alike beyond their means. It was no uncommon occurrence at the time for labourers to work merely for their daily food, and while they were receiving it at the farmer's houses their wives and families went entirely unprovided for. Nor was this state of distress confined to the labouring classes alone; several instances occurred where gentlemen became security to millers for sacks of flour in favour of respectable farmers who were unable to purchase themselves. No relief was obtained from Government, and the only aid which the poor received consisted of about 15*l.* collected at the Roman Catholic chapel, and laid out in purchasing meal, which was distributed daily to some hundred individuals. The parish priest stated that Government advanced some money to one or two of the neighbouring parishes, but he was not acquainted with the circumstance at the time, otherwise he would have made application on behalf of his own flock. Before quitting Kildorrery I went with the medical officer to see a poor woman who had been recently delivered of twins. I found her in a wretched hovel and in a state of utter destitution, as she had been obliged to dispose of her crop of growing potatoes during the prevalence of the distress, which has been detailed above. "Her husband," she said, "was out at work, but received no pay for his labour, as he was only employed to work out some assistance which had been rendered to him at the time of the general pressure."

Subject to a periodically occurring scarcity, and wretchedly fed at other times; exposed to the vicissitudes of the climate, to wet and cold; to the pernicious influences of bad habitation and clothing; exhausted by task-work or toil undergone for a stipulated wage, or desponding for want of employment; distressed by so many combining causes of a moral and physical kind, constantly warring against their health and predisposed by their debilitated state;—where is the wonder that the Irish poor are peculiarly liable to disease; that fever, dysentery and other contingently contagious complaints become rife at particular seasons, and spread with a frightful violence through entire districts, sweeping off the inhabitants by large numbers at a time? In 1817 it appears from a report published upon the subject of the contagion, that, upon a moderate calculation, one million and a half of persons suffered from fever, and of this number at least 65,000 died. Although since that time there has been no epidemic attack, still cases of fever have constantly occurred. I saw several of a bad typhoid form when I visited the fever hospitals in the latter part of the summer of 1834. Of late years the ravages of a contagious fever had been superseded by the terrible scourge of cholera, which seemed to have the power of converting other forms of disease to its own type. It was observed by medical men that fevers and other complaints had materially declined since this epidemic appeared. It ravaged Ireland in 1832, 1833 and 1834, and attacked several places twice, and a few even three times, as Bantry, Tralee, &c. In general, through the active interposition of the better classes on behalf of the sick poor—whether as an act of charity or of self-defence, it matters not—through the adoption of proper precautionary means, a check was put to the progress of the pestilence, and the proportionate number of deaths did not exceed those which occurred in other countries afflicted by the same visitation, although from the more wretched condition of the people a greater mortality was to be feared. Those who were better off exerted themselves to meet the public calamity, and administered the money which was raised by public subscription and advanced by the Government in the best possible way. Streets were swept, manure and filth removed, lime thrown into the sewers, cabins whitewashed and supplied with clean straw, clothes and bedding bedding fumigated, hospital accommodation provided, and the services of medical men secured. A perfect confidence prevailed among all classes, and none of the sick refused to enter the hospitals, with the exception of a few places only where some disturbances occurred at the first outbreaking of the disease, as at Athlone, &c.

But the above wise and humane regulations were not always carried into effect. Through their entire neglect at Strokestown, upon the second irruption of the cholera, the worst consequences ensued. At the examination held by the assistant commissioners in that place, to inquire into the affairs of the dispensary, the names of as many as sixty persons or more who fell victims to the cholera were given in, and a melancholy description furnished by those who were eye-witnesses of the ravages of the pestilence, and of the utter abandonment and distress of the people. The Roman Catholic clergyman stated that he went about from house to house attended by one or two of the gentlemen present at the examination, to try to collect a few shillings to pay for nurse-tenders and coffins. He found the doors of the dwellings of the poor in many instances open, and the wretched inmates lying about the apartment, ill and unable to help themselves, and so crowded together that he was obliged to step over them in order to get to the side of those who stood most in need of his services. There was no one to be found to render any assistance, or even to remove the dead. Those who were well off had fled at the first report of the return of the disease, and for several weeks the place was deserted; no markets were held, no business transacted of any kind. On the first visitation of the cholera the usual means were had recourse to to meet the calamity; but nothing was done the second time. No board of health was appointed, no medical men engaged, no money raised by subscription, and even the house was withheld which had served as an hospital before, although 30*l.* had been expended out of the general fund belonging to the town, in raising it one story, roofing it with slate and putting it in complete repair. It was therefore considered a hardship, and indeed unjust, that the use of this house should not have been allowed to the inhabitants on the recurrence of the disease, or at least that some other was not offered in lieu of it. It may be added, that the whole town and neighbourhood belong to a nobleman who is an absentee for ten months out of the twelve, and that no information could be obtained of the agent, either in regard to the grievance just cited, or the funds of the dispensary to which he was treasurer, since he declined forming one of the meeting, upon the ground that he did not see what good would result from the inquiry.

The demoralizing tendency of dram-drinking, and the hideous amount of poverty and disease which the habitual indulgence of this vile passion has produced among the lower classes, are too well known to need additional notice or confirmation; yet it is an evil of such a magnitude, that it cannot be passed over in any inquiry relating to the moral or physical condition of the Irish Poor.

Use and abuse of Spirituous Liquors.

Owing to the great cheapness of whisky, and the extraordinary facilities and encouragement which are given to its sale, its use even to excess has become universal, and almost attained to a maximum consumption, having reference to the amount of population. In a few places perhaps its use had declined; a fact to be rather ascribed to the actual inability of the people to purchase it, than to the operation of habits of sobriety and the influence of any moral principle. In general, however great the distress of the poor, they contrive to find means for the gratification of this favourite passion. Misfortune seldom fails to make the sufferer a drunkard, even if he happen not to be already addicted to spirituous drinking. The small farmer, who, if his own statement can be believed, is unable for want of capital to till his land to the most advantage, never concludes a bargain except over drink, and rarely leaves the market sober. The mechanic, while he deplures that he has no means to purchase tools, gets the more intemperate the less he earns; and the labourer who goes without the common necessities of life and is covered with rags, consumes his fair-days, holidays and Sundays in drink. Perhaps fishermen are the most improvident of all classes, their occupation being a kind of lottery, and their gains most precariously and irregularly made. They receive a portion of the sales of the fish they catch in lieu of wages, and these they expend in whisky, making no reservation against the future. At sea they drink to keep out wet and cold, and on shore they plead as an excuse for drinking the hardships they undergo, in being exposed nights and days in open boats at sea. Sunday being a day for recreation and rest, it is the chosen time for tippling. The laws for shutting up public houses are not enforced, nor is it usual with magistrates to fine or punish for drunkenness. In towns, where they still commit for this offence, the gaols are crowded. The mode of licensing public-houses, by which they have been prodigiously multiplied of late years, as well as the exceeding cheapness of whiskey, must contribute to its inordinate consumption. A spirit license, which used to cost 25*l.* and was afterwards reduced to 13*l.*, may now be obtained for 2*l.* 10*s.* on a 10*l.* house, and application may be made at any town where petty sessions are held; the effect of which has been to open the most wretched and fulsome abodes for the sale of spirit. These abodes become the haunts of persons of the lowest description and the worst of characters. The maintenance of so many dram-shops is chiefly owing to the ejected and broken-down farmers, who, unable to turn their time and labour to better account, dispose of whatever is left to them in the purchase of a stock of whisky, trusting for a market to country acquaintances and friends.

Various restrictions and regulations have been suggested to me with the view of limiting the sale of whisky. Its sale in grocery shops was particularly objected to, as, by being removed from the fear of detection, female servants who are sent to these shops become initiated into the habit of drinking spirits. The reduction of the price of tea and coffee was also recommended, as well as the introduction of a wholesome cheap malt liquor, a change which had indeed been effected with success in a few places. But although it was felt that the substitution of beer for ardent spirits would conduce materially to the improvement of the health and comfort of the labouring classes, it had not been generally attempted, or it had fallen into disuse upon the vague supposition that it tended to disagree with the ordinary potato diet of the people. The plea was, that potatoes required a more stimulating beverage, and whisky, if taken in moderation, is useful in rousing the stomach and promoting digestion. The damp state of the climate was another equally erroneous excuse for preferring spirituous drink to malt liquor; and generally the poor have recourse to whisky as a medicine in case of illness, and it is very difficult to persuade them of the mischief of such a practice. It is only the bad liquor, in their opinion, which can do harm*. By bad liquor is meant the adulteration of whisky with deleterious substances, of which I was told a remarkable instance at Athlone in the case of a boy, the son of a publican, who was destroyed by vitriol, which he had got at in the absence of his father. The publican acknowledged he kept it in the house for the purpose of mixing with the whisky.

It is the common custom for a man to take his "Morning," as it is termed, or glass of whiskey, before he goes to his daily labour. He feels disinclined, and indeed unfit, to work till he has removed the vapidness and yearning of his stomach by a spirituous potation. The stimulus passing off after a while, recourse is had to a second and a third dram, to appease the sensation of craving, which is as constantly returning. In this way it is not long before the brain is made to feel the intoxicating effects of the spirit which has been imbibed in an empty state of the stomach, and a delirious excitement is produced. The constitutional susceptibility to this species of delirium is increased by the frequent habit of exciting it, and becoming at length confirmed, the patient is affected with a peculiar disease, which I cannot so well describe as by quoting the words of a surgeon of Dublin, through whose kindness I learned many interesting facts relating to this particular form of disease, and other effects which he had observed produced by whisky upon the general health and constitution of the poor of that city.

"Some abstain from whisky for months together, and during this period they make a great sacrifice of comfort, and suffer the greatest privation in their own minds. They compensate themselves at the end of the fixed time by drinking for several days successively, or, as they say themselves, successfully. They thus produce a peculiar state of constitution, which makes them a prey to a species of delirium or fever, which in this country is well known by the name of whisky fever. This is characterized by the greatest vivacity of mind and disposition. The patient sings and talks the whole day and night without intermission, says the most amusing things, betrays every secret he has, imagines he is riding or driving through the country, that he is pursued, or pursuing some ideal object. This state will last two or three days, during which the patient neither eats nor sleeps; he suffers no pain, even when he has met with an accident, such as broken ribs; he will, regardless of any species of motion, (which, when free from this peculiar state, would cause him pain, as if he were stabbed with a poignard)—he will persevere in loud singing and vociferations; even when the subject of a compound fracture, he will get up and stagger across the ward while the broken leg is dangling about. At the end of two or three days it is usual for him to fall into a deep sleep, which lasts for 12, 16 or 20 hours, and then to awake well, but very weak. During the whole progress of this case, real debility, but apparent strength, characterise the complaint. There are nervous tremblings all over, cold clammy perspirations, and weak pulse. Whisky punch and opium, in various forms, are the proper remedies. A large bleeding had recourse to, so as to induce fainting, has in sundry cases produced death. The disease in general is got under for a time, and again recurs; sometimes, instead of sleep, after the excitement, as described above, has continued more or less time, the case terminates in convulsions, coma and death.

"This nervous delirium, or whisky fever, as we call it, is not confined to us. It is called 'Vinomania' in France, and known by the name of 'Delirium Tremens' in other countries. Sometimes it is induced by a wound or accident of some kind, but it very frequently comes on without such an exciting cause. What we term the predisposing cause is an habitual indulgence to excess in ardent spirits. Men are generally the subjects of it, more rarely women; but even children are liable to it. I have been assured by one medical friend, that he has seen a child under ten years old affected by it.

"The effects of whisky on the idle seem very fatal; the working man bears a large quantity better. I have frequently known very laborious, yet whisky-drinking men, earn by honest industry some little capital, and by such means become enabled to set up in business for themselves; and now, continuing their former habit of drinking, while they cease to work as they were wont, they soon fall into ill health; lose all appetite for every thing else, and live on whisky alone. They usually die of diseased liver, consumption, or whisky fever. The small shrivelled-up hardened liver, called the schirrous liver, or whisky liver liver, is generally found associated with dropsy. Organic diseases of the stomach and liver are the well-known consequences of dram-drinking in all countries.

* In proof of this I may state what occurred to a medical officer at one of the Dublin hospitals. While dissuading some persons from dram-drinking over the body of one of their friends who had fallen a victim to the cholera, he was interrupted in the midst of his exhortation by an old woman exclaiming, 'There, don't be blaming the whiskey; why sure it's the bad liquor that is doing it.' The cry was caught up, and it was quite vain for him to attempt to say another syllable. It became a very general notion that whisky, so far from being provocative of the cholera, was the best preservative against it, and drunkenness was never more prevalent than during the time the pestilence was raging.

"Immediate death is sometimes the consequence of a large potation at once of whisky. Such cases as the following have been admitted into Jervis-street Hospital. A man gets astride on a barrel; say at the Custom-house stores or docks, and by means of a straw inserted into the cask, sucks up whisky in such a quantity, that he falls down intoxicated, and soon becomes perfectly insensible, quite in an apoplectic state. If the tube of the stomach pump be speedily introduced, and the whisky drawn off, and aperient medicine sent down without withdrawing the tube, the patient recovers his consciousness and rallies, if his case be judiciously managed. Frequently, however, such patients die, either from the want of due care, or expeditious means being resorted to, to get rid of the whisky.

"By far the greater number of accidents admitted into Jervis-street Hospital are either directly or indirectly the effects of whisky-drinking. Drunken broils, domestic quarrels, while under the influence of spirituous liquors, are so frequent as scarcely to be worth mentioning. On Monday morning, at the Dispensary, women very commonly attend with cut heads, bruised faces, eyes encircled with black blood marks. A very common accompaniment to these are broken ribs. They are blooded, bandaged, and get some medicine, and return to their families, forgiving their husbands, at whose hands, in general, they have received the injury. If the husbands were drunk, they consider it an apology. Occasionally the women themselves are in fault, and men come to complain of having been beaten by their wives or other women. Injuries, however, of a much more serious nature, which have been caused by drunken quarrels, are frequently taken into the hospital. Thus there have been four cases of fatal stabbing within a short period. One of these, a wife stabbed her husband (by whom she had four children) in the abdomen, with a knife. The intestines protruded, and although the best advice was immediately procured, the wounded man died of inflammation. In another case, two brothers grown up, and nearly of the same age, after drinking six days together, finished by quarrelling. One stabbed the other in the stomach; he vomited blood and died in two days, although the best attendance was given him. Besides these cases, there have been others of a fatal character from rupture of the intestines and bladder. They commonly occur in drunken broils, ending in a wrestling or boxing match between two of the party, when on falling, the knee or elbow of the one does the injury which proves fatal to the other. I may add, that during all holiday times, and about Christmas, the time of the fairs in the neighbourhood of Dublin, the resident apothecary must be on the alert, and have his means in readiness for all accidents, as military surgeons make ready upon the eve of a battle."

Major BLAKE, Castlebar.—CHARLES FILGATE, esq.—Mr. LYONS KERANS.—Rev. Mr. O'CONNOR, parish priest.—The Medical Attendant.

Ahascragh
Dispensary.

THE Assistant Commissioners could not learn the amount of population, but were informed that the most distant place the surgeon of this institution is liable to visit is seven miles off, and the only medical institutions within six miles are those at Ballinasloe. The medical institutions in the country are well placed with regard to population, and are not too numerous. It would confer a great benefit on the community if a small ward could be attached to the dispensary for bad accidents.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The dispensary is held at a conveniently situated house, in which there is a good waiting-room for patients. It is held at will, at a rent of 7 l. per annum; but it was thought that it would be better if the house were the property of the charity.

and Grounds.

A member of the College of Surgeons in London, who studied midwifery at the Lying-in Hospital, Dublin, is a master apothecary, and resides next door to the institution; is the sole medical officer. He was appointed in March 1826, immediately after having completed his studies, and has no other appointment. There has been no case of illness or temporary absence on his part since his appointment, but should such absence be necessary, leave should be obtained. The committee of governors have borne annual testimony of their perfect satisfaction, with the zeal and efficiency of the medical officer. There has always been an unpaid assistant at this dispensary, a brother of the medical attendant.

Medical Officers.

The surgeon is the sole paid officer of the institution; he receives 100 l. per annum from the general funds, without additional allowance of any kind. There seems to exist no sufficient guarantee against a person combining with some friends to raise an institution for the sake of obtaining the medical appointment, such an abuse having been known to exist, though not in the instance of this institution.

Payment.

The medical officer is elected by subscribers of a guinea and upwards. There were a great many candidates, and care was taken to secure competition, and several applicants came forward on the occasion of the last election, but no notice of election is sent to the grand jury. It would appear that this neighbourhood is not sufficient to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument, and no other, besides the dispensary physician, is resident in the district. The poor are fully aware that they can apply for redress to any of the subscribers, in case of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical officer.

Election.

The room in which the medicines are kept was very neatly and well arranged, and contained a good supply of medicines, including those of the most delicate description, which are all purchased of a druggist in Dublin, and paid for by the treasurer's draft on the bank; the medicines were under the care of the medical officer, and those which belong to the dispensary are never sold, but are kept in a separate house from those which he uses in his private practice.

Pharmacy.

The instruments belonging to the institution, as appeared by a list furnished the Assistant Commissioners, are not sufficient, and are used by the surgeon in private practice. Leeches are supplied and are brought from the Dublin druggist as required.

There is no vaccine matter kept at the dispensary to be given to neighbouring surgeons, and the medical officer does not, nor would he, inoculate with small-pock.

A very regular register is kept, distinguishing the number, age, name, disease, residence, recommender, treatment and results which, with vouchers, is laid before the grand jury by the medical man himself. This register appeared to be correct, so far as regards the tickets; but it was said many obtained advice and medicine without a ticket; the number of those, however, the Assistant Commissioners had reason to believe, was very small. Many mid-wifery cases were attended from this dispensary, but the exact number was not known.

All sick strangers and travellers who are not known, and who do not belong to the district, are entitled to advice and medicine, but the tenant of a non-subscriber, though living in the district, would be refused. The servants of subscribers of 2*l.* 2*s.* are considered entitled to attendance. Instances were known of the charity being abused, by persons not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance obtaining relief, although a ticket, signed by one subscriber, is necessary, and there is no limit to the number of such tickets issued by a single subscriber; there are none of the poorer classes in the list of subscribers.

Extern patients only are seen at the institution, the remaining sick poor are attended at their own dwellings at any period of the day or night, and in any part of the district. The dispensary is supplied with fracture-boxes and splints, to be used in cases of accidents; but no neighbouring practitioner is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at the institution. The poor are attended by very unskilful midwives, and accidents frequently occur from their ignorance; but the medical attendant attends lying-in cases whenever he is informed that a difficulty exists. Although vaccination is not regularly performed, it is always done if required, and is found to be decidedly favourable in its results. Small-pox is frequent in the neighbourhood, and the pauper poor are much prejudiced against vaccination.

The medical attendant was allowed to give an order for wine on the different landlords in the district, but there is no regular charity on which an order can be given.

The subscribers meet once a year to pass the accounts, and five at least are always present, but no minutes of the proceedings at these meetings are kept, nor is any person ex officio in the principal direction of the institution.

The sole officer not medical was the treasurer.

There was no attendant.

There are no printed rules or reports. The neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor.

If one or two families should withdraw their subscriptions, the dispensary would cease to exist, but this is not likely to occur.

The funds lie in the treasurer's hands till wanted. The income during the past three years was as follows:

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district could not be ascertained; it extends into the parishes of Baher, Kilmacdough, Killartan, Kilbaconty, Kilthomas, Kiline, Kinvarry, Killinavary, Feakle, Ardrahan, Kilkeady, Killinadima and Kilcolgan, and is estimated at 25 miles long and 28 broad, being regulated by the situation of the properties of the subscribers. Curranrue, in the county Clare, is also included in the district visited by the medical officer of this institution. It would be a great benefit to establish an adequate hospital for fevers and accidents, the infirmary at Galway being of no value to the inhabitants of Gort.

The dispensary is held at a house in the market-place at Gort, in which there are three rooms; viz. a shop, a prescribing room and a store room. The yearly rent is 11*l.* 1*s.* 6½*d.* The Ardrahan branch is held at the lodge gate to the rectory at Ardrahan. The "Ardrahan and Gort Dispensary" is the legal name of this charity; efforts were, however, made to fix the impression on the minds of the Assistant Commissioners that "Gort and Ardrahan" was strictly strictly the name, probably to account for the residence of both the medical officers at Gort, with salaries respectively of 100*l.* and of 30*l.* per annum, and that the state of the dispensing room at Ardrahan might be less noticed. There is no rent paid for the house which is used is the dispensary at Ardrahan.

The chief medical officer is an A.M. and B.M. of Dublin, a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and licensed practitioner from the Lying-in hospital, Dublin. He is about 38 years of age, resides at Gort: was appointed in 1830, previously to which he had been practising in Dublin and at Gort. He has no other appointment of any kind, except that he attends the troops. The days on which he attends at Gort are Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays; at Ardrahan on Mondays and Fridays. The duty is never done by proxy. The apothecary is a master apothecary, about 36 years of age, who attends on the same days as the chief medical officer. Both stations are closed, except on the respective days of attendance. The medicines are dispensed by the apothecary.

The salaries paid to the medical officers, during the past three years, were

The medical officer's salary is fixed at 100*l.*, and the apothecary's at 30*l.*; but owing to want of funds, it has been usual to give the medical officer the balance remaining, after all payments of the year, without any additional perquisite.

At the last election of a medical officer, there was no public notice given in the papers. There are two eligible medical men unattached to any dispensary, and resident in Gort. One of these gentlemen, however, was not resident in March 1834.

The shop at the Gort station is well and properly supplied with medicine, and is neatly and properly arranged. At Ardrahan, on the contrary, every thing is managed in the most slovenly manner, there being but very little medicine, and that little is kept in bottles without stoppers, in paper or in dirty drawers; nor are there either scales, weights or measures.

The Ardrahan dispensary (properly so called) is kept in the gate-house or lodge of the Protestant clergyman of the parish, who gives the gate-house and three guineas annually, on condition of being considered a five guinea subscriber.

The crowd of applicants present at the time of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners was so great, that it would be impossible for any one person to attend to them.

Two or three persons (one an old woman) had nine miles to walk home, and were not served at half-past two o'clock, P. M.

There were 13 new tickets, and 55 repetitions this day.

The Assistant Commissioners saw and examined the greater part of them; and on their pointing out to a young surgeon who attended for the medical officer, a man who evidently required bleeding, he replied that they were seldom if ever bled at the dispensary, on account of the distance of the patient from his home, and they do not give leeches. The medicines, which are ordered and paid for by the medical officer, are chiefly supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin, and cost in

Additional miscellaneous expenses for drugs purchased in Gort could not be given with accuracy, but bills for sundries to the following amount had been paid:

1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	8	1	1
1834	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	10	17	1½

the greater portion of these sums was for drugs.

There are no medicines sold at the dispensary, and the apothecary keeps those which he has for private sale in a different part of the town. Vaccine matter is kept here. The medical officer peremptorily refuses to inoculate for small-pox.

A register is kept, which distinguishes, 1st. patient's name; 2d. age; 3d. disease; 4th. name of recommender; 5th. treatment; and 6th. observations. There were a great many patients in attendance, both at Gort and Ardrahan, on the days of the Assistant Commissioners' visit. Several capital operations have been performed on patients who were lodged in private houses, from private subscription, independent of the dispensary funds.

The register, for both branches of this institution, shows the number of patients attended in—

DISPENSARIES. medical officer says that many persons not in circumstances to require dispensary assistance are in the habit of applying for advice and medicine, and that he cannot prevent the imposition. Subscribers have tickets, but they are not required of patients.

Connaught.
County Galway. The surgeon is liable to be called by a subscriber to any part of the district, at any time; but it is not the custom to send for him at night, except in cases of great urgency. No neighbouring practitioner is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at the dispensary, nor is the medical officer bound to attend lying-in cases, but he never refuses to do so. The usual prescriptions are entered. Vaccination is performed here, and is found to be most favourable in its results, inasmuch as small-pox has greatly decreased; and yet the poor in general have no confidence in this operation.

Dispensary. No wine or other extras are afforded from the funds of this institution, nor does there exist any charity here on which an order for these can be given.

Nourishment. The managers meet once a year to inspect the accounts; there are generally about 20 in attendance, and minutes of the proceedings are kept.

General Management. There is a managing committee, but it does not meet.

Officers not medical. The only officers not medical are the treasurer and the secretary; and there are no attendants.

Rules. There are many written, but no printed rules.

Reports. There is no report made up, but a summary is laid before the subscribers.

Collection and Custody. The medical officer collects the subscriptions, and occasionally advances 20 l. or 30 l. for defaulters. The sum of 15 l. was acknowledged to be thus actually due to him at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners.

The apothecary keeps the accounts of this charity: he signs a written statement "that the druggist's invoices and receipts, and all other vouchers, are handed in to the grand jury annually, and never returned to the officers of the dispensary." The medical officer wrote and signed the following declaration:—"I cannot really say where all or any of the accounts or vouchers are for the last year, as they never were looked after until this year."

Persons who attended the Examination.

WALTER M'DONOUGH, esq —The Medical Attendant.

THE fair of Ballinasloe being held at the time of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, there was at first no one to meet them at the dispensary, except the medical officer, whose replies to their queries were so indefinite and contradictory that they did not consider it expedient to go into a detailed examination of the institution with him.

They, however, found that the dispensary was held at the house of the medical officer, an apothecary's shop, in the principal street in the town; to which there is attached no board or inscription to distinguish it as a public dispensary. It appeared that the institution was only held temporarily in this shop, a new building for that purpose being in course of erection, and nearly finished, on the site of the former one; which consisted of two rooms, a waiting room and shop. The medical attendant was allowed 10*l.* per annum house-rent.

The sole medical officer first stated that he held a degree in medicine from the University in Edinburgh, which he afterwards contradicted. It appeared, however, that he was a member of the College of Surgeons, London, possessing a diploma from the Lying-in Hospital, Dublin, and also a certificate from the Apothecaries' Hall there. He resides in the town, where, before his appointment, he was engaged in private practice, which was still not interfered with by his dispensary avocations. He also acted as medical attendant to the Ballinasloe Fever Hospital, for which he received no salary.

The salary of the medical officer is 80 l. per annum, with an allowance of 10 l. for a house, but he is not provided with either board, lodging, or any other perquisite.

There has been no vacancy for the appointment of a medical officer since the original formation of this institution, when the present attendant was elected.

At the time of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, a room was about being provided for dispensary purposes. The medicines belonging to the institution were at that time, however, kept partly in a separate room, and a quantity, to meet immediate demands, in the shop of the medical attendant; which last place was in a dirty and slovenly state. The medicines were stated to be purchased from a druggist in Dublin, on the order of the medical attendant, and paid for by the treasurer; but the latter officer informed the Assistant Commissioners that he paid the medical officer 60 l. per annum on account of medicine, but that he never saw or heard of bills or invoices, and the treasurer's account showed that such was the case. As far as the Assistant Commissioners could discern, there was no distinction made between the stock of medicines for sale and those belonging to the dispensary, and, on minute inquiry, they could discover no traces of any stock of medicine which belonged to the dispensary, nor could the medical attendant produce either bills, invoices or any other document to show that any medicine had ever been purchased for the benefit of the institution.

There existed no register; a number of tickets of recommendation were filed, but it was stated that many receive advice and medicine of whom no account was kept. A document, indeed, was furnished by the medical attendant, which purported to be a copy of a return made to the grand jury in 1829, and which stated that three were on the books.

The return of the number of patients who received relief was calculated by counting the tickets, and there was no other document whatsoever from which the statement above shown could be deduced; these tickets were few in number, and the Assistant Commissioners were not shown any document on which the number who attended without tickets was registered.

There are no committee meetings connected with the general management of this dispensary, which is almost entirely left to the medical officer.

The only officer not medical, connected with this charity, is the treasurer.

The continuance of the institution appeared to depend mainly on the bounty of three or four principal subscribers, amongst whom was a nobleman (a large proprietor in this neighbourhood) whose annual subscription amounted to upwards of 64 l.

The Medical Attendant.Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district to which this dispensary is intended to afford relief is estimated at full 8,000, and extends over about 9,000 acres, there being no other medical institution within six miles. There are still parts of the country very far remote from any medical aid; six miles in diameter being considered quite a sufficiently extensive district for one dispensary. The want of intern accommodation is not felt here, as the Roscommon Infirmary is only eight miles distant.

The Building,
Furniture and Grounds.
Medical Officers.

The dispensary is held in a very comfortable room. There is also a sufficient space for the patients to remain while waiting to be attended.

A licentiate of the apothecaries' company, about 32 years of age, is the sole medical officer, who resides at Roscommon, about eight miles off, where he had been practising previous to his appointment to this institution by the subscribers. His duty is never done by proxy; but the dispensary is closed on all but one day in the week, when the medicines are dispensed by the medical officer, who receives a salary of 30*l.* per annum, without other allowances of any kind.

Payment.

Election.

The medical officer is appointed chiefly by the resident proprietor of this neighbourhood, on whose subscription the continuance of this institution mainly depends.

Pharmacy.

The medicines are properly and neatly kept, are in sufficient quantity, and of good quality. The more delicate medicines are also here to be used when required. They are paid for by the treasurer, and supplied by druggists in Dublin. They are never allowed to be sold at the dispensary. Leeches are supplied by the principal subscriber before alluded to, at his own expense; vaccine matter is not kept here.

Patients' Registration.

A register is kept, which distinguishes the name and age of the patient, the date of relief and the person by whom recommended, which is laid before the grand jury.

Who entitled to
Relief.

All the poor who apply are attended to, if they bring a subscriber's ticket, which is never refused. Such an abuse as persons not in circumstances, requiring gratuitous assistance, participating in the benefits of this charity, is never attempted, as it is always requisite to have a subscriber's order before any person can receive the aid of the institution.

Extern Patients.

All extern patients are attended at the institution, and visited at their homes when required; but accidents of a serious nature are sent to Roscommon infirmary. No neighbouring practitioner is entitled to have his prescriptions made up at this dispensary, nor are his own prescriptions entered in a book by the medical attendant.

Nourishment.

Difficult cases of parturition only are attended from the dispensary. The midwives who attend the poor in ordinary cases are generally very unskilful. There is amongst the poorer classes a carelessness about being vaccinated, as they place no confidence in it.

ment.

Wine, and many other articles of comfort are supplied to the poor by the resident proprietor before alluded to, when an order is given by the medical attendant.

The general management of the affairs of this institution appears to occupy the constant care of the gentleman on whose bounty it may be said to exist.

The

The treasurer is the only officer not medical, and as he was not at home at the time of the Assistant Commissioners' visit, but little could be ascertained as to the state of the funds and accounts of the charity. It appeared, however, that the dispensary is supported, on the one hand, by the resident proprietor, and four or five other lesser subscribers; and on the other, by a county grant of an equivalent sum,—there being very few persons residing in this district who could afford to subscribe to any charity. The whole income is 50*l.* 8*s.*, which is lodged by the treasurer in the bank at Galway.

The principal heads of expenditure are, salary of the medical officer (30*l.* per annum), and costs of medicines, which latter, by a return furnished for three years, appeared to

Rev. JOHN BURKE, vicar of Kilcolgan.—THOMAS LYNCH, esq.—A. ST. GEORGE, esq., Tyrone House.—MATTHEW ST. GEORGE, esq.—The Medical Attendant.

THE population could not be given, but the district extends over six parishes; viz. Kilcolgan, Stradbally, Killely, Drumacod, Killineen and Ballymacooly, and part of Oranmore. The greatest distance to which the medical officer is liable to be called is nine miles. The only medical institution within six miles is the Ardrahan dispensary.

The dispensary is held in a very comfortable house, close to the road side, having a proper waiting-room for patients, it is held at will, at the rent of 3*l.* per annum; but it was thought that, as a principle, it would be better that the dispensary house should, in all cases, belong to the charity.

The sole medical officer is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, a licentiate of the College of Surgeons, Ireland, and a member of the Lying-in hospital, Dublin: he is about 33 years of age, resides at Oranmore, three miles distant from the institution, to which he was appointed at its establishment: he had been previously pursuing his studies in Dublin, and formerly held the Ardrahan and Gort dispensary for a period of five years. He has no other appointment whatever, but is allowed private practice. The days of attendance are twice a week, Mondays and Fridays, as required by the rules; but the present medical officer is in the habit of attending oftener. There is no pupil or other person capable of affording immediate assistance in cases of accident on the spot, and the house is always closed in the absence of the medical attendant.

The surgeon's salary is not fixed, but is paid from the general funds of the charity last year, which was the first of the establishment; he received 78*l.* without perquisites of any sort or kind.

There is no medical man residing in this neighbourhood but the one attached to this dispensary, who is known to have acquired the approbation of the governors, who consider him a skilful and humane man.

The pharmacy is neatly and properly arranged, containing an ample supply of medicines, which appear to be of good quality; the more delicate medicines are kept and used here. Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin, supplied the medicines, and their bill, amounting to 35*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* for last year, was paid by the treasurer. No medicines are kept for private practice; nor are there any surgical instruments belonging to the institution. Leeches are not supplied to patients. Vaccine matter is kept here; and although not prevented, the medical officer does not, nor does he approve of, inoculation with small-pox.

A register is kept, which distinguishes, under separate heads, 1st. number; 2d. patient's name; 3d. residence; 4th. disease; 5th. name of recommender; 6th. date of recommendation; 7th. date of registration; 8th. date of discharges; and, 9th. observations. The number of prescriptions for last year was 2,290, the number of patients unknown. No capital operations appear as yet to have been performed. In midwifery cases, difficult ones only are attended.

All who bring tickets, and any others whom the medical officer knows to be, from their poverty, fit objects, are considered entitled to advice and medicine. A participation in the

The chief medical officer is a physician of Edinburgh and a surgeon, possessing also a midwifery certificate from the Lying-in Hospital at Dublin; he resides at Tuam, eight miles from the dispensary, to which he was appointed 14 years since; he does not hold any other appointment, but is allowed private practice. The times of attendance are on Mondays from 12 to 6; but those days are sometimes omitted, though the medical attendant said he was quite sure he had attended 52 times within the last year. The Assistant Commissioners were informed on the spot that the dispensary was always shut from Monday to Monday, and that in the interval neither advice or medicine can be obtained unless purchased at the shop of the assistant.

In the absence of the medical attendant the duty is done by his assistant, who never passed any examination, and did not even serve his time to any regular apothecary, has never been in the Dublin or any other university to attend lectures, and has no ostensible qualifications; this person is always supposed to be on the spot, and by him the medicines are dispensed.

The chief medical officer receives 100*l.* a year, without any additional allowance, and his assistant 30*l.* a year, with an allowance of 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for a servant, and 5*l.* for firing for the shop, which, at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, was so exceedingly damp that the medicines were spoiling, and from the appearance of the grate, it evidently had not been used for a fire for a very long time; he has also an allowance for horse hire, which amounted in 1832 to 8*l.* 12*s.*, in 1833 to 7*l.* 10*s.*, and in 1834 to 5*l.* 12*s.*

The assistant was appointed by the chief surgeon. There are not individuals in this immediate neighbourhood capable of paying for advice sufficient in number to induce a medical man to reside, independent of the dispensary.

The room in which the medicines are kept was damp, dirty and slovenly in the extreme, and contained a very miserable supply of medicine; in fact, there was not three pounds worth of medicine there, if a large cask of Glauber salts, and a quarter cask, said to contain molasses, be excepted; there was some quinine, but no opium or tincture of any kind; the drawers were without either labels or numbers, and contained only rubbish; many of the labelled bottles were empty, and some without label or stopper contained destructive and poisonous drugs, such as sulphuric acid and corrosive sublimate. The few medicines in the pharmacy were spoiling from damp, yet, as before stated, there evidently had been no fire there for months past, although "turf and lard" were charged 6*l.* 10*s.* for last year; and as to lard, there was not a particle of ointment of any kind to be seen. The medical officer's assistant keeps a miserable little shop in another room of the dispensary house, in which he sells medicine for his own profit; he was absent at the fair of Ballinasloe at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, and the medical officer thought he recognized in his shop the tincture of opium bottle which ought to have been in the dispensary, but remarked, that as the assistant had his private medicines from the dispensary druggist, he could not be sure of the fact. The medicines are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co. of Dublin, and are paid for by the medical officer; they are placed under the care of the assistant, who is responsible for them, and on no account allowed to sell them, those kept by him for sale being placed in an adjoining apartment. There had been a pretty fair supply of surgical instruments, but the amputating case was nearly if not utterly unserviceable from rust, from the effects of damp and want of care. Leeches are not afforded to patients, nor is there any stock of vaccine matter kept. The surgeon does not, and would not, inoculate with small-pox matter. On the whole, it would be difficult to form an idea of a medical establishment more miserably provided, or kept in a more slovenly manner.

There is no register which could be depended upon, and the final statements as to results, deaths, diseases, &c. have no document to certify them, or any data from which they could be deduced. There is indeed a book kept as a register of patients, disease, &c. and at the end of each year a summary is made out, such as the following:—

relieved -	-	-	-	-	940
Results unknown -	-	-	-	-	195
Deaths -	-	-	-	-	45
Remaining on books -	-	-	-	-	130

After a most diligent search, the surgeon could not point out any note or observation from which the elements of this summary could have been collected; the numbers set down therefore appeared to have been purely arbitrary, but so arranged as to form a total equal to the number of names in the book for the year; there were no dates either of months, weeks or days. Midwifery cases are not attended to.

The rule is, that all poor persons who apply shall receive advice and medicine, and the institution possesses the means of affording assistance in cases of accident; there is not any practitioner authorized to have his prescriptions made up at this institution. Poor lying-in women women are attended by country midwives, nevertheless accidents are seldom heard of. Vaccination is not performed at this dispensary, and the poor have but little confidence in its efficacy. Small-pox, however, does not much prevail in this neighbourhood.

Wine and other extras are afforded, at the discretion of either the medical man or his assistant, and when required are purchased from any neighbouring dealer; there is no charity in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given.

The surgeon mentioned the lodging of patients upon whom surgical operations are performed in the village as an item of expenditure, but could not recollect one patient under such circumstances within the last two years, and people resident on the spot said they never heard of such a thing, and the surgeon afterwards acknowledged he had committed "a mistake" in having mentioned this.

The general management of the institution is left entirely to the surgeon, without rules or regulations or meetings of governors, in whom every thing connected with the charity appeared to centre; who was in himself chief medical officer, collector of subscriptions, and treasurer.

The only officer, not medical, is the treasurer; and religious belief does not exclude a person from becoming an officer.

There is an allowance of 4 l. 6 s. 8 d. for an attendant, without board or lodging.

The subscriptions to this charity were stated by the surgeon to have been, for each of the last three years, 110 l. 10 s., one item ("subscriptions") to that amount being entered in the treasurer's book for each of these years. The treasurer, as the Assistant Commissioners were informed, has hitherto made the usual oath or declaration to be laid before the grand jury, as to the correctness of these accounts, and an equivalent has been regularly granted thereupon in aid of this dispensary, making the annual income of the charity for the years stated, 221 l.; the sum of the annual subscriptions, it will be seen, has been exactly the same, yet several of the subscribers (as the surgeon afterwards stated) had been defaulters, and that he had not received more than 30 l. or 40 l. of the nominal annual subscription of 110 l., and that, of the whole list of 40 subscribers, not more than four or five individuals pay. The surgeon also stated, that he had been in the habit of making up these deficiencies, whatever they may amount to, from his own purse, and that he always takes care that the treasurer shall receive the full amount specified in the declaration, taking upon himself the risk of being repaid his advances by the defaulting subscribers. There was no official list of subscribers or governors in the treasurer's book, nor could the surgeon furnish any original list. He produced one, however, which he said was authentic, and upon going over it with him, name by name (amongst which were those of two of his brothers, and his own), he acknowledged that the deficiencies of payment last year amounted to more than 30 l. It follows, therefore, that the county Galway was assessed last year, in aid of this charity, in at least 30 l. more than the nominal subscribers contributed to its funds.

The book in which the accounts of the charity were kept, called the treasurer's book, is never out of the possession of the medical officer or his assistant; the entries were made in the handwriting of the latter, but are sometimes altered by the former, after the balance had been struck; nevertheless, at the foot of the only account where an instance of such an alteration was observed (and which account is manifestly wrong, independently of larger sums being substituted for smaller) there is a certificate, said to be in the handwriting of the treasurer, certifying, that the account had been examined and found correct; the charges, entered in this book, appeared to be shaped to square with the apparent income; thus, "carriage of medicine," is charged for the two years ended in June 1832 and 1833, 12 l. 9 s. 6 d., which, at the rate of 3 s. per cwt. (the rate paid, according to one carman's receipt, for carriage of 9 cwt., produced), would show that four tons and two cwt. of drugs had been received at this dispensary within the two years mentioned.

The following are correct copies of statements of expenditure for the three past years, furnished to the Assistant Commissioners.

In this county (Galway), as the Assistant Commissioners were informed by a grand juror, the money, purporting to be the amount of subscriptions for the year, whether these subscriptions be bonâ fide contributed by the subscribers whose names are given in as such, or made up by an individual interested in the concern, must be lodged, with the equivalent given by the grand jury, in the bank at Galway, payable to the order of the respective dispensary committees, and not to the order of the treasurer only; but this measure of precaution affords but little or no security against the abuses described in the foregoing report, which have been so clearly proved, and so fully confirmed, by the admissions of the chief medical officer, that they leave so little doubt that they have, and still do, exist in the administration of this charity, that the Assistant Commissioners feel compelled to report them, although the task is rendered exceedingly painful to them, because the conclusions resulting from these facts bear heavily upon individual character.

pital for the accommodation of fever cases or bad accidents, would confer a great benefit on the poor.

The dispensary is kept in a small house in one of the streets of the town of Eyrecourt, which is held at an annual rent of 4*l.* 4*s.*; it comprises two rooms, one serving as a waiting room, the other as a shop, which are found sufficiently convenient for the purpose.

The chief officer, a gentleman about 27 years of age, is a member of the College of Surgeons, London, and a licentiate of the Lying-in Hospital, Dublin; he was appointed at the establishment of the institution in 1832, previous to which period he was pursuing his professional studies in London; he holds no other appointment, but attends the military who are quartered in the district; he is allowed private practice; the days of attendance at the dispensary are Mondays and Fridays; he is not a master apothecary, but keeps an apothecary's shop in the town. There is no one resident on the spot to afford immediate relief in case of accident; the medicines are usually dispensed by an assistant, who is an apprentice to the chief medical officer.

The chief medical officer receives 80*l.* per annum from the general funds of the charity, without allowances of any kind; his assistant has a yearly salary of 10*l.* from the same funds.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed is neatly and properly arranged, the medicines are in sufficient quantity, and appeared to be of good quality; those also of a more expensive and delicate nature are employed: they are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin, and cost

in 1833	-	-	-	-	24	-	4

The medicine room is locked, and the key is in the possession of the chief medical officer during his absence from the dispensary. No medicines are sold under any circumstances at the dispensary, such as are intended for private practice being kept at the house or shop of the medical officer; the accounts were, however, examined, and found not to tally with the very imperfect series of invoices, said to be the only ones preserved; and it appeared that there was no entry of Epsom or Glauber salts in any invoice shown for these years, and that there were none then actually in the pharmacy, although it had been just stated by the medical officer that the annual consumption of that article in this dispensary was more than two cwt.; search was then made by the medical officer in his own shop, and an invoice was discovered for July of that year, for that quantity of salts, and he then admitted that the salts belonging to the dispensary were kept, and then actually were, in his own private shop. Whilst making the above observations, the Assistant Commissioners do not mean to prefer any charge against the medical officer, but the remark is almost unavoidable, that the vouchers for the expenditure of money, contributed by charitable individuals, and that also which is assessed upon the county for the relief of the sick poor, ought to be considered of too much importance to be wilfully destroyed or allowed to perish from neglect. Leeches are not supplied to patients from this dispensary. Vaccine matter may be obtained of the medical officer, who does not inoculate with small-pox, nor does he approve of its being practised.

Patients' Registration.

A register of the patient's name, disease and residence, with the name of recommender, appears to be correctly kept by the medical officer; and is itself periodically laid before the grand jury. No capital operations have been performed at this dispensary, and midwifery cases are not attended.

Who entitled to Relief.

All poor persons, with or without a subscriber's ticket, are considered entitled to advice and medicine, but no subscribers are ever attended, their subscriptions being paid without any contract or stipulation whatever; however, the abuse of persons not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance, participating in the benefits of this charity, does exist, to a certain extent.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the institution on the days of attendance, and are also visited in any part of the district, at any hour of the day or night. The prescriptions used at this dispensary are not entered in any book, nor are neighbouring practitioners allowed to have theirs made up here. In lying-in cases the poor are generally attended by midwives, who have no education whatever, but possess some little skill.

The medical officer vaccinates all the poor who apply, and they attend in considerable numbers for this purpose; the results are favourable, though there is a good deal of small-pox in the neighbourhood, and cases of secondary small-pox are known to occur.

Nourishment.

Wine and other extras are not afforded by this institution, nor is there any charity in this district on which an order for such could be given.

General Management.

The general management of the affairs of this institution is vested in the subscribers of one guinea and upwards, exclusively of the medical or salaried officers; nor is there any person, ex officio, in the principal direction.

Managing Committee.

There is a managing committee, composed of five subscribers, who meet once in the year to pass the accounts.

Officers, not medical.

The sole officer, not medical, is the treasurer.

Attendants.

There is an attendant in the house, who has the lodging rent-free for taking care of the building.

The

The only printed rules in existence were the resolutions passed at the original formation of the charity, namely, first recognizing the necessity of establishing a dispensary, appointing "a regular surgeon" to it, and soliciting subscriptions "for carrying same into effect;" secondly, that this "dispensary be under the control of a committee of the neighbouring gentlemen, to be elected annually, and that a treasurer and secretary be also appointed;" and thirdly, the appointment of a treasurer and a secretary accordingly. This district affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

A list of subscribers was shown to the Assistant Commissioners, by which it appeared that the existence of this charity does not depend on any one or two principal subscribers or families.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and then deposited in the bank of Galway.

THE population of the county of the town and town of Galway amounts to 35,000 or 40,000 inhabitants, and the medical attendant is liable to visit at a distance of five miles: the only medical institutions within six miles are the Galway Fever Hospital and the Galway Infirmary; previous to the establishment of this dispensary there was no provision for visiting sick poor in their own homes. There is no intern accommodation (except in cases of fever) for the sick poor of the county of the town and the town of Galway, they cannot, even when meeting with an accident, be admitted, by right, into the Galway County Hospital, and in fact they are not taken there; it would be better to place local hospitals in properly selected situations in different parts of the counties, than to have one hospital, be it ever so large, in any one place.

The dispensary is held in one of the principal streets, and is very central. There is a good shop and waiting-room. The house is rented at will for 20*l.* per annum. The furniture of the board room and of the shop only belongs to the charity, and is quite sufficient. There is no intern accommodation for the patients.

The chief medical officer appeared to be a well-educated and talented young man, and conducts the laborious duties of his situation with great zeal, kindness and method: he is about 27 years of age, a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, also possessing a midwifery certificate from the College of Surgeons, and from the Dublin Lying-in Hospital. He resides close to the dispensary, to which he was appointed in July last, having been previously residing and practising in the town. He is allowed private practice, and attends at the dispensary four days in the week; viz. Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday. Patients are also visited at their homes every day in the week. The apothecary is about 40 years of age, a member of the Apothecaries' Hall, Dublin. He does not keep an apothecaries' shop, or sell medicines on his own account; but resides at the dispensary, and consequently is always on the spot to prepare and dispense the medicines.

The chief medical officer is paid 70*l.* per annum from the general funds of the charity, without additional allowances or perquisites of any sort or kind. The apothecary is paid 40*l.*, and has likewise a free residence at the dispensary house.

At the last election advertisements were put into the papers, and testimonials were required from the candidates, of whom there were three on the occasion of the last vacancy.

There are nine medical men resident in Galway eligible to this dispensary. The poor know well that they can complain to a subscriber in case the medical attendant should be harsh or negligent.

The room in which the medicines are kept is neatly and properly arranged. The medicines appeared to be of good quality, and in sufficient quantity, including the more delicate sorts. They are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co., Dublin, are ordered by the apothecary, under whose care they are placed, and paid for by the treasurer. There is no guarantee, but the character of the medical men, that inferior medicines are not introduced. A striking instance was brought under the notice of the Assistant Commissioners, by the treasurer, of the danger of permitting medicines, or materials for preparing them, to be purchased occasionally on the spot. The late apothecary brought in the following charges for one year; viz.

Medicines purchased in Galway	33	18	3
Lard to make ointment	19	6	6
Spirits (whiskey) for tinctures	9	14	4
TOTAL	62	19	1

The above charges were entirely unconnected with the Dublin druggist's bill, which was also large. The committee resisted the payment of such portion of the above charges as were not directly authorized by the physician. No medicine is kept for private practice. A list of surgical instruments belonging to the dispensary was shown to the Assistant Commissioners, and appeared to contain all that are considered sufficient for the wants of the institution.

The instruments would be lent in case of any emergency; but leeches are not afforded. There was, at the period of the examination, a supply of vaccine matter at this establishment, and any neighbouring surgeon, if he required it, might be supplied. The medical officer does not himself inoculate, nor does he approve of inoculation with small-pox.

The present chief medical officer received no books or documents from his predecessor, but he has begun, and now keeps, with great precision and fidelity, a register, which distinguishes, under separate headings, first, number of dispensations; second, name of patient; third, age; fourth, residence; fifth, name of recommender; sixth, date of admission; seventh, visits at their houses; eighth, results; ninth, disease; tenth, treatment; eleventh, remarks; from which the following is extracted:

First, admissions during the past three weeks	747
Of the above there were, who had no tickets	91
Numbers of dispensations of medicine	1,331

Difficult cases only of midwifery are attended.

All poor are entitled to be attended, provided they get a ticket, or are considered sick by the surgeon; domestic servants are not in the habit of having tickets, and it is contrary to rule. The abuse of persons getting gratuitous relief who are not in circumstances to require it, does exist, but is guarded against as much as possible; it is not absolutely requisite that a ticket should be produced to obtain aid, and in all cases one signature is sufficient; the limitation as to the number of tickets allowed to each subscriber of a guinea is 32 per annum, by rule, but this is not strictly adhered to in practice. The medical officer does not attend cases of fever, all such being handed over to the Fever Hospital.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and visited as often as requisite at their homes. The institution possesses splints and bandages, but no other means of affording assistance in cases of accident. The usual prescriptions are entered in the book, and those of neighbouring practitioners are authorized to be made up here. All prescriptions for the poor by the recognized physicians and surgeons of the town are made gratuitously at the pharmacy of this dispensary, but these prescriptions are said to be few in number. There are only one or two midwives at all educated in this town. Vaccination is only beginning to be used here; the medical men have a good opinion of vaccination: small-pox always exists, more or less, in the neighbourhood; the poor have no confidence in vaccination. A physician present said, he has been in the habit of using vaccine matter from both London and Dublin, and has an equally good opinion of both.

Wine and other extras, such as diet, and even lodging, are afforded in extreme cases, under the special sanction of a committee summoned for the purpose, but there is no charity in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given for such relief; a nurse tender is also occasionally provided. The Rev. Mr. D'Arcy, vicar of St. Nicholas, one of the committee of governors of this institution, a gentleman who is most active in all the benevolent charities of the town, stated to the Assistant Commissioners a fact which he had himself witnessed in June 1822, affording a melancholy illustration of the dreadful sufferings to which the poor in this country are exposed from the occasional failure of their precarious and perishable food, the potato, and the almost inevitable consequences, famine and pestilence. He met a wretchedly emaciated pauper in the street, who had wandered in delirium or fled from the house of fever and death; he followed the wretched being, and was conducted to a dwelling, where he found fourteen dead bodies, three of which were in one bed, and one of these last putrid, all at the time unknown to the existing authorities.

This institution has been but lately rescued and thoroughly regenerated from a state of great confusion and abuse into which it had fallen during the administration of the late apothecary. It was found at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners to be well looked after by the governors, and conducted in a most satisfactory manner. The general management rests with the guinea and upwards subscribers; salaried officers not being governors, and the institution has not been left essentially to the management of the surgeon, nor is any person ex officio in the principal direction. An annual general meeting of the subscribers is held for the purpose of passing the accounts, electing officers, and appointing a managing committee, but no vote is allowed by proxy; at these meetings 40 or 50 generally attend.

There is a managing committee annually elected, which consisted at the period of this examination of six gentlemen chosen from the list of subscribers, and certain others, being trustees for the funded property of the charity, are also, ex officio, on the committee.

The president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer are the officers not medical. Minutes of the proceedings at the meetings of the committee are kept. An instance has occurred of the removal of a physician and of an apothecary.

There is one attendant connected with the institution.

Reports are annually printed. This neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons able to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

Reports for the years 1827 and 1828 were furnished the Assistant Commissioners, but none of a more recent date. By the list of subscribers, it appeared that this charity does not depend on any one or two principal subscribers, and is not likely to cease to exist; a sum of 500*l.* is invested in government security, in the names of certain trustees, members of the managing committee of and for the benefit of this charity.

The funds required for annual use are in the custody of the treasurer.

There is no medical or surgical instruction afforded at this institution.

THE population of this district cannot be given; the medical attendant resides at Tuam, 14 miles distant from the dispensary, and as the district includes a radius of eight miles, he is liable to be summoned 22 miles from his own residence, which would sometimes give him 44 Irish miles to travel for one dispensary patient. The assistant, who resides at the dispensary, may be called on at any moment to a distance of seven or eight miles; there is no other medical establishment within six miles.* If a hospital for the reception of bad accidents and cases of fever were established, it would be very beneficial on the poor of the district.

The dispensary is held in a decent house by the side of the road; there is some little space allotted to patients while waiting for advice; the room in which the medicines are kept is a bed-room belonging to the family who occupy the house.

For the house, to which a stable is attached, and the ground, an annual rent of 7*l.* is paid by the institution.

The principal medical attendant is about 50 years of age, a master apothecary and accoucheur of the Lying-in Hospital, Dublin, who resides at Tuam, distant 14 miles from the dispensary, where he practises his profession, and did so previously to his appointment to the institution, which took place at its establishment in the year 1829; he attends once in the week, and holds no other appointment.

His assistant, aged about 28 years, was an apprentice at Fermoy, in the county of Cork, but has not passed an examination for any description of medical certificate or degree; but the Rev. Mr. Burke, P. P., who lives close by, and devotes some attention to the working of the charity, assures us that this assistant gives great satisfaction, and does much good amongst the poor; the medical officer assured the Assistant Commissioners that a qualified man could not be induced to reside in the district for the whole amount of the income of the charity; and there was no medical man resident nearer than seven or eight miles; he dispenses the medicines, and is expected to be constantly at the dispensary-house, in which he has lodgings.

The chief medical officer's salary is the balance of the dispensary funds, after all the expenses have been defrayed, it varies, consequently; in 1832, he received 70*l.*, in 1833, 75*l.* The assistant is paid a sum of 25*l.* per annum, with lodgings free in the dispensary-house, together with about an acre and a half of land attached.

The chief medical officer was appointed by the subscribers at large, at the first formation of the institution; the assistant by the medical officer, but with the consent and approbation of the committee.

The medicines are kept in a press neatly arranged, in the assistant's bed-room; the bottles &c., were in good order; the medicines, which appeared to be of a good description, are supplied by Messrs. Lightfoot & Co., Dublin, they cost about 27*l.* per annum, which is paid by the the treasurer; no medicines belonging to the dispensary are sold, such as are intended for sale being kept in a separate shop; those of a delicate and expensive nature are not much used. The institution possesses no other instruments than dentist's and a small pocket case. Leeches are supplied, when required, at an average expense of 30s. annually; vaccine matter is kept at the institution, but not given away; the operation is not performed, as the people have no confidence in it; the medical attendant does not, and will not, inoculate with small-pox.

There were no documents of any kind connected with this dispensary produced to the Assistant Commissioners, except a register, specifying the patient's name, age, name of recommender and treatment, as well as the result of each case, which register is laid before the grand jury. There have been no capital operations performed within the last three years, and but few cases of midwifery attended; the females in this district having a decided objection to a male practitioner.

Any poor person residing in the district is entitled to relief on presenting a ticket, which is, however, easily obtained, as the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, and the number which each can issue unlimited.

The domestic servants in the neighbourhood are not attended from the charity, nor do any persons attempt to participate in its advantages whose circumstances do not require gratuitous relief.

Extern patients only are attended, and are to be visited in any part of the district at any hour of the day or night. In cases of fractured limbs or other accidents, this institution does not possess the necessary instruments for affording relief. No prescriptions are written, nor any neighbouring practitioner authorized to have their prescriptions made up at the dispensary.

Wine, or any other extra, is never supplied from the funds of this charity, and there is not in the district any institution on which the medical officers can give an order for food, clothing or fuel.

This charity has not been left essentially under the management of the surgeon. Its managers generally are the subscribers of one guinea and upwards, and there is no person, ex officio, in its principal direction.

It has a committee of seven or eight, who meet once a year to inspect and pass the accounts; minutes of their meetings and proceedings are kept, and a written report of the admissions, discharges, relief, rate of mortality, &c., and of the average expense of each patient is made to them at their annual meeting.

The only officer, not medical, is the treasurer, in consequence of whose absence no statement of items of expenditure, or other book or account belonging to the charity, with the exception of the register, could be seen.

No particular religious creed or persuasion excludes any person from being an officer.

Reports are made, as already stated, once in the year to the committee.

The Rev. Mr. Bourke, P. P., states that he does not think that persons can be found in this district to inquire into and attend to the wants of the poor, for that in the year of scarcity, 1831, he experienced the greatest difficulty in forming a committee for the distribution of the English subscription; that charity, he thinks, demoralized the people, by lowering their spirit of independence; and he has been long since endeavouring to collect 20*l*. by subscription, to entitle his parish to the usual grant for building a national school, but that he has not yet been able to accomplish so large a collection.

Particulars relative to the items of expenditure could not be given in the absence of the treasurer, who resides 15 miles from the dispensary; even the invoices of medicines had from the druggists were said to be in his hands. The medical officer stated the income for the present year, 1834, to be

It is thought there are from 20,000 to 25,000 inhabitants in this district, the entire poor of whom are dependent for medical relief solely on the Headford dispensary; the extent to which the medical attendant is liable to be called was stated to be a distance of six miles in any direction. Although the dispensaries in this county are tolerably numerous, yet it is thought they are not judiciously placed, as there are still large districts far distant from any medical relief; and the opinion is, that a district of 10 miles diameter, having such a population as above mentioned, would be a reasonable space to place under the care of one medical gentleman, and that it would confer a great benefit on the poor if an adequate hospital were established here and in each such district, with intern accommodation for fevers and bad accidents.

The proprietor of the town and chief benefactor of this dispensary has given the house rent-free in which it is held, and which is also the dwelling of the medical attendant. The house is commodious and conveniently situated; the shop for dispensing the medicines neatly kept and in good repair, and an excellent waiting room adjoining. The gentlemen present at the examination were of opinion that, as a principle, it may perhaps be better that dispensary buildings should be held on lease, so long as these charities depend on subscriptions.

The chief medical officer is about 31 years of age, and resides at the house wherein the dispensary is held. He holds a midwifery certificate from the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, and has gone through all the preliminaries to entitle him to be examined to obtain a license from the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, and a degree from Trinity College, Dublin. He was appointed to this dispensary at its establishment; he had been for six or seven years previously assistant to the medical officer at the Tuam dispensary. He holds no other appointment at present, but is allowed private practice. The stipulated days for his attendance are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, from nine o'clock in the morning until all patients who attend have been seen and prescribed for; his duty is not done by proxy, but he has an assistant, who is a master apothecary and attends on the above three days in the week a sufficient time to make up and dispense the medicines prescribed.

The chief medical officer is paid 100*l.* annual salary. The apothecary 15*l.* from the general funds of the charity. Neither have any perquisite or allowance, with the exception of the occupation of the dispensary-house as a residence, which is allowed to the chief medical officer, by the proprietor, at his private expense. The apportioning of salaries and allowances rests with the subscribers, without reference to the grand jury, who now have very little control, in consideration of the county grant, not even sufficient to prevent an abuse of the charity, if at any time extravagant or unnecessary allowances were acquiesced in by the subscribers, or the abuse of a man combining with a few friends to raise an institution for the sake of a medical appointment.

The present medical officer was, and should a vacancy occur, the successful candidate would be, elected by the subscribers.

In case of any neglect or harshness to the patients, or other misconduct on the part of the medical attendants, the poor are quite aware that they have the privilege of bringing their complaint before any subscriber, and thus obtaining redress.

The room wherein the medicines are kept is neatly and properly arranged, and contains all the requisite medicines in sufficient quantity, and of good quality, with a supply of the more delicate and expensive kinds.

These medicines are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co. of Dublin. They are ordered by the medical attendant, and paid for by the treasurer, with the sanction of the committee. Leeches are not afforded to the patients. The chief medical officer does not keep or supply medicines in his private practice, and the apothecary keeps a shop in another part of the town, free from any contact or interference with the dispensary medicines. From February 1833 to February 1834, the medicines cost 63*l.* 5*s.* 2½*d.*; and within that period, 5,658 patients were attended, and 13,668 dispensations of medicine made, i. e. at a cost of less than 2½ per patient.

A register is kept of all who attend at the dispensary, distinguishing the name of patient, age, disease, recommender and medicine prescribed, and this book is laid before the grand jury periodically. An abstract of the general medical report shows that between the 1st February 1833 and 1st February 1834, there were four amputations performed, and 25 difficult cases of parturition attended from this dispensary.

Any poor person applying would get medical relief at the dispensary; but the rule is, that each person should bring a ticket, to which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, and there is no limitation to the number, under which circumstances, coupled with the non-observance of the rule, no really poor person requiring medical aid would fail in obtaining it, and attempts at imposing on the charity are seldom made. There are no poor subscribers, and the servants of the contributors are not in the habit of getting tickets.

All who are able must attend at the dispensary, but those who are too ill to do so are visited at their own homes, on which duty the chief medical officer is liable to be called to any point within a radius of five miles, and at any hour of day or night. In cases of accident, there are all necessary requisites at the dispensary for affording immediate relief; but no neighbouring practitioner is permitted to send prescriptions to be compounded there. All difficult cases of childbirth are attended on application. The poor women are generally attended by midwives, a class of persons who here possess no skill whatever, and accidents are frequently heard of from their ignorance. On inspection of the register, the prescriptions entered appeared to be the usual remedies applicable to the cases. Vaccine matter is always kept at the dispensary, and can be had by any medical practitioner; but the confidence of the poor in the efficacy of vaccination is so slight, that very few children are brought to be infected; and the consequence is, that small-pox is now much in the neighbourhood. The medical officer does not, nor would he use small-pox matter.

Some vaccine matter, procured from Dublin, failed in a few instances, where the influence of the resident gentry prevailed on some of the tenants to use it. This circumstance had a pernicious effect on the minds of the people, by lessening their already slight confidence in the operation.

The medical officer states, that he prefers the vaccine matter procured from London, which he finds more efficacious than any other; and he thinks this arises from the fact, that the matter is sent from London on ivory points. Mr. Lynch mentions an example in his own family, where the Dublin vaccine matter failed, and the London matter succeeded.

Nourishment.

The dispensary does not afford wine or other extras to the patients, nor is there any charity to supply food, fuel or clothing to the sick poor; but a recommendation for wine, &c., given to the patient by the medical officer is always attended to by the neighbouring gentry.

Intern Patients.

There is no intern accommodation in the dispensary, but in some cases of operation the expenses of lodging, &c. for the patient would be defrayed out of the dispensary funds.

General Management.

The general management rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and no person holding office in the institution participates in the principal direction.

Managing Committee

There is a managing committee of twelve, who meet occasionally: these gentlemen examine and sign the treasurer's books each year, but no minutes of their meetings or proceedings are recorded.

Officers not medical.

The sole non-medical officer is the treasurer; with respect to the mode of appointing the non-medical officers, there are no rules printed. Mr. St. George states, that no particular religious belief operates against a candidate as an exclusion from any office; the present medical officer is a Roman Catholic; since the establishment was opened, the apothecary was changed.

Attendants.

There is a porter attached to the institution, whose salary is 5*l.* per annum, without lodging or other perquisites.

Reports.

A summary of the affairs of the dispensary is drawn up annually, and submitted to the subscribers in the form of a medical report.

The gentlemen questioned state, that this a district which affords a sufficient number of competent persons, who would willingly assist in investigating and administering to the wants of the poor, in case it should yet be thought expedient to enlarge the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

Funds and Accounts.
Receipts.

The income arises from the subscriptions and the grand jury grant. The charity possesses no other property or source of income (except the house already mentioned, given rent-free, by the proprietor). It would be greatly impaired by one family withdrawing their subscription, but it does not depend entirely on that family, and there is no danger of its ceasing to exist.

Collection and Custody.

The funds are lodged in the Galway Branch Bank, in the name of the treasurer, but cannot be drawn but on a check, signed by the treasurer and five of the committee.

Expenditure.

The expenditure for the year, from 1st February 1833 to 1st February 1834, appeared by the treasurer's book to amount to 196*l.* 10*s.* 6½*d.*, the principal items being salaries and medicines.

THOMAS BERMINGHAM, esq.—SEYMOUR HARRISON, esq.—Rev. Mr. SEYMOUR.—

The Medical Attendant.

THE population of the district, for the accommodation of which the Killane dispensary was established, is estimated at from 7,000 to 10,000, and the extent of the district is about 16 miles by 10. The most distant point to which the medical attendant is liable to visit patients is about eight miles, there being no medical institution within that distance. Mr. Bermingham thinks there is still a want of dispensaries in the county, and that a district of six or eight miles in diameter, with a population, such as this district has, is as much as one person can well attend to; and it was considered that it would be a very beneficial thing to have a small hospital attached to various country districts.

The dispensary is held at a small house, close to the road side, with a small waiting-room, and all in good repair; but there was no board or any mark by which the place could be known to the public to be a dispensary. The house is rented at 5*l.* per annum; but, as a principle, it would be best that the building were the property of the charity.

The sole medical officer is about 29 years of age, and is a member of the College of Surgeons in London, having a midwifery certificate from Dublin; he resides near the institution; previous to his appointment he practised his profession in Ballinasloe, and is still allowed private practice; the days on which he attends at the dispensary are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, from 10 o'clock until all applicants are seen. He has no assistant to afford relief in case of accident, but dispenses the medicines himself.

The medical officer's salary is 90*l.*, which is paid from the general funds of the charity; should the subscribers choose to authorize salaries or allowances higher than are requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, the grand jury have control by diminishing the grant.

The present surgeon of this dispensary was appointed by the subscribers, and there is no other medical man in the district; it is considered that, independently of the dispensary emolument, this district is not capable of supporting a medical gentleman. The medical officer bears a very high character amongst all those of the surrounding gentry with whom the Assistant Commissioners had an opportunity of conversing, both as an officer of this charity and as a private practitioner.

The room in which the medicines are kept is very small, but rather conveniently arranged, and the quality of the medicines seemed good, and the supply sufficient, but they are not very neatly kept; the more delicate medicines appeared to be used. Whenever medicines are required, the medical officer makes out a list, which he gives to the treasurer, who orders and pays for them. The medicines at present are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin; the cost for medicines for each of the last three years is as follows, viz.:

For the year 1832	-	-	4
— 1834	-	-	10

There are no medicines for private practice kept.

The only surgical instruments belonging to the institution consists of a cupping apparatus and lancets, consequently the surgeon is obliged to use his own instruments; and leeches cannot be afforded.

There is a register kept of the name, age and residence of the patient, the name of the recommender, and the medicines prescribed; but this register is not perfect. No persons are refused advice and medicine at the dispensary. Capital operations are occasionally performed.

Those only who have tickets are entitled by the rules of the institution to advice and medicine; but none are refused assistance whose poverty is known to be such as to require it.

The abuse exists of persons whose circumstances do not require it participating in the benefits of the charity, and it is found to be next to impossible to prevent this imposition.

To obtain the aid of the institution, according to the rules, it is absolutely necessary to be provided with a ticket, to which one signature is sufficient; and the number of such recommendations which each subscriber has is unlimited.

The rule is that the sick poor shall be visited day or night in any part of the district. Neighbouring practitioners are not authorized to have their prescriptions made up at the institution. The medical officer attends difficult cases of child-birth only from the dispensary; the poor women are generally attended by persons calling themselves midwives; these are so very unskilful that accidents occur to the mother and child from their ignorance. The usual prescriptions are entered in the registry book.

There is not any vaccine matter kept here to supply the neighbourhood, yet the medical officer has a good opinion of vaccination, but the confidence of the poor in its efficacy is not great. Small-pox has been a good deal about here. The medical officer does not inoculate with small-pox matter, as he does not approve of it.

There are no wine or other extras allowed from the dispensary, and there is no charity in the neighbourhood for supplying the sick poor with food, clothing or fuel, on which the medical attendant can give an order, but the neighbouring gentry attend to any note from the surgeon recommedatory of a sick patient.

A subscriber, who is resident proprietor in the neighbourhood, looks chiefly to the affairs of the dispensary, but there is no person, ex officio, in the principal direction.

The treasurer is the sole officer not medical. The difficulty of finding fit and willing persons persons to undertake the duties of the treasurership of a dispensary, and who reside near enough to the institution, particularly in remote districts, to execute their duties efficiently, has rendered that office almost purely nominal or honorary in a great majority of cases in this county. The medical man generally keeps all the accounts himself, and furnishes a copy or abstract to the treasurer, who goes through the necessary forms at the assizes or grand jury meetings.

There are many written rules, but none are printed.

There are no reports in existence, but this district, it is considered (should it hereafter be thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries), affords an ample number of persons who are able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor.

The income arises from subscriptions and the county grant; the amount of the former being, for 1834, 74*l.* 12*s.* A list of subscribers for the past year, including the subscription of each, was furnished to the Assistant Commissioners, by which it would appear, that the charity must be considered as chiefly dependant on the bounty of one or two families, as it would be much impaired should they withdraw their subscriptions.

The principal items of expenditure are surgeon's salary and medicines.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE Assistant Commissioners were unable to ascertain the population of the district of Killyon, in which the dispensary is the only charitable institution, there being no other within six miles, and at the same time it does not afford any intern accommodation. This want is so severely felt, that arrangements had been made for supplying it by the formation of a small local hospital, and were only stopped in consequence of the inquiry now instituted; the proprietor of Mount Bellew has offered half an acre as a site for an hospital in perpetuity and a handsome donation, and the rector has likewise expressed his anxiety about the matter and his determination to subscribe.

Building.

The dispensary at Mount Bellew is held in the surgeon's nouse, and he is allowed 5*l.* a year, from the funds of the charity, for the room occupied.

Medical Officers.

The only medical officer is a member of the College of Surgeons, London, who, having no other appointment, resides at the institution in Mount Bellew. He is allowed to attend to private practice, but has never been obliged to procure a substitute in the discharge of his duties at the dispensary.

Payment.

His salary is 100*l.* a year, payable out of the general funds of the charity.

Pharmacy.

The Assistant Commissioners first visited the branch station at Carranagappagh, where they found two very good rooms in charge of a family, who stated that they received 4*l.* per annum for taking care of them; but the only medicines discovered consisted of one pint bottle of castor oil, a few spoonfuls of treacle, and two or three pounds weight of Glauber salts, the two latter articles in open vessels; the medical officer stated, that the dampness of the place prevented his keeping any medicines at the branch pharmacy, and that on the one day in the week on which he attends at this place, he carries some medicines with him from Mount Bellew, but the pharmacy thereto is but poorly supplied, and is kept in a dirty, slovenly manner; it did not appear to contain 5*l.* worth of medicines, nor did the greater number of bottles which held these medicines appear to come from a druggist's shop. All the invoices, except one small one for the current year, were said to be in the hands of the treasurer, who was absent, who had all the druggist's receipts also in his possession, with the exception of those for the last year, amounting to 58*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*; but the treasurer's book, in which all entries are made, was produced, and showed that the medicines for the last three years cost 171*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.*, and their carriage from Dublin was charged, for the same period, 6*l.* 18*s.* 9½*d.*, which at *3*s.* per cwt., would show that four tons, at least, of drugs had been used in that time in this dispensary, for there were certainly not more than two cwt. remaining at the period of this examination; the medical officer subsequently stated, that he was quite sure the invoices and druggist's receipts were not in the hands of the treasurer, but that, being considered of no value after having passed the grand jury, they had been lost. The supply of medical and surgical instruments kept for the use of the poor were also quite insufficient for the ends proposed.

tion.

A register is kept, on one page of which there appeared a statement of accounts, signed by five subscribers, and this document is periodically laid before the grand jury.

Who entitled to
Relief.

All the poor tenants of the subscribers are entitled to relief, but the clergyman of the parish never refuses a recommendation to any one, be he whose tenant he may.

Extern Patients.

There are two stations, at which patients are seen and receive medicines. The principal of these these stations is at Mount Bellew; the branch stations at Carranagappagh, two miles distant: lying-in cases are sometimes attended. Some few prescriptions are entered in a book. Vaccination is not regularly performed here, as there is not any provision for a supply of vaccine matter; and further, the poor have not the least confidence in the practice, they prefer inoculation with small-pox, which is performed by itinerant inoculators, who have been instrumental in dispersing the disease very widely in the neighbourhood. The medical officer himself never inoculates, and he disapproves highly of the custom.

* The carrier's charge per cwt. from Dublin is 2*s.* 10*d.*

The funds of this dispensary do not afford wine or other extras for the sick who are supplied by the charity of individuals, who bestow on the bearer of a recommendation from the medical attendant, whatever he may have suggested.

The charity is no further under the general management of the subscribers, than that a few of them meet once a year to pass the accounts.

There are no persons ex officio in the principal direction, to supply this want of attention.

There are a few written resolutions, but not any printed rules.

Reports consist of a written copy of the entry in the register above-mentioned. This neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, should such be deemed necessary.

The Assistant Commissioners procured a list of subscribers, by which it will be perceived that the establishment cannot be said to depend on the contribution of one individual; but if the sum annexed to the first name were withdrawn, the efficiency of the dispensary would be materially impaired. The whole income of the charity, as appeared by the treasurer's book, amounted to—

Subscriptions	-	-	-	-	-	-	£. 81	-	-
County grant	-	-	-	-	-	-	81	-	-
							£. 162	-	-

Of this income, which has been almost the same for the past two years, the principal items of expenditure are medical officer's salary 100*l.*, and the amount paid for medicines, which together meet the income as nearly as possible.

The medical officer stated that he attends at the assizes regularly to exhibit his registry and his accounts to the grand jury. And at the foot of the yearly accounts, which were in his own hand-writing, there was an affidavit which he stated he had, at the suggestion of the treasurer, sworn to, at the two past assizes, at which his presentments were granted. This affidavit set forth, that he had "regularly attended the dispensary in his charge three days in each week within the past year, with the exception of a very few days, on the greater number of which he had procured another medical attendant, &c."—a form of oath which, if made indispensable to the obtaining the county grant, the Assistant Commissioners could not but look on as highly vague, and tending to no good purpose, but rather to the contrary.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Rev. HUGH COLGAN, P. P.—The Medical Attendant.

The district for which this institution is intended is very irregular, as it entirely depends on the residence of the subscribers, therefore the population which it contains could not be ascertained. The medical officer stated he was liable to be called on to visit a patient at the distance of eleven or twelve miles. The only medical charity within six miles is the Loughrea Dispensary. It was thought that a great benefit would be conferred on the poor by the formation of medical districts, to each of which a dispensary might be attached, capable of receiving a few fever patients, or cases of severe accident requiring constant care and attention. The Rev. Mr. Colgan, P. P., thought that six or eight beds would be sufficient for the purpose.

This dispensary is held in a good sized room, which is used both as a dispensing and waiting room; neither medicines, weights, scales or writing materials, are kept here; but a quantity of medicine, sufficient for immediate use, is brought from Loughrea, by the medical officer, on the days of attendance.

The medical attendant, aged 40, is a graduate in medicine, of the University at Edinburgh, and was formerly an assistant surgeon in the Mayo militia, but at the period of the examination held no other appointment; he resides at Loughrea, four miles distant, where he pursues private practice; the days of attendance at the dispensary are Tuesdays, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, but the medical attendant gives advice and medicine daily at his residence, in Loughrea, to those applicants that are entitled to such. The duty of this institution has never been done by proxy. There is an apothecary who dispenses the medicines, for which he receives 10*l.* annually, but was so ill at the time of the Assistant Commissioners' visit, as to be unable to make his appearance. The dispensary remains closed always, except on Tuesdays, the days of attendance.

The physician and the apothecary are the only paid officers connected with the establishment;

No vacancies have occurred in the medical department since the establishment of the institution. This neighbourhood does not contain a sufficient number of individuals capable of paying for advice to support a medical man, independent of the dispensary emolument, nor is there one living in the district.

It has been already stated that the medicines belonging to the institution were all kept at the residence of the medical attendant in Loughrea; the annual expenditure for the supply of medicines during the last three years is as follows:—

1832	56	8	1
1833	43	3	10
1834	31	6	5

Instruments for cupping were the only surgical ones belonging to the institution. The medical officer is not bound to supply vaccine matter gratis, there being none kept at the dispensary; and although not prevented, he does not, nor would he approve of inoculation with small-pox matter.

Registration.

There is a register kept of some of those who receive advice and medicine, but it is very imperfect, and without date; difficult cases of labour only are attended when recommended by a subscriber's ticket.

Who entitled to
Relief.

Those only are entitled to relief who either live on the estates of subscribers or have tickets; the abuse of persons who are not in circumstances requiring gratuitous relief participating in the benefits of this charity exists to a great extent, such persons obtaining tickets; it is not necessary for a very poor person to obtain tickets for advice. This charity does not possess any means of affording assistance on the spot, in cases of accident. The prescriptions of authorized practitioners, unconnected with the institution, are never made up here. In ordinary cases of labour the poor are attended by midwives who are very ignorant, the consequences of which are frequent accidents. Vaccination is very seldom performed, the poor having no confidence in the operation; at the same time the medical attendant, who gets his vaccine matter from Dublin, has a high opinion of its efficacy.

Nourishment.

There does not exist any charity in this neighbourhood on which the medical attendant can give an order for food, clothing or fuel, but wine, or some other extra, is sometimes given, on his order, especially if made on the landlord in favour of the poor tenant.

ment.

A few of the subscribers meet once a year to audit and sanction the accounts, but no minutes of their proceedings appear on record: the general management of the charity appears to rest entirely with the medical attendant.

Officers not medical.

The sole officer not medical connected with the institution is the treasurer, who receives no remuneration for his services.

Attendants.

The only attendant is a porter, who receives an allowance of 8*d.* per day for each day of attendance, amounting to about 1*l.* 4*s.* per annum.

Reports.

There are no rules or reports connected with this charity in existence; the district affords a sufficient number of persons qualified to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor.

Receipts.

The existence of this institution does not depend on any one family, nor have the subscriptions materially fallen off, although a portion appears to be in arrear. The receipts and

On inquiry as to what control existed, if the subscribers or committee were led to make allowances higher than requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, or to prevent such occurrence as the friends of a medical gentleman getting up an institution merely for the sake of procuring his appointment, the gentlemen present state that in such case the grand jury could refuse or diminish the grant.

The medical officer was appointed by the subscribers, at the founding of the dispensary, since which time there has been no vacancy.

That this is a neighbourhood capable of supporting a medical gentleman exclusive of the dispensary appointment is evinced by the fact that two medical gentlemen reside in Loughrea besides the medical officer of this institution. It has never occurred here that a medical man has been appointed or retained against the known wishes of the people; on the contrary, the chief medical officer has possessed for many years, and still possesses, although at a very advanced age, the most unbounded confidence and respect of all who know him, for his tried integrity, humanity and skill. The poor look up to him with gratitude for his attention, and every individual, rich and poor, connected with the charity, appears perfectly satisfied with its administration.

The room in which the medicines were kept was nicely and neatly arranged. The medicines appeared to be good, but the supply was nearly exhausted; however, a quantity had been ordered, and was daily expected to arrive. The stock of medicines are ordered by the medical officer, from Messrs. Lightfoot and Co., of Dublin, and paid for by the treasurer. The medicines for the year 1833 cost 68*l.* 19*s.* 3½*d.*; ditto 1834, 55*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* None of the dispensary medicines are ever sold, nor does the medical officer keep any medicines for his private practice. Leeches are not provided. The medical officer has complete sets of surgical instruments of every description, which he uses for the dispensary purposes when requisite.

A register is kept, specifying the names of patients and medicines prescribed for many, but by no means for all of those who receive advice and medicine. A summary of this register is laid before the grand jury, preparatory to obtaining the county grant.

A subscriber may give away any number of tickets; poor applicants, however, are attended without procuring one, and the medical officer stated, that the imposition of persons in good circumstances applying at the dispensary is not practised here.

The extern patients are seen and prescribed for at the dispensary, but if the illness should be so severe as to prevent their coming, the medical officer would visit them in any part of the district; if accidents or fractures should occur, he has in the dispensary some requisites for rendering immediate assistance.

No medical practitioner unconnected with the dispensary can have his prescriptions made up there.

With respect to lying-in cases, the medical officer is not bound by any rule of the dispensary to attend them; nevertheless, he does attend in difficult cases. The poor women here are attended by midwives, who are without any sort of education, yet accidents are not much heard of.

Vaccination is performed at the dispensary whenever applied for, and matter is kept to be given away to the neighbouring practitioners. The medical attendant is of opinion that the Dublin vaccine matter is deteriorated, and he thinks better of that procured from London, which possesses a superiority, as he considers, arising from its being more frequently renewed from the cow. He does not approve of inoculation with small-pox, but applies it occasionally after vaccination, when particularly requested. There is not much small-pox in the neighbourhood, although the public are less partial to cow-pox than formerly. The medical officer does not think that cow-pox always succeeds; he thinks he recollects as many as 12 cases of failure within the last 50 years, but these were all mild cases of secondary small-pox.

Wine and other extras have been afforded to the sick poor, but in very rare cases. There is no charity on which an order for such, or for food, fuel or clothing can be given; but some of the gentry in the neighbourhood are in the habit of attending to the medical officer's notes or recommendation for such comforts.

The affairs of the institution are managed by the committee, who hold frequent meetings, and minutes are kept of their proceedings. The details of the management are left chiefly to the medical attendant, but no person has a right, by virtue of being an officer, to interfere in the principal direction.

The offices (non-medical) are those of treasurer and of secretary, both gratuitous.

There is a porter, allowed 5*l.* per annum.

Reports are annually made up, printed and laid before the grand jury. These are very succinct statements, merely stating the gross number of patients relieved, and enumerating the various diseases.

The district affords a sufficient number of proper persons who would be willing and fit to form a board of superintendence, and investigate into the wants of the poor, if it should be hereafter thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The income arises from voluntary subscriptions (which amounted in 1834-5 to 89*l.* 15*s.*), and the county grant to an equivalent amount. The subscriptions are not likely to fall off, and the charity is not dependent on the continuance of any one or two subscribers, as it would appear by a list of subscribers furnished the Assistant Commissioners.

The funds are collected by the treasurer and the medical officer, and deposited in the hands of the former.

The principal heads of expenditure are,—

M. B. BERMINGHAM, esq.—Rev. Mr. GARVEY, parish priest.—The Medical Attendant.

THE district is ill defined, and many poor, from a considerable distance, come with tickets from various subscribers; the population, as depending on the charity, cannot, therefore, be given.

The only medical institution within six miles is the dispensary of Dunmore; the want of an hospital for fever and bad accidents is much felt, and its establishment would be productive of much additional comfort to the poor of the district.

The dispensary is held in a small thatched house, for which a rent of 5*l.* is paid; it contains a waiting-room and shop, with a bed-room, for an assistant to occupy.

The house is held at will; but, as a principle, it would be much better if the premises were the property of the institution.

The sole medical officer is about 27 years of age; he has a midwifery certificate from Dublin, besides several certificates of attendance on lectures in Dublin; but possesses no diploma, either as physician, surgeon or apothecary.* He was appointed at the establishment of the institution in 1833, previous to which period he was attending to his professional education; he resides in the village of Miltown, and is allowed private practice. The days and hours of his attendance are Tuesday and Friday, from eleven to about four o'clock; but he is in the habit of seeing and prescribing for dispensary patients any day at his private residence.

The dispensary is closed, except on the specified days' attendance, and the medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant himself.

The medical attendant receives 70*l.* per annum from the general funds of the charity, without additional allowances of any kind. He was appointed to that institution without any public notice, and the neighbourhood of the district is not sufficient to support a medical man independently of the dispensary. The poor of this district to have the fullest confidence in the professional skill of the medical attendant, as well as in his kindness of manner and readiness to attend when required.

The pharmacy is well supplied; the room in which the medicines are kept is tolerably conveniently arranged; but in consequence of the damp, the rhubarb, jalap and senna are deposited in the medical attendant's own house. Those medicines of a more delicate nature are used whenever required; but none of any kind are sold; all are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co. of Dublin, and ordered by the medical attendant, under sanction of the committee, and paid for by the treasurer. At the foundation of the institution, the bill for medicines amounted to 31*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* The institution possesses a supply of surgical and medical instruments, but scarcely sufficient for their purposes; and the other instruments in the service of the institution are the private property of the medical attendant. Leeches are not afforded.

A register is kept of such applicants only as present tickets; it appears to be correct so far, and is laid before the grand jury.

Relief is afforded to all poor who apply, but those alone who have tickets, to which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, are entitled to it, and the number which each subscriber may issue is unlimited; the abuse of persons participating in the benefits of this charity whose circumstances do not require gratuitous relief, exists to a small extent; but there are no poor subscribers with whom a contract has been made, that gratuitous relief might be afforded in order to swell the subscription list, with a view to obtain large grants from the county.

Sick poor are visited at their own homes at any hour of the day or night, and the prescriptions entered in the book appeared to be such as are usual in the respective cases, but no neighbouring practitioner is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at this dispensary.

Midwifery cases are attended, but those only of a difficult nature; there are no midwives possessed of education in the neighbourhood, however, accidents but rarely occur.

No wine or other extra is provided, nor is there in the neighbourhood any institution on which the medical officer can give an order for food, clothes or fuel.

The general management rests with the annual subscribers of one guinea and upwards; but there is a committee, consisting of six gentlemen of the neighbourhood, who attend constantly to this institution, calling in general to visit it on Tuesdays after petty sessions.

The only officer not medical is the treasurer; but there are no printed bye-laws to regulate the election. No instance exists of an officer having been removed or suspended.

There is a porter attached to the institution, who is paid 5*l.* per annum, and allowed lodgings, but no other perquisite.

There are no rules for the conduct of the institution printed, nor reports made of admissions, discharges, &c.

The neighbourhood does afford a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

This charity not being possessed of any capital stock in houses, lands, &c., its income is derived altogether from subscriptions and the county grant, the former amounting for the past

The Medical Attendant.

THE medical attendant estimates the extent of the district for which this dispensary is intended at ten miles square, and the population at 5,000 or 6,000; he is liable to be called as far as twelve miles to visit a patient. There is no medical institution or medical practitioner within ten miles; the want of intern accommodation is much felt; the medical attendant is under the necessity of occasionally receiving poor patients after operation in his own house and at his private expense.

The dispensary-house is a small building, one story in height, near the town of Monivea, it was built in 1822 for a fever hospital, but never received any fever patients; and in 1826, it was converted to its present purpose; it is well situated, and comprises a hall, waiting-room and shop, besides a sitting-room, two bed-rooms, kitchen and servant's room for the medical attendant; it belongs to Mr. French, of Monivea, who grants it to the dispensary at the yearly rent of 5*l.*, for the purpose of keeping it in repair.

The sole medical attendant is a member of the College of Surgeons, London, and a licentiate of midwifery, Dublin; he resides constantly at the institution, to which he was appointed in 1826 by the committee; he holds no other appointment, but is allowed to have private practice; the duty of this institution is not done by proxy; the medical officer's brother resides with him, and assists him, but has no allowance for this service from the funds of the charity.

The sole medical officer receives a salary of 75*l.* per annum, paid from the general fund; his only other perquisites are a house and 2*l.* for firing; he is the only medical man residing in the district, which is scarcely sufficient to support one independently of the dispensary emolument; the medical attendant is considered to be a well-informed, active, zealous and humane practitioner, and a valuable acquisition to the district in which he resides.

The room in which the medicines are kept is small but convenient; the medicines are of good quality, but the stock was small; it is laid in in the month of January and obtained from Messrs. Geoffery & Co., Dublin, on the order of the medical attendant, under the sanction of the secretary; those of a more delicate and expensive kind are used but in very small quantities. No medicines are kept for private practice. Leeches are occasionally, though very rarely, supplied.

The medicines in 1830 cost - - - - -	47	3	1
„ 1832 „ - - - - -	36	-	2

The surgical instruments belonging to this institution were few and insufficient for their purposes. There is a constant supply of vaccine matter which the medical attendant procured from London, as he stated that he found that procured from Dublin frequently to fail. The operation is regularly performed. The poor have confidence in it, and small pox does not prevail to much extent in the neighbourhood.

The medical attendant does not, and will not, inoculate with small-pox matter.

A register of the number of applicants for relief is regularly kept and laid before the grand jury. Capital operations are performed at this dispensary, but the number within the last year was not stated.

Those only who reside on the estates of subscribers, or have tickets, are entitled to relief, but it is never refused to any mendicant or poor traveller.

No persons attempt to participate in the charity whose circumstances do not require gratuitous relief. The subscriptions have all the appearance of bonâ fide contributions to the charity, no attempt being made to obtain large grants from the county by swelling the subscription list with the names of poor subscribers who might afterwards obtain gratuitous relief. A poor person must have an order, but one subscriber's signature is sufficient, and there is no limit to the number which each is authorized to issue.

Sick poor are seen at the institution and visited at their own homes at any hour of the day or night, if requisite, and, in case of accidents, the institution possesses means of affording assistance. Difficult labour cases only are attended. Prescriptions are entered and are such as are usual; but no neighbouring practitioner is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at the dispensary.

Wine and other extras are occasionally furnished from the funds, but generally by the landlord, on the recommendation of the medical attendant; there is not, however, any charity on which an order can be given for food, fuel or clothing for the sick poor. The medical attendant has occasionally accommodated poor persons, after undergoing operations, in his own house, at his private expense.

The institution is managed by a committee of five, and seems to be carefully looked after. No person is ex officio in the principal direction of it.

The only officer not medical is the treasurer, whose office is gratuitous.

A porter is paid 3 l. per annum, without any other perquisite whatever.

Statements are made to the committee annually of the admissions, discharges, cures, &c., but it is admitted by the medical attendant that these details have no actual basis in his records, as accurate reports of dispensary practice would be unattainable. The registry of applicants is, however, accurate, and laid annually before the grand jury.

This neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons able to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

The charity depends very much on one or two families for support, but it is not likely to cease to exist. There never is any difficulty made by the grand jury in giving the annual county grant. The charity possesses no capital stock in lands, houses, &c., but its income is derived altogether from subscriptions and the county grant of an equivalent amount.

The funds are lodged in the branch at Galway, until required.

The principal items of expenditure are surgeon's salary, medicines and rent; and the accounts for the past three years may be thus stated:—

The dispensary district extends over the parishes of Kilcullen, Killanen, and part of Moycullen. The population cannot be given exactly, but certainly is as much as 20,000. The medical officer is expected to visit at a distance of 18 miles; the nearest medical institutions are those of Galway, and there is a great deficiency of dispensaries in this district; none are ever refused either advice or medicine, but the want of intern accommodation for fever cases and accidents is much felt.

The dispensary is held in a small house in the village of Oughterarde, in which there is, besides, a waiting-room, with a fireplace; for this a rent of 4*l.* per annum is paid.

The sole medical officer is a member of the College of Surgeons, London, but possesses no midwifery certificate; he is about 38 years of age, and resides near the institution, to which he was appointed at its original formation; he has no other appointment, excepting that he attends the military stationed here; he is allowed private practice; the fixed days of attendance at the dispensary being Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; but he attends every day and dispenses the medicines himself.

The salary of the medical officer is not fixed, but is regulated by the other expenses, as he receives, without any other allowance whatever, the balance remaining after paying all the other disbursements of the charity; he collects the greater proportion of the subscriptions himself, and some are as low as one shilling, which small sum entitles the contributor and his family to receive advice and medicine for one year.

There has been no election since the establishment of the institution; and it was stated, that the immediate neighbourhood does not afford a sufficient number of individuals capable of paying for advice to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary emolument.

The shop is small, but neatly kept, and the medicines appeared to be of good quality and in sufficient quantity, including also those of the more delicate sorts; they are supplied by Messrs. Pollock and Co., Dublin, 'on the order of the medical attendant, and paid for by the treasurer. The medicines belonging to the institution are never sold, and the medical officer keeps medicines for his private practice at his own house; he sells medicines, though not a licentiate apothecary; but as he states, not at the dispensary-house. There are a few surgical instruments belonging to the institution, and leeches are afforded on rare occasions. Vaccination is not performed, and the medical officer does not and will not inoculate with small-pox matter.

A register is kept which distinguishes, 1st, the number; 2d, the date of admission; 3d, patient's name; 4th, age; 5th, disease; 6th, name of recommendation; 7th, residence of patient; 8th, result of case; 9th, treatment and remarks: by this document it appeared that the number of poor who received relief was—up to February inclusive, and the medical officer informed the Assistant Commissioners, that many had received advice and medicine whose names were not entered in this register.

In 1832	-	-	-	-	-	1,692.
In 1833	-	-	-	-	-	1,996.
In 1834	-	-	-	-	-	1,087.

Any person who is poor is entitled to relief. The abuse of persons participating in the benefits of this charity who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous advice is attempted, but is guarded against as much as possible by obliging such to subscribe a small sum; such poor subscribers are attended, and get medicines from the dispensary. A ticket is not necessary, nor is there any limit as to their number.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, and visited, when necessary, at their homes. The institution possesses splints, but no other means of affording assistance in case of accident. There are no neighbouring practitioners. The usual prescriptions are entered on the books.

Wine and other extras are not afforded from the funds of this dispensary, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given for food, clothing or fuel.

The general management is vested in the guinea and upwards subscribers; no person ex officio being in the principal direction; but the affairs of the dispensary have been left essentially under the management of the surgeon, of whose attention to his patients the Reverend Dr. Kirwan, P.P., spoke in the highest terms. This charity affords another very striking, but not very satisfactory, example of, the whole concerns of an institution abandoned to the management of one individual, and that the very individual whose direct interest it is to allow as small a portion as possible of the funds to be expended upon those persons for whose relief exclusively the institution was founded, and is supported by the rate-payers of the county. The medical officer keeps all the accounts of the charity, and makes all the payments, which he enters in the book produced as the treasurer's book, but which is constantly in his (the medical officer's) possession.

There is a committee appointed, which consists of six persons, who meet only when required.

The only officers not medical are the treasurer and the secretary, whose offices are gratuitous.

The items of expenditure on account of this charity were thus stated, for the years 1832 and 1833:—

THE population of the district for which this institution is intended is estimated at 20,000 ; the medical attendant is not expected to visit a poor patient at a greater distance than five miles from the dispensary. There is no other medical institution within six miles.

Population and
Extent of Country.

No applicants, who are proper objects, are refused relief.

The want of intern accommodation is severely felt ; beds for bad accidents are in readiness at the porter's lodge, but on examination there appeared but two, and those in miserably small rooms. No patients were occupying them at the period of this examination, nor had they been occupied for some time.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary is held in a house tolerably central, containing four rooms; viz. a shop, a large waiting room (which was full of patients when visited), a store-room and a bed-room for the apothecary.

For this a rent of 25*l.* is paid to the occupant of an adjoining house. These premises are held at will, but it would be much better, generally speaking, if dispensary buildings were the property of the charity.

The chief medical officer is a physician and a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, who has also a midwifery certificate from the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, and was formerly an army surgeon, but now holds no other appointment besides this dispensary.

Medical Officers.

The apothecary resides at the dispensary and is expected to be always in attendance to dispense the medicines, and a vast deal of business appears to be done, the dispensary being open every day excepting Sundays.

The chief medical officer receives from the general funds a salary of 100 l. a year without allowances of any kind, and the apothecary a yearly salary of 50 l. and lodgings in the dispensary house, but he is expected to find firing for the dispensary.

Payment.

The mode of election of the medical officers is by vote of the subscribers of one guinea and upwards, and pains are taken, by public advertisement, to secure competition. For the last vacancy there were seven candidates.

Election.

This neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of individuals capable of paying for advice to support a medical man independently of a dispensary, and there are several resident in the town.

The room in which the medicines are kept is large and properly laid out, but damp and not in the very best order. The medicines are of good quality and in sufficient quantity, including those of a more delicate nature. All are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co. of Dublin, and are paid for by the treasurer, the cost amounting to about 80 l. a year, but no invoices or receipts for the last three years were forthcoming, as it was stated that for the last six months only had any statement of expense been kept. The medicines belonging to the institution are never sold, nor are any kept by the medical officers for private practice. There appeared to be a sufficient number of surgical instruments belonging to the institution for its wants, and they are not allowed to be lent or used in private practice. Leeches are supplied occasionally, arrangements being made for obtaining them from Dublin at the cost of 18 s. per hundred, that number being ordered as often as required.

Pharmacy.

A register is kept which distinguishes the number attended, the number of dispensations, the name of each patient, by whom recommended, and the treatment observed in each case. A summary of the whole is laid before the grand jury.

Patients' Registration.

Any poor person is entitled to relief who has a ticket signed by one subscriber, and there is no limit to the number issuable by each. Domestic servants may procure tickets. Cases of accident only have assistance afforded without tickets. Persons who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance sometimes attempt to participate in the benefit of the charity, but the abuse is guarded against as much as possible. None of the poorer classes subscribe, nor is a contract for gratuitous assistance ever made with any subscriber with a view to swelling the subscription list, and thus obtaining large grants from the county.

Relief.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, and also visited at their own homes at night or day, if such attendance be necessary, or is requested by the subscriber who recommends that patient. In the event of accidents, such as fractures, &c. the institution does possess the means of furnishing immediate assistance. No neighbouring practitioner is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at the institution. Labour cases, when difficult, are attended. Five or six such have occurred within the last six months; but a regularly educated midwife resides in the town, and there are besides several skilful women about the country.

Though among the rules and regulations of this dispensary, there are none relative to vaccination, the medical attendant vaccinates regularly. The results are found efficacious, and the confidence of the poor pretty general, but small-pox still prevails to a great extent. The medical officer will not inoculate with small-pox matter.

The institution does not provide wine or any other extra. Nor is there any neighbouring charity on which the surgeon is authorized to give an order for food, clothes or fuel; but any recommendation for wine or milk, &c. signed by the medical attendant, is attended to at the Archbishop of Tuam's palace.

The affairs of this institution are most carefully attended to, and are not left to the management of the surgeon alone, nor is there any one ex officio in the principal direction. The general meetings of the subscribers are fixed for June and December, and minutes of the proceedings at these meetings are regularly kept. At the last general meeting more than twenty subscribers attended.

There is also a committee of ten, whose fixed meetings take place monthly, and minutes of their proceedings are kept. During the intervals of either governors or committee, the secretary frequently visits the dispensary.

The officers not medical are the president, vice-president, treasurer and secretary, whose offices are all gratuitous.

There is one porter attached to this dispensary, who receives a salary of 16*l.* per annum, but neither board nor lodging.

The rules are not printed, and consist merely of a series of resolutions adopted at a general meeting of the subscribers, relating to the appointment of the managing committee, the non-medical officers, the mode of disbursement, &c.

Reports are made to the grand jury once, and to the subscribers twice, every year; but are never printed. The neighbourhood affords an ample number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

No report can be made for any year anterior to 1833, as the documents, if any exist, are in the hands of the late medical attendant and treasurer.

This charity does not depend on any private subscriber, nor is it likely to cease to exist, nor does any subscriber stipulate for medical advice or medicine for himself or any part of his family gratuitously. This charity possesses no capital stock in houses, lands, or other property producing income.

Custody of Funds.

By the regulations of the grand jury of this county, all dispensary funds are paid into the Bank at Galway, and drawn by an order of the committee, signed by the chairman and treasurer.

THE district for which this dispensary is intended extends about eight miles in one direction to Loughmacott, and about nine in the other to Desart, embracing a population of about 15,000. That portion of the town of Athlone which lies on the Westmeath side of the Shannon has a separate dispensary, and a similar charity exists at Bridewell, about five miles distant. The witnesses considered this institution quite adequate to the wants of its district, but at the same time represented four or at most five miles as the greatest distance to which such charities ought to afford assistance. If a division of the country were to take place, with a view to a better system of medical relief, such a division would meet with general approbation, and if it were to be accompanied with the erection of district hospitals, would be of the utmost importance to the poor of this neighbourhood, who, in cases of danger, are exposed to risk of life, by the necessity of being carried to the county infirmary, at Roscommon, upwards of fifteen miles distant, and even when carried so far, that institution is often too full to be able to afford the required accommodation.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The dispensary is carried on in a small house hired from one of the subscribers; it is convenient and well adapted for the purpose, and possesses a comfortable waiting-room for the patients. It is held at a moderate rent from year to year, but no great inconvenience could be experienced by a change of proprietors, though there can be no doubt that it would be more desirable were all such places the property of the county.

Building, &c.

The medical attendant is about twenty-five years of age; he is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, and received his instructions in midwifery at the Lying-in Hospital, Dublin. At the formation of the institution in September 1833, he was elected by the subscribers as general medical attendant; at that time he had just concluded his studies. He resides within a hundred yards of the place, and is permitted private practice. He possesses no other appointment, and is expected to attend at the dispensary on Tuesdays and Fridays, from eleven until two o'clock, an attendance not considered sufficient. There are no express rules enforcing the regularity of his attendance, but the Assistant Commissioners were assured by the Roman Catholic clergyman, that the subscribers possess abundant control over him on that point, and that in case of any complaint made by the poor, he, the clergyman, would insist on an explanation, and that if it were not satisfactory, he would call a general meeting, and demand the removal of the surgeon. Medicines are dispensed by the surgeon alone: once, on the occasion of his illness, he procured the services of another surgeon residing in the neighbourhood; and when not on the spot himself, any sudden accident, &c., would meet with immediate attention from the same gentleman.

Medical Officers.

His salary is eighty pounds per annum, without any allowance for horse, lodging, &c. The only means the grand jury possess of preventing the payment of too high a salary is the power of refusing the presentment; but that body is totally unprovided with any check on the possible combination of an individual with his friends to form an institution for the sake of being appointed to it. Instances of this have not occurred here, but it was thought such may have been the case elsewhere.

Payment.

The first and only election took place last year, by public advertisement giving notice to candidates. At that election, it was understood that all should be entitled to vote who, up to the hour of voting, should have paid the sum of 1*l.* 1*s.* This was permitted solely because the institution was new. There was but one candidate, and a degree from some university or college was considered necessary, without any limitation as to age. Athlone and its neighbourhood may be considered as wealthy. A considerable number of individuals of property reside here, and in consequence there are five or six medical men in the town, but none of them would be willing to undertake the charge of the dispensary gratuitously. There has not been any opportunity of considering the question of resignations or retiring allowances. The poor here are perfectly aware of the power which they possess, by appealing to a subscriber, of checking any improper conduct or harshness on the part of the surgeon towards them, and have even already acted on that power; indeed, it may be said that a medical attendant ought not to retain his situation, if he were known to be justly obnoxious to the poorer classes, whose confidence it is necessary he should fully possess, in order to be extensively useful.

Election.

The Assistant Commissioners were gratified with the neatness which appeared to prevail in the room appropriated to the dispensing of medicine. The medicine is supplied by the firm of Boileau & George, of Dublin. The list of drugs included every thing in general use; but of the more delicate and expensive preparations there was only quinine. There was enough of every article, and of good quality. It was under the immediate care of the surgeon. The treasurer said that he had paid for medicine, in the year 1833, the sum of 36*l.* 15*s.*; that none of it is ever permitted to be sold on any account, and that the surgeon does not practise as an apothecary. The apparatus for preparing infusions, &c. was good; but there were no surgical instruments of any description, and leeches are never used.

A register is kept by the medical attendant of all the persons who apply for relief, distinguishing all the necessary particulars. The grand jury receive a copy. It appears from it, that during last year 4,866 patients had been attended, and that none recommended had ever been refused assistance in advice and medicine. At the time of this examination there were about 60 on the books. About six cases of midwifery had been attended; but there had been no instance of a capital operation.

The surgeon is expected to attend to every one, including servants, who produces the recommendation of a subscriber, a condition attended with but little difficulty, as but one signature is required to such tickets, which may be issued without limit. The abuse does not exist here as it is believed elsewhere, of persons in easy circumstances participating in the benefits of the charity; nor have any subscriptions been obtained under the stipulation of relief being afforded in return, or for the purpose of procuring a larger presentment from the county.

Patients are prescribed for at the institution, and those whose diseases do not permit them to attend are visited at their own homes. The surgeon mentioned a case in which he went ten miles on such an occasion, and he considers himself bound always, at every hour of the day and night, to visit any urgent case which may require his aid, and to repeat his visits even two or three times a day in acute cases. Though the establishment does not supply him with splints, or instruments of any kind necessary for accidents, fractures, &c. yet he would afford every assistance in his power under such circumstances. It occasionally happens that the prescriptions of a physician in considerable practice, a governor, and in possession of the confidence of the poor, are made up here, but no others. It is usual with subscribers to recommend only those lying-in women whose cases present some unusual feature, and it is much to be regretted that the ignorant and uneducated midwives of the town, into whose hands poor women usually fall, prevent the interference of the physician being sought before, as, the Assistant Commissioners were assured by a physician and the Catholic clergyman, the difficulties of the case have increased into dangerous and extreme suffering. The objects of the dispensary do not embrace the gratuitous performance of vaccination. The medical attendant's opinion is decidedly favourable to the efficacy of vaccination, and he thinks that an increasing confidence of the public in it is to be discerned. Inoculation with small-pock is not contrary to the rules of the charity; but he has never adopted that practice. About six months ago small-pox prevailed to a considerable extent in the neighbourhood, and at the time of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners there was a case of it at the door of the house.

No wine or nourishment of any kind is supplied to the poor by this or any other charity in the district.

The general management is nominally placed in the hands of 72 subscribers, on the list of whom the medical officer is not found. It yet appears, that in all essential particulars he has the entire direction of the institution. There has been but one general meeting since the formation of the charity, at which 12 or 14 governors attended. All are equally entitled to vote; but proxies are not allowed. No minutes are kept of their proceedings.

There is not any managing committee nor any board of superintendence, neither does any subscriber so far interest himself in the affairs of the institution as to attend to them individually.

A new treasurer has just been appointed, on the resignation of the former. Religious feelings are stated never to interfere with the election of any proper person. We have already mentioned the unusually late period at which subscriptions were received on the appointment of the surgeon, and it is explained by the necessity there then existed of creating funds for the establishment of the charity. The treasurer does not give security.

Nine pounds a year are paid to the person (a subscriber) in whose house the dispensary is carried on, for the hire of two rooms, for fuel and for his attendance.

A few resolutions appear in the printed report but there does not exist any series of rules and regulations for the systematic management of the institution.

Once in the year, when application is made for the presentment, a report is laid before the grand jury of the affairs of the charity; on the last occasion of this kind, 50 copies were also struck off for circulation amongst the subscribers. We have before alluded to the number of independent residents in this neighbourhood, and we are assured, that at any time a sufficient number of fit and proper persons could be procured quite willing to co-operate in any inquiry into the state of the poor which might afford reasonable hopes of effective succour being extended to them.

The following report shows that the support of this charity for the last year arises from subscriptions amounting to 79*l.* 9*s.* and the presentment of the grand jury of 60*l.* The only large apothecary's shop occupy part of the ground floor, the remainder being appropriated to the servant and his wife, who take care of the house. The situation of the building, outside of the town, on high and open ground, is wanting in nothing but a supply of water. There are no baths. The witnesses present concurred in asserting that the site of the building, as well as a small garden attached to it, have been public property from time immemorial, and that, if necessary, they would maintain the right. The Protestant rector of the parish, however, claimed the property as being glebe ground, but said he never would demand rent, nor take steps to establish his alleged right. Neither he nor any one else ever demanded rent for it.

A gentleman, æt. 28, was appointed as general medical attendant to this hospital in September 1833. The election took place at a meeting of the subscribers. Previous to his election, he followed his profession in the town where he still resides, about a quarter of a mile from the dispensary, and engages in private practice. He is a member of the College of Surgeons in London, and has attended to midwifery at the lying-in hospital in Dublin; but did not remain long enough to take out a diploma. He holds no other appointment, and has been found very regular in his attendance; but if obliged through illness or otherwise to absent himself for a time, Dr. Henry would discharge his duties. Mondays and Thursdays, from eleven till two o'clock, are considered to afford ample time for all that is required of him; but he is always ready to afford his services, and dispenses the medicines in person, providing also for immediate relief, should any emergency occur when he may not be on the spot. The poor are well aware that a controlling power lies with the subscribers, to which they could appeal, should he be irregular or inattentive.

Payment.

He receives a salary of 36*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, and has not any further allowance. The gentleman present agree in believing, that though it is not the case here, in many other places, medical men have combined with their friends to raise an institution by feigned subscriptions, in order to secure an appointment an abuse which the power possessed by the grand jury, of refusing the presentment, was not found sufficient to counteract.

Election.

At the last election (of which due notice was given in two newspapers, together with the qualifications required in candidates, viz. a degree from some College or University,) none voted but those who had paid a subscription of 1*l.* 1*s.* The present medical officer was the only candidate. This district is not wanting in a considerable number of opulent individuals; but although their presence has induced four or five qualified medical men to settle here, and notwithstanding Dr. Henry did in fact attend the dispensary gratuitously for upwards of 20 years, there is not at present any one who would undertake the duty without some compensation.

Pharmacy.

The medicines are dispensed in a room which is neatly kept, and well fitted up. The drugs were good, but scarcely in sufficient quantity. They are under the care of the servant, and always kept locked, and on no account allowed to be sold. Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin, supply all medicine, and the treasurer, when paying their bill, debits them with 1*l.* 1*s.* as their annual subscription. The Assistant Commissioners were satisfied with the appearance of the apparatus used in preparing infusions, &c., the measures, weights, &c.; but regretted to find that the charity provided neither surgical instruments nor leeches.

Patients' Registration.

A very accurate register is kept by the surgeon, of which a copy is annually laid before the grand jury. The surgeon never refuses attention to any applicant, and he had about twenty externs on his book at the time of the Assistant Commissioner's visit. He had attended six cases of midwifery during the previous year, but he had had no occasion to perform any capital operation.

Who entitled to Relief.

Whoever can procure the recommendation of a governor (a condition entailing no difficulty, as the number of such papers is unlimited, and a single signature is sufficient) is entitled to claim the attention of the surgeon. Relief, in fact, is attainable by every indigent person, though the subscribers are very few. Few participate in the benefits of the charity who are not in circumstances requiring gratuitous relief, if we except servants of the upper class: it was not long since that the medical attendant was called to a considerable distance, and in the night time, to visit a lady's maid, at the house of one of the governors.

Extern Patients.

This charity does not confine its relief merely to the prescribing for and giving medicine to such patients as come to the dispensary. The poor, whose diseases do not admit of their leaving home, are visited in their houses by the medical attendant as often as the circumstances require, whether by day or night, and any where within three miles. The institution does not possess any splints or bandages for the securing of fractures or other accidents. The only prescriptions compounded here, besides those of the medical attendant, are those of Dr. Henry. When lying-in women experience any great difficulty or delay in parturition, the medical attendant is sent for; under ordinary circumstances they are attended by midwives, who, for the most part, are excessively ignorant; there being not more than one or two who are properly qualified. The opinion of the surgeon is decidedly against the practice of inoculation with small pox. He stated that that disease has been very prevalent for some time past, and it is to be regretted that the strong prejudices of the lower orders against vaccination, for the systematic performance of which there is no regular provision here, materially impede whatever check that practice might be on the disease. With the exception of the Protestant rector, who had had small pox after vaccination in his own family, the rest are strongly in favour of it.

The narrow resources of this institution do not admit of giving wine or other nourishment to the sick poor. The supply of such things is often more wanted than medicine; and it is but too true, that death from privation of sufficient food too frequently occurs amongst the destitute population of this town.

Lunatic patients must be sent to the lunatic district asylum at Maryborough, which is 50 miles off; that which is at Ballinasloe, at a distance of about 12 miles, serves for the province of Connaught only.

Maryborough, it was remarked, is very ineligibly placed, being far in the south of the district for which it is intended, which includes Longford and Westmeath, besides the King's and Queen's counties; and it is much the same with Ballinasloe, which lies in the south-eastern corner of its district, almost in the verge of it. Another inconvenience in the transmission of lunatics arose from the want of funds. The governor of the Maryborough asylum, who was applied to in a recent instance, could not assist them, there being no money allowed for that purpose from the funds of the institution, and great delay was experienced from the only resource which remained, namely, that of a private subscription.

The general management of the charity is nominally vested in the 22 or 23 subscribers; but it is in truth intrusted to the surgeon, who is a governor, and to the treasurer. Summonses are annually issued for a general meeting; but, except on the occasion of an election, one rarely takes place.

There is no managing committee. The subscribers are said to be summoned for particular business, and the resolutions passed to be entered in the book. The last entry bears the date of February 1834; but we ascertained that the signatures attached to it were procured, by sending the book round to the residences of the various gentlemen. The Protestant rector says he is in the habit of visiting the dispensary.

The treasurer, was appointed some years ago. There is no exclusion from any office on account of religious opinions: the last surgeon was a Catholic. The treasurer receives no salary, and gives no security; but he annually submits his accounts in a very satisfactory manner, both to the grand jury and the subscribers.

A man and his wife reside in the house, in order to take care of it; they receive 2*l.* a year in wages, and are allowed 4*l.* for fuel.

There are no rules for the management of this institution.

Reports are annually drawn; copies are printed and sent round to each of the subscribers, and to the grand jury. This year some gentlemen doubled the usual amount of their subscriptions, as they were anxious to present a piece of plate to Dr. Henry, on his retiring from the dispensary, which he had attended gratuitously for a period of 23 years. For this purpose the above individuals raised a sum of twenty pounds amongst themselves, and by placing it under the head of subscriptions, it is to be remarked, they obtained from the grand jury a similar sum, which was applied as intended. Every person present expressed a wish to see some measures adopted by the legislature for the relief of the sick, aged and infirm.

Funds and Accounts. Receipts. The amount of annual subscriptions for the last three years was as follows:—1831, 37*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; 1832, 51*l.* 12*s.*; 1833, 38*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* The same sums were annually allowed by the grand jury. Until some few years ago annual subscriptions used to bring in nearly 120*l.*; but at that time there was not any dispensary at Glassan, nor on the other side of the water. The corporation used also to give 10 l., which has been since discontinued.

The Rev. Mr. Kilroe, P. P., observed, that he did not subscribe, owing to the following circumstance: some unfortunate persons, who were turned out of their lodgings, being ill with fever, were brought to the dispensary by himself and Mr. Dillon, in a handbarrow, in which the poor patients were only covered with a few boughs of trees. They were refused admittance, on the ground that the institution was only for dispensary purposes, and not for fever patients. Two died in consequence. It was thought most inhuman to refuse these poor creatures the temporary shelter they stood so much in need of; and great complaint was made of governors opposing, most unaccountably, the opening of the hospital for the reception of patients. Only one subscriber of ten guineas. On inquiring into the cause of the small number of subscribers, we were informed that every step had been taken to increase their numbers, and that application had been made to the proprietors of large estates, to two or three in particular, which had been met by refusals. The poor tenants living on these properties procured relief under the tickets of those who do subscribe. No property of any kind belongs to the institution.

Subscriptions are generally sent to the treasurer, who retains them till wanted for use. The principal heads of expenditure are surgeon's salary, medicine and servants' wages. These and a few other items amounted to, in the years 1831, 93*l.* 14*s.* 3 1/2*d.*; 1832, 109*l.* 0*s.* 6 1/2*d.*; 1833, 69*l.* 16*s.* 2 3/4*d.* Bills are examined previous to payment by the treasurer, who then pays them at his own discretion.

Accounts. Accounts are made up each year; but it is found impossible to take the opinion of the subscribers on them, as, though they are always summoned to the yearly meeting, they never attend. Copies of the accounts are, however, printed, and each subscriber, as well as the grand jury, receives one.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Boyle Dispensary. Dr. CRYEN, physician of the town.—Rev. Mr. DIVINE, P. P.—The medical attendant of the Institution.—Rev. Mr. HACHET, vicar of the parish.—Mr. JOHN MULHALL, governor.—J. ROBERTSON, governor and member of the committee.—Mr. JAMES McDONNELL.—JOHN SMALLMAN.—Dr. CRANSTON, &c.

Population and Extent of Country. THE population of the country for which this institution is intended is about 10,000, and its extent six miles; the only institution within that distance is Croghan, five miles off. There are no other institutions, and it is considered that this one is not sufficient for the extent of country to which it affords relief. The population of about four or five miles would be sufficient cient for one dispensary, though none who are recommended have been refused medical relief here. Great inconvenience has arisen from the want of intern accommodation. It would be very desirable to form medical districts, with a dispensary attached to each; and the want of such is very sensibly felt.

The dispensary is situated in a house belonging to a principal proprietor, for which no rent is paid. There are no baths in the institution.

There are two medical officers, the one a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and surgeon to the Roscommon militia, aged 53; and the other aged 37, who graduated at Edinburgh, is medical attendant, also, of the Croghan dispensary, attends the police, and the tenants of the principal proprietor before alluded to, all of whom get their medicine at this dispensary; they reside within a quarter of a mile from the institution. The first was appointed on a death-vacancy, in December 1819; the second in August 1826, on the resignation of the former surgeon; they were appointed by the subscribers; are allowed private practice, but attend the dispensary twice a week, Mondays and Thursdays. Duty never done by proxy.

There is an apothecary, who attends from twelve to three o'clock on Mondays and Thursdays. The gentlemen present think the hours and days of attendance sufficiently frequent. A complaint may be made to a subscriber. Either of the medical gentlemen are always on the spot to afford immediate relief. The medicines are distributed by the apothecary or his assistant.

The two medical officers are paid 30*l.* each per annum; the apothecary, 25*l.* There is no allowance for a horse, or any mode of conveyance, nor is either provided with board or lodging.

Medical officers are elected by the subscribers at large, a meeting being called for the purpose. There are no means used to ensure any large competition, and it was stated that the establishment of this charity was kept secret at the time, fearing that particular persons would apply for the medical appointment. It would be most desirable to have a controlling power over the elections, particularly as it was confidently thought that no medical man could be elected there but with the approbation of one individual. Physicians or surgeons that are candidates must have a degree from some university or college. An apothecary must be a master of the Apothecaries' Hall, Dublin. There is no limitation as to the age of officers. There were two candidates at the last vacancy. It is not necessary to send any notice of appointment to the grand jury. The conditions for voting are acted up to. There is only one medical man in the district qualified to be elected. There are no retiring allowances. In case of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical attendant, the poor can complain to a subscriber, and are aware that they can do so. It is not thought that the medical officers are ever appointed or retained contrary to the feelings of the people.

The room where the medicines are, and the bottles, &c. appear neatly kept. The medicines are of good quality but by no means of sufficient quantity, particularly as the tenants above alluded to are supplied from the dispensary stock; although one of the medical attendants is paid a salary for attending them. Medicines of the more delicate descriptions are not kept at this institution, but the treasurer stated that if required, they would be got at an apothecary's shop in the town. They are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co. of Dublin, and paid for by the treasurer; the annual expense for the last three years was, for 1831, 45*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*; for 1832, 41*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*; for 1833, 30*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* The treasurer and apothecary both have keys to the shop. The medicines are never sold. The apothecary has an establishment in the town of Boyle. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution. Leeches are too expensive to be used; in fact, the parsimony in this establishment, as to the supply of medicine, is so great that one of the physicians complains he cannot order what is necessary; the treasurer will not allow it, and appears to order only what he thinks proper. There is no regulation as to vaccination, the treasurer having withdrawn the subscription, and no means taken to ensure a supply of lymph from the Vaccine Board at Dublin. The medical attendants are not prevented, but never do inoculate with small-pock matter.

There is a register kept by the medical attendants, and a copy sent to the grand jury; none are refused attendance if recommended. There were about 12 capital operations within the last three years, out of which one death occurred. Midwifery cases are not at all attended from the dispensary.

A recommendation is necessary, and there is no particular regulation as to servants of subscribers. Attendance is very often given to those not proper objects of charity. The attendance and medicine afforded to the tenants before stated, and to the police, keeps the apothecary or his assistant on constant duty. The rule is that each subscriber can only recommend one patient, but this rule is not strictly adhered to; the clergy can recommend as many as they please. However, the Roman Catholic clergymen and many other persons will neither subscribe nor recommend as long as the establishment is so conducted, the treasurer having almost the whole control.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, they are also attended at their own dwellings within the town, and, if required, they would be paid two or three visits in the day. There is no regulation to enforce attendance at night; it rests merely on the will of the medical attendants, and one stated that he would attend, the other would not. In case of accidents, dents, &c. the institution does not possess the means, splints, bandages, &c. of affording assistance. Lying-in cases are attended by midwives, from whose ignorance injury frequently arises. Vaccination would be a great preventative to small-pock which has been frequent of late years; the opinion of the better class is favourable to vaccination, and the lower order would frequently use it if there were an establishment formed for the purpose.

Wine is given when ordered; about six bottles are used in the year; there is no institution on which an order can be given for food, &c.

Twelve constitute the general direction; no salaried officers are governors. The management seems entirely under the control of the treasurer, even as to the quantity of medicine, which is insufficient to supply the poor of the district. There is a meeting once in each year, which is constituted of no particular number; from two to five generally attend. All governors are entitled to vote, but not by proxy. Minutes of the proceedings are kept.

A managing committee is named, which ought to meet quarterly, but does not. Minutes are kept of their proceedings when they do meet. There is no board of superintendence fixed by grand jury. Governors never visit patients officially.

All officers are appointed by the subscribers; the same gentleman acts as collector and treasurer. There has been no election since 1813. There are no bye-laws. The voting is open. The Roman Catholic clergymen and many of the inhabitants think the mode of election by no means beneficial, and in consequence will not subscribe. Religious belief does not exclude persons from being officers. It certainly would be desirable to vest, in a superior authority, a veto, to prevent improper appointments. There are no paid officers, unless the medical attendants. The treasurer gives no security; he accounts to the annual meeting of the subscribers and to the grand jury.

There is one attendant who receives 6*l.* per annum for attendance and firing, does not reside in the house, has no other perquisite, and has been appointed, and can be discharged by the treasurer.

There are no printed rules; but there are some resolutions scattered here and there through the book, purporting to be an account of the occasional meetings that take place. The present regulations restrict the utility of the institution materially; in fact, all persons agree in the propriety of a total change in the system.

Reports relating to admissions, discharges, cures, &c. are made to the subscribers and grand jury, but are not printed. The clergy, medical men, gentry, &c. might be formed into a general board of health, which would be beneficial.

In 1832 the subscriptions were 69*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.*; in 1833, 69*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*; and in 1834, 67*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.* The presentments were to the same amount respectively. The poorer classes do not subscribe. The proprietor whose tenants are attended, as before stated, subscribes 20*l.* and another subscriber contributes 30*l.* a year. If the subscriptions were materially to fall off, it would render the institution inefficient if not knock it up altogether. There are no stipulations accompanying subscriptions. There is a donation of 100*l.* from the Rev. H. Gouldbury, lodged with the proprietor aforesaid, for which he pays interest to the dispensary, 6*l.* per cent. Irish.

The funds are paid in to the treasurer, and lie in the savings bank in his name.

In 1831 the expenditure was 140*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*; in 1832, 156*l.* 7*s.* 10½*d.*; and in 1833, 138*l.* 4*s.* The general heads of expenditure are, salaries to medical officers, medicines, wages, &c. Bills are examined by the treasurer, by whose order they are paid, and through whose hands the payments are made; he submits the accounts to the committee once a year.

Accounts are made up yearly, and all who attend have the opportunity of seeing them.

Persons who attended the Examination.

TEDDY KELLY SMITH.—JAMES KILROY, labourer.—GEORGE KING, esq., governor, treasurer and secretary.—The Rev. R. MACPANGHIN, Roman-catholic curate.—MICHAEL SMITH, shoemaker.—The Medical Attendant.

THIS district comprises two whole parishes and parts of four others. The district is very extensive, being six or seven miles to its most distant point. The nearest medical institutions are Athlone dispensary, Roscommon side, about five miles, Lecarrow dispensary, seven miles, and Ballinasloe, in the county Galway, about nine miles. The Brideswell dispensary is well placed with regard to the surrounding country; but there is still a considerable part of the county southward unprovided with medical aid. From four to five miles is a sufficient extent for one district. No great evil is said to arise here from the want of intern accommodation; if it could be afforded at Ballinasloe or Athlone, it would be sufficient.

The dispensary is held in a large and commodious one-roomed house. It is well arranged and fitted up with shelves, counter and drawers, table, chairs, fire-place, &c.; and contains an excellent supply of medicines. There is ample accommodation for patients. The dispensary pensary was built from the funds of the establishment, and it was not known whether rent will be paid or not.

The medical officer is about 31 years of age, and graduated at Edinburgh. He resides in the town of Athlone, five Irish miles from the dispensary, to which he was appointed in 1830, at a meeting of the subscribers at large. He practises as a physician in Athlone, but attends no other institution. He was educated for midwifery at the lying-in hospital, Dublin, and in Edinburgh. Attends two days in the week, on Mondays and Thursdays, from ten until one o'clock, and longer if necessary. There exist no regulations with regard to the case of his illness, or unavoidable temporary absence; but, in such cases, he would find a substitute. The duty has never been performed by proxy. In case of neglect, the poor can complain to a subscriber, and would do so with safety. Medicines are dispensed by the medical officer himself, who is paid 80*l.* per annum out of the funds of the charity, and has no other allowance whatsoever. The county has no power over the institution, unless by lessening the presentments.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers at large. There was public notice given of the election. A degree from some university was considered indispensable in a candidate. At the last election there was only one candidate. There is no limitation as to age. It is not necessary to send any notice of appointment to the grand jury. The neighbourhood is not capable of supporting a medical man independent of the dispensary. The present medical officer has the perfect confidence of the poor.

The room is neatly kept, and the medicines of good quality, and in sufficient quantity. They are supplied by Lecky and Moore, of Dublin, who are subscribers. They are paid for by the treasurer. The expense for the last three years was, for 1831, 26*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*; for 1832, 35*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*; for 1833, 42*l.* 4*s.* The medicine room is always locked, and the key is in the possession of the physician. No medicines are ever sold. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution. Leeches have not been used, but would be had if necessary. Vaccination is not usual here, but the medical officer is endeavouring to introduce it. The people have been averse to it.

A register is carefully kept by the physician, distinguishing the name and residence of patient, and of the person recommending, the diseases and its treatment; no person bringing the ticket of a subscriber can be refused attendance; an account of all the visits paid at their own houses is kept, they amounted to 222 in the last year. There were about 13 midwifery cases attended within the last three years.

Any applicant with a ticket is attended, or even a poor deserving object without one, and are often attended without one.

The poor are attended at their own houses, upon getting a visiting ticket, to about six miles any side of Brideswell—if the distance would allow it, two or three visits would be paid in the day, if necessary, but if could not be done, the medical attendant would stay as long as possible. Visits have often been paid in the night. There are no splints, bandages, &c. belonging to the dispensary. Difficult cases of lying-in are attended, but general cases are attended by midwives, who are grossly ignorant. The treatment of patients is always mentioned and seems appropriate. Vaccination is not done, in consequence of the prejudice of the poor, but the confidence of the medical attendant in its efficiency is very strong.

Forty-seven constitute the principal direction; the medical officer is not a governor. The meetings are always held in July, previous to the assizes; there is no fixed number to constitute a meeting, but they are pretty regularly attended by from 10 to 12; all governors are entitled to vote, but not by proxy; minutes are kept of their proceedings.

There is a managing committee appointed annually, and meets only once a year; minutes are kept. There is not any board of superintendence fixed by the grand jury.

Officers are elected by the subscribers at large annually; voting is open; the mode of election is thought beneficial. Religious belief never excludes any person from being an officer. The treasurer is not paid, nor does he give any security; he accounts to the grand jury and subscribers at large.

There is a report made annually to the subscribers and grand jury relating to admissions, discharges, cures, &c. The district contains a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, should it be thought expedient to extend the relief afforded by dispensary.

The subscriptions and donations for 1831 amounted to 63*l.* 8*s.*; for 1832, 68*l.* 3*s.*; for 1833, to 71*l.* 14*s.* None of the poorer classes subscribe. The existence of the charity does not depend on the subscriptions of one or two individuals; if the subscriptions materially fell off, of course the institution could not exist, but this is by no means likely; there are eight gentlemen (chiefly non-residents) who are not subscribers, though possessed of considerable property in this neighbourhood, and the poor living on their estates are relieved by the tickets of those who subscribe and reside.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and lie in his hands.

The general heads of expenditure are salary, medicine, house-rent. The bills are examined by the medical attendant and treasurer, who afterwards submit them to the general meeting of subscribers; they are paid through the treasurer.

Accounts are made up once a year, and presented to the full body of subscribers, and copies sent to the grand jury.

Castlereagh
Dispensary.

THIS district contains about 15,000 inhabitants, and to its most distant point is six miles. Loughglyn dispensary is the nearest medical institution, it is distant about five miles; the district is about large enough; none have been refused relief, but much evil has arisen from the want of intern accommodation, and it would be most desirable to have a few wards where patients could receive such.

The Building,
Furniture and Grounds.
Medical Officers.

There is a small temporary place where the dispensary is held at present, but Lord Mountsandsford has promised to build one in spring, and also to give the ground without rent.

The medical officer is aged 25 years, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London: he resides immediately opposite the institution, and was appointed, in March 1834, by the subscribers at large; he practises as a physician in Castlereagh, and attends no other institution; he studied midwifery in Dublin. The duty was once (for one day) done by proxy. Mondays and Thursdays, from eleven till three o'clock, are the days and hours of attendance.

In case of irregularity on the part of the medical officer, the poor can with perfect safety appeal to any subscriber. The medical attendant is always on the spot, and the medicines are dispensed by him and an attendant.

Payment.

The only paid medical officer is the one before alluded to, who receives 60*l.* per annum, which is the salary appointed by the grand jury for all medical attendants of dispensaries in this county; he is not allowed for any conveyance; nor is he allowed board or lodging. The grand jury possess a power over the committee by stopping or lessening the presentments. The gentlemen in general seem to take too great an interest in the concerns of the poor to allow of the possibility of a few combining to raise an institution for the purpose of making a medical appointment; but it is thought that the grand jury have not sufficient control to prevent it.

Election.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers at large. In case of a vacancy, notice by advertisement is given in the newspapers. A degree from some university or college is necessary for all candidates. There is no limitation as to the age of officers. There were three candidates at the last vacancy. No notice of appointment, &c., is sent to the grand jury. Conditions for voting at elections are acted up to. The neighbourhood is scarcely able to support a medical man, independent of the institution. There are no retiring allowances. In case of neglect or harsh treatment on the part of the medical officer, the poor can complain to any subscriber. They are aware of this, and frequently threaten to complain; but it does not happen that medical officers are appointed or retained contrary to the feelings of the people.

Pharmacy.

The medicine room is kept as clean as can be expected under the circumstances, and the medicine is of excellent quality, and in great abundance. There is also a good supply of the more expensive medicines; they are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin. The medicines or other articles belonging to the institution are never sold. There has been a very good supply of surgical instruments presented to the institution by Mr. Wills: they are quite sufficient, and are never lent, nor does even the medical attendant use them in private practice. Leeches are not used, being too expensive. Vaccine matter has not been heretofore given, but the medical officer is about adopting a system for the purpose. He does not inoculate with small-pock matter, but is not prevented from doing so.

Patients' Registration.

There is a register kept by the medical attendant, and diseases entered on the patients presenting themselves. The terminations cannot be ascertained in all cases: an abstract is sent to the grand jury. No persons are ever refused attendance; 70 persons applied on the last day, and so many as 130 often apply. There have been two amputations within the last twelve months, and both recovered. The present medical officer has attended four midwifery cases since his appointment.

Who entitled to Relief.

Any person bringing a recommendation is entitled to relief; the servants of subscribers are indiscriminately attended, from the butler to the stable boy. Many are attended who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance: the surgeon is obliged to attend all who are recommended. There certainly has been no contract entered into with individuals for the purpose of swelling the subscription list, and thus obtaining large grants from the county. To obtain attendance, an order is requisite, to which one signature is sufficient, and there is no difficulty in getting it; but the shopkeepers, both here and in other places, make a practice of giving recommendations only to those who purchase articles from themselves.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, they are also attended at their own dwellings; six or seven miles is the greatest distance they are visited at; two or three visits have often been paid in a day; attendance is also given at any hour of the night, when required. The institution possesses the means, splints, bandages, &c., of rendering immediate assistance in case of accidents. No prescriptions of authorized practitioners are made up at the institution. Difficult lying-in cases are attended on being recommended; but are generally attended by midwives, from whose gross ignorance frequent injury arises: daily attendance in acute cases is considered necessary. The confidence in the efficacy of vaccination in preventing small-pock seems on the increase here. No wine or other extra is ever furnished by the institution, nor is there any other institution for affording food, &c., on which the medical officer can give an order; but all the gentry in this neighbourhood give money, nourishment, or flannel, on being informed when such are particularly wanted.

General Management.

The subscribers are called together once a year. No salaried officer is a governor, nor has the institution been essentially under the management of the surgeon.

Managing Committee.

There is a managing committee which was appointed at the establishing of the institution, who who meet monthly, and of whose proceedings minutes are kept. There is no board of superintendence fixed by the grand jury. The governors frequently visit the patients.

The treasurer is an unpaid officer, and has not given any security. Religious belief does not exclude any officer; there has been no instance of any officer being removed or suspended.

There is one attendant to look after the dispensary and assist in giving out the medicines, whose wages (without any other perquisites, or board or lodging) are ten pounds per annum, paid by the treasurer; appointed and may be discharged by the committee.

A copy of the rules could not be procured in the absence of the treasurer, but a more systematic plan would be desirable in all such institutions than exists at present.

Once in the year a full account of receipts, disbursements, &c. is made up, and laid before the grand jury, and a full body of the subscribers. The reports have not of late been printed. The district unquestionably affords a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, should it be thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

None of the poorer classes subscribe. There are some principal subscribers, without whose subscriptions the charity could scarcely exist; but there is no danger of the withdrawal of their subscriptions.

Funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they lie until wanted. There is no money left in the hands of salaried officers.

The medical attendant gives an order, stating the quantity of drugs, &c. received, which is approved of by the treasurer, and by him submitted to the committee, and the money is paid by the treasurer.

Accounts are made up half-yearly, and presented to the full body of the subscribers, and to the grand jury.

Dispensary.

THE population is about 10,000. The district extends about five miles in each direction. Boyle dispensary is five and a half, Elphin four and a half, and Cramul, county Leitrim, five miles. Four or at most five miles round is the most that should be included in one district. No persons that are properly recommended are refused attendance here. The want of intern accommodation is very much felt here, there being none any where in this county, but at Roscommon. It would be desirable to form dispensaries capable of receiving fever patients, and affording assistance in cases of accidents.

The accommodation is pretty good. Two tolerably sized rooms are taken for the purpose, containing whatever furniture is requisite. There are no baths in this institution. Croghan is a small village, situate about midway, on the new line of road between Boyle and Elphin.

The medical attendant, a gentleman about 37 years of age, graduated at Edinburgh, in 1826. He resides in the town of Boyle, five and a half miles from the institution. He was appointed by the subscribers in 1831. He attends a dispensary in Boyle also, one day in each week, for which the salary is 40 l. He also receives a salary for attending the tenants of a principal proprietor, and the police stationed in Boyle. In case of illness or absence, he would send a substitute. He is allowed private practice. He has only to attend once a week, but never does so by proxy. There is no student or pupil belonging to the establishment. The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant, at his weekly visit.

The amount of salary is 40 l. a year, paid out of the general funds of the charity. He is not allowed for any conveyance, or for board or lodging.

Election.

The only control the county has over the committee or subscribers is, that of lessening the amount of the presentments. There is no guarantee against combination for the purpose of raising an institution for the sake of the medical appointment, nor is the control exercised by the grand jury equal to preventing such an abuse.

The medical officers are elected by the subscribers at large. There is no notice, in case of a vacancy, sent to the newspapers. There are no means taken to procure competition, the present having succeeded the late medical attendant by purchasing his resignation for 50*l.* It would be desirable to have a controlling power over the elections. A degree from some college or university is considered necessary. There is not any limitation as to age of officers. It is not necessary to send notice of appointment to grand jury. The conditions for voting are acted up to. The neighbourhood is not sufficient to support a medical man independent of the dispensary, nor is there any other medical man in the district. No retiring allowances are given. In case of neglect, the poor can complain to a subscriber, and it is said that they are aware of the fact.

The medicine rooms are pretty cleanly kept, and the medical officer assures us that he has an excellent stock of medicines, not being stinted in this respect by the committee. The medicines are supplied by Dublin druggists and are paid for by the treasurer, the average amount for each year being about 40*l.* The medicines are under the care of an attendant, except the more valuable sorts, which are under the sole charge of the medical officer; the medicines are never sold. There are some instruments belonging to the institution, but they are not sufficient; they are not lent to any surgeon unconnected with the institution, nor are they used in private practice. Leeches are not supplied, being too expensive. The medical officer is not in the habit of vaccinating gratis, and is not prevented from inoculating with small-pock matter, but is not in the habit of doing so.

Patients' Registration.

There is a register kept by the medical attendant, stating name of patient, by whom recommended, residence and nature of disease; none apply unless provided with a ticket, which must be attended to unless they are improper objects of charity, in which case it must be forthwith explained to the person recommending.

Who entitled to Relief.

All persons having a recommendation are entitled to relief; servants to subscribers are also entitled. The physician can object to giving relief where he knows the applicant is able to pay for it. Every person subscribing one guinea is entitled to have three poor persons on the books at the same time.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and at their own homes, upon the recommendation of either of three gentlemen, the Protestant and Roman Catholic clergyman and another. Patients must be attended at any distance, with the recommendation of one of these gentlemen; but it would not be possible to pay them two or three visits a day; attendance is not given in the night. In case of accident, &c. the institution possesses the means of rendering assistance. Lying-in cases are not attended from the institution: the midwives are very ignorant here. The prescriptions are not entered. All children who apply are vaccinated, but few attend for the purpose, as they prefer small-pock inoculation. If properly performed, vaccination is considered successful; small-pock is very prevalent and fatal where taken naturally.

Nourishment.

No extras, such as wine, &c., are ever furnished; there is no institution in the neighbourhood for the purpose of providing food, &c. for the poor.

General Management.

There is a general meeting of the subscribers summoned once a year. The institution appears to be under the management of the surgeon; but no person is ex officio in the principal directions. Any number constitute a meeting; they cannot vote by proxy, and there are no minutes kept of their proceedings. Four or five occasionally attend.

Managing Committee.

There is a managing committee, who meet when summoned on special business. There is no board of superintendence fixed by the grand jury.

Officers not medical.

The only officers not medical are the treasurer and the secretary, who are not paid. Religious belief does not exclude any person from being an officer. The treasurer does not give any security.

Attendants.

A female servant is the only attendant; she takes care of the dispensary, for which she is paid 5*l.* a year.

Reports.

Reports relating to admissions, discharges, cures, &c. are made to the grand jury, but not printed.

Funds and Accounts. Receipts.

It is impossible to answer with regard to the funds, &c., the treasurer being absent in England, and no book can be obtained. None of the poorer classes subscribe; there is a subscriber of ten guineas; the institution would not cease to exist if this were to fall off. Subscriptions are never accompanied with stipulations in favour of the subscriber or his family.

Collection, Custody.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain until required for the purposes of the institution. There is no property belonging to the institution, nor is any money left in the hands of salaried officers or servants.

Expenditure.

Bills are examined by the committee previous to payment.

Accounts.

Accounts are made up, audited and reported once a year, and copies sent to the grand jury.

Relief.

Persons who attended the Examination.

One of the Medical Attendants.*—Rev. CHARLES SMITH.

THE population of the district for which this dispensary is intended is above 10,000. The medical institutions within six miles are the Tusk and Croghan dispensaries, each four miles and a half, and that at Strokestown, five miles distant. They are not considered too numerous. No persons have been refused relief. It was stated that no evil has arisen from the want of intern accommodation, yet they have provided a small hospital capable of affording it, but for want of funds have not been able to use it. It would be of great benefit to establish medical districts, with a dispensary attached to each.

The building is of stone and mortar and two stories high. The room where the distribution of medicine takes place is large, with a waiting room for patients. There is a sufficient supply of good furniture in a proper state of repair. There are some wards in the upper part of the dispensary where cholera patients had been received, and which might easily, and with advantage, be converted in a small neat hospital, capable of holding eight or ten patients. There are no baths, garden, grounds or outbuildings attached to the institution. The buildings are occupied by the dispensary and by a bank, which latter pays the rent; it would certainly be better if they belonged to the county.

The officers who attend the institution are a physician who graduated at the Glasgow University, about 60 years of age, and a surgeon who is a member of the London College of Surgeons. They reside a very short distance from the dispensary, in the town of Elphin. The latter was appointed in 1832, and the former two or three years before, by election at a general meeting of the subscribers. Before the appointment of the latter (who acts as surgeon and apothecary) he was a student at Edinburgh. These gentlemen act the one for the other in cases of illness or temporary absence, and attend no other institution. They are allowed private practice. They have attended midwifery lectures, but have taken out no certificate. They attend at the dispensary twice in the week, Tuesdays and Fridays.

The committee would not permit any irregularity in attendance; the gentlemen who were examined pointed out to the Assistant Commissioners some resolutions of censure upon an officer who had neglected his duty towards the institution. These resolutions have had effect. There is, to meet all contingencies, a student, pupil, or some competent person on the spot to afford immediate relief; the medicines are dispensed by an apprentice.

Both medical officers are paid; the salary is 60 l. per annum between them. On extraordinary occasions, such as during an epidemic, small donations of 10 l. or 15 l. are made for extra duty, provided the funds permit, which is not always the case. There is no allowance made for a horse, nor any provision for board or lodging.

The officers are elected by the subscribers; a degree is considered necessary. There is no limitation as to age, either in appointing or displacing officers. A subscription of 1 l. 1 s. is requisite to constitute a voter at the election of medical officers. There are no other medical gentlemen in the neighbourhood competent to be elected to the institution. There are no retiring allowances for officers. The poor can complain in case of neglect to any subscriber, and are perfectly aware that their complaint will be duly attended to.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed was by no means neat; the drawers and bottles were dirty to an extreme degree; and as for the medicines themselves, their quality can scarcely be discovered on account of the bad manner in which they were kept. There was a large supply of Glauber and of Epsom salts; there was also a large barrel of treacle and some castor oil, together with some of the cheaper medicines, but it appeared that none of the more delicate and expensive medicines, except tincture of Iodine and Quinine, were kept. Messrs. Leslie & Co. druggists of Dublin, supply the medicines, which are paid for by the treasurer. The annual expense for the last three years has been 60 l. It was said that the medicines, &c. belonging to the institution are never sold, but there did not appear to be any guarantee that they were not. Both medical officers, in partnership, keep an apothecary's shop in the town, but the medicines of the institution are kept at the dispensary, those for private practice at their own shop. Splints alone, of the apparatus necessary for surgical operations, belong to the institution. Leeches are applied to the patients but rarely, on account of the expense. The medical officer is bound to give gratis vaccine matter, as far as he is able, to the neighbourhood. He is not prevented inoculating with small-pox, but never does so.

A register is kept by the medical attendants and a return is always sent to the grand jury of the patients. A register also of those who may chance to be refused is kept. There has been no capital operation performed within the three last years; about 20 midwifery cases were attended.

A recommendation is necessary to entitle persons to attendance from the institution. The servants of subscribers are sometimes attended. Persons not in circumstances requiring gratuitous attendance sometimes participate in the benefits of the institution; this is, however, guarded against as much as possible. There is no scheme here to swell a subscription list, or cheat the county of large grants. A poor person must obtain a ticket to entitle Connaught. Co. Roscommon.	Extern patients are seen at the institution, and sick poor are attended at their own dwelling within a limit of four miles. Should sickness require an attendance three or four times a day, it would not be given, unless the patient lived in town. The charity has some means, such as splints, bandages, &c., of rendering assistance in cases of accident, and immediate assistance would and has often been afforded. No prescriptions, except of the medical officers, are made up at the institution. Difficult lying-in cases are attended. The midwives, who are generally, however, employed, are most grossly ignorant. Daily attendance on the sick, especially in acute cases, is most assuredly considered necessary, and occasional assistance is of very little use. Such cases are visited as often as circumstances will admit of; if in town, constantly; if at a distance, this cannot be accomplished. Vaccination is occasionally performed; its results are very favourable. Rev. Charles Smith states that a child died lately of small-pox, which was taken from small-pox matter, with which it had been inoculated.

Nourishment.	When the poor appear very destitute, and when it is considered indispensable, wine or such additional luxury as is requisite is furnished by order of the medical attendant. The medical officers can draw upon the funds of the dispensary to furnish clothes and fuel occasionally; and the surgeon informed the assistant commissioners that he was authorized by the Bishop to give any thing he might deem proper in such cases, at his (the Bishop's) expense.
General Management.	About twenty constitute the principal direction of this dispensary. Medical and salaried officers are not governors of the institution, nor do they attend the meetings of the governors. The medical department solely is under the guidance of the medical officers. There is no person ex-officio in the principal direction of the establishment. The meetings are regularly attended; they are constituted by as few or as many as choose to attend, which is generally from eight to twelve. There is no voting by proxy, and no minutes kept of the proceedings.
Managing Committee.	All the subscribers in the neighbourhood are usually summoned when there is any business to be transacted, but no minutes of their proceedings are kept. The grand jury have never fixed a board of superintendence. No visiting governor acts during the intervals of meeting of the governors or committee, nor do the governors ever visit the patients officially.
Officers, not medical.	The only officers, not medical, are the treasurer and sub-treasurer, who were elected at the commencement of this charity by the subscribers; there is no copy of the bye-laws regulating the appointment printed; but the voting is open, a mode of election which is thought beneficial. No religious belief excludes a person from becoming an officer. The treasurer is not paid for his services, nor does he give any security. There was no sudden accession of governors immediately previous to the election, nor has any instance occurred of the suspension or removal of any officer.
Attendant.	There is one female attendant appointed by the committee, and removable for misconduct by the treasurer: she receives four guineas per annum wages, without board, lodging or any other perquisite.
Stores.	There are no stores but medicines belonging to the institution.
Rules.	No printed rules in existence.
Reports.	Reports are made of discharges, cures, &c., and sent to subscribers. The clergy, medical men and gentry, and middle class of farmers might be formed into a board of health, an establishment which would be greatly advantageous to the poor, the district being perfectly competent to furnish persons fit for the duty, and willing to undertake it.
Funds, Accounts, Receipts.	The amount of the annual subscriptions and donations for the last three years were as follows; for 1832, 75 l. 16 s. 10½ d. ; for 1833, 75 l. 13 s. 10 d. ; for 1834, 75 l. 15 s. 10½ d. The grand jury grants have been to the same amount; but the last one was omitted, by accident, to be applied for. None of the poorer classes subscribe. The continuance of the institution depends in a great measure on the bounty of the Bishop, whose annual subscription is 50 l. ; and a principal proprietor 5 l. The institution would cease entirely if the Bishop withdrew his very liberal subscription. The subscriptions are never accompanied with any stipulation.
Custody.	The funds lie in the Boyle Savings' Bank, to the credit of the institution.
Expenditure.	The amount expended during last year is equal to the amount of subscriptions, and grand jury grant. The bills are examined previous to payment by the treasurer, and all monies paid by him are submitted to the subscribers.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district for which this institution is intended is about 10,000, and the most distant point is 10 miles; within six miles there are two other medical institutions, namely, French-park and Castlereagh, the latter being within five miles. The district is considered too large to afford efficient relief to the sick poor, and the medical institutions in this part of the country seem to be insufficient, while in other parts there are too many. A circumference of about four miles would be quite sufficient for one dispensary. Much inconvenience has arisen from the want of intern accommodation, and it would be very desirable to form medical districts, to each of which a dispensary might be attached, capable capable of receiving a few fever patients or cases of accident. It would also be of advantage to attach a dispensary to each district, and a fever hospital, with surgical beds.

This dispensary is rather a neat small lock-up place, partitioned off from the rest of a room in a thatched cabin, furnished with desk, counter, shelves and drawers, without baths, garden or grounds attached to it; the building is hired, without a lease, the annual rent being 6*l.* There would be no inconvenience arising from a change of ownership of the place, as the sum paid for the rent of it is more than could be expected.

An apothecary of 40 years standing, about 59 years of age, is the only medical officer; he resides at Castlerea, five miles from the dispensary, having been, appointed 16 years ago, at the first establishment of the institution by the subscribers, at their general meeting; before his appointment, as still, he practised at Castlerea as apothecary. He attends no other medical institution. In case of his illness or temporary absence his sons attend. He is permitted to have private practice. The days and hours of attendance are two days in the week, from eleven to three o'clock. In the event of irregularity in such attendance, the poor can apply to any subscriber for redress. There is no one on the spot to afford immediate relief but at the regular periods of attendance; the medical attendant dispenses the medicines himself.

The medical officer receives 60*l.* per annum and 10*l.* for an assistant, paid from the general funds of the charity; he is allowed neither horse nor any mode of conveyance, board or lodging. If the subscribers or committee authorize any thing superfluous to the dispensary, the county can only lessen the presentments. There is no general guarantee to prevent combination to raise an institution for the sake of medical appointments, and the control exercised by the grand jury is certainly not sufficient to prevent the occurrence of such an abuse. The medical officer is elected by the subscribers, but no vacancy has occurred since the commencement of the institution; it would certainly be desirable to have a controlling power over the elections; there is no limitation as to age in the appointment or discharge of officers; nor is it thought necessary that notice of appointment, with age and certificates of qualification, should be sent to the grand jury; there are no superannuations or retiring allowances. There was but one candidate for the last election. A subscription of 1*l.* 1*s.* a year entitles a person to a vote at the election. It is not thought that there are a sufficient number of persons able to pay for advice in this neighbourhood to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument. There is no medical gentleman in the district qualified to be elected to the institution. Patients treated harshly or contrary to the rules of the institution, can have redress by applying to a subscriber, and the poor are perfectly acquainted with this mode of redress; no medical officer is retained or appointed contrary to the known feelings of the people.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed is small, but was in a very fair state of cleanliness and order, apparently dressed up for the occasion of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners. There seemed to be barely a sufficient quantity of medicine, which however was of good quality. There was scarcely any of the more expensive and delicate medicines, but the medical attendant said, that he was in the habit of bringing with him, on dispensary days, a good supply of any medicines which it was probable he would require. All medicines are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin. The annual expenses for the four last years were as follows:—for 1831, 50*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*; 1832, 47*l.* 2*s.*; 1833, 45*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*; 1834, 38*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* The medicines belonging to the institution are never sold; a great portion of them is kept in a private shop with those of the medical attendant. There are no surgical instruments of any kind belonging to the dispensary. Leeches are used occasionally, but rarely, on account of the expense, costing, in this place, so much as one shilling each. Vaccine matter is not at all used at the dispensary, and the medical attendant is not prevented from inoculating with small-pock matter, which however he never uses.

A register is kept by the medical attendant, a copy of which is lodged with the grand jury. None who are recommended are refused attendance. There have been no capital operations performed for the last three years, and cases of midwifery are never attended from the institution.

All are attended who have recommendations, including servants of subscribers, and very many participate in the benefits of the charity who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance; an abuse which it is not in the power of the medical attendant to correct, as he is obliged to attend to all recommendations that are presented to him; gratuitous attendance is never afforded to a subscriber, however poor. A recommendation is always required, but it is only requisite to have one signature, and there is no limit to the number of recommendations by each subscriber.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and the sick poor attended at their own homes at any distance. If illness was so bad as to require frequent visits, they would be made two or three times a day if possible. In cases of sudden accident, the dispensary possesses no instruments with which to render immediate assistance. Daily attendance is not given unless the urgency of the case requires it; vaccination is not performed of late on account of the unwillingness of the poor to bring their children back to the institution to enable the medical attendant to keep up a supply of vaccine lymph, nor could the medical attendant, in many cases, learn whether it succeeded or not. He is, however, strongly impressed with the efficacy of vaccination, but the poor are prejudiced against it. Certain persons make a practice of perambulating the county, and taking advantage of the feelings of the people, inoculate with small-pock matter; consequently more or less of small-pock is found generally in this district.

There is no wine or other extras allowed, nor is there any other charity in the neighbourhood, on which the medical attendant can give an order for such. The neighbouring gentry, and and a noble lord, a principal subscriber in particular, liberally supply the poor with wine, meal, milk, flannel, &c. when required.

About 11 or 12 constitute the principal direction, none of whom are medical or salaried officers, who are entirely excluded from the general management of the institution. The regular fixed meeting of the direction is once a year, at which three or four are in the habit of attending, there being no particular number required to constitute a meeting. All governors are allowed to attend and vote, but not by proxy.

The business of the managing committee, consisting of ten, is to examine accounts, listen to complaints, if any, and visit the dispensary from time to time. There are no minutes kept of their proceedings, nor any board of superintendence. The governors do not visit the patients officially.

The treasurer, who is not paid, is the only officer not medical; he is appointed by the subscribers at large, the voting being open. He does not give any security. There are no bye-laws for regulating the appointment; no person is excluded from being an officer on account of religious belief. It would be well to vest in a superior authority a veto to prevent improper appointments. There have been no instances of an officer having been suspended or removed in this dispensary.

There are no attendants.

There are reports given of the institution at the spring assizes, the time of presentment. They have not been printed reports for the last two years. It is thought that the clergy, medical men and gentry might form a board of health, as there are a sufficient number willing to assist the poor. The amount of receipts for the last three years were—together with presentments to the same amount: none of the poorer classes subscribe. The trustees of a noble lord subscribe 42*l.* per annum, upon whose bounty the institution almost exists.

There is no house, stock or lands, nor property of any kind belonging to the institution.

The subscriptions are paid to the treasurer, in whose hands the funds lie until wanted.

For the last three years the expenditure has been follows:—1832, 128*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*; 1833, 127*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*; 1834, 114*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*

The general heads of expenditure are salaries, medicines, rent, &c., which are paid by the treasurer or medical attendant, and then laid before the committee.

The accounts, which are made up once a year, are laid before the subscribers, and there is also a copy sent to the grand jury.

Strokestown

Dispensary.

Population and

Extent of Country.

THE district for which this dispensary is intended contains about 10,000 persons, none of whom live at a greater distance than four miles. There are similar charities at Elphin and Tulsk, each within five miles; but most of the surrounding districts are insufficiently supplied with medical assistance. The extent of country to be attached to a single dispensary ought, of course, to vary according as the district does or does not embrace towns. But the witnesses examined would suggest, that it should never exceed a radius of five miles from the dispensary house, where the surgeon ought to reside. The charity under consideration may, perhaps, be set down as not extending its benefits as far as it might do; a much greater check upon its utility is, however, experienced in the absence of all internal accommodation for patients, and a strong desire was expressed that a hospital should be erected for this and a few neighbouring districts. At present all sick are obliged to be sent to the county infirmary at Roscommon, a distance of 15 miles; and, in cases of serious accident or diseases requiring active surgical treatment, loss of life is almost inevitable from the long journey which is thus rendered necessary.

and Grounds.

The dispensary is held in a convenient one-storied house, built of stone and mortar, which is, however, in a very dirty state, and considerably out of repair. It is solely devoted to the purposes of the dispensary, and possessed neither grounds nor outbuildings. Having been given rent free by Lord Hartland, it is not liable to any inconvenience from the nature of its tenure. But as a general rule, it is thought that all dispensaries should be the property of the county, and should contain a respectable residence for the medical attendant.

Medical Officer.

A physician, whose age is 36, was appointed by election as general medical attendant in the year 1831. He is a graduate of the Edinburgh University, and studied midwifery at the Lying-in hospital in Dublin. Previous to his appointment he had been a practitioner at Windsor. He resides within a quarter of a mile of the dispensary, and having no other situation to claim his time, he is enabled to attend every day to such poor persons as call on him, though he is only bound to prescribe and give medicine on two days in the week.

week. Permission would be given to him, in case of unavoidable absence or of sickness, to appoint a substitute, but no necessity for such indulgence has ever occurred. Though permitted to acquire private patients, he rarely leaves the town, and is always to be met with when an emergency requires his aid; he dispenses the medicine himself.

His salary, chargeable on the general funds of the institution, is only 50 l. per annum, and no allowance is made either for a horse or lodging. We could not discern any inclination on the part of the subscribers to raise this very moderate remuneration; but we were told that any tendency to give too much for the services of a medical man could be prevented by the power of the grand jury to diminish their half-yearly grant; many instances, however, are known where dispensaries have been erected, in places not at all requiring such establishments, chiefly at the expense of the physician appointed, and solely for the purpose of securing his appointment. The grand jury afterwards allows the usual sum towards its support, and has not any means of checking the abuse.

There has been but one election since the origin of the charity, namely, that at which the present physician was appointed. The public notice given in the newspapers, on that occasion, procured only two candidates, and though the medical attendant of this institution professes every necessary qualification, and it is thought that an improper person would not be appointed, yet vesting a veto on all elections in some superior authority would totally preclude the possibility of private regards being made superior to public utility. None were permitted to vote but annual subscribers of a guinea, according to the Act of Parliament. The practice which any physician could acquire amongst the residents of Strokestown or its vicinity could never be sufficiently extensive to interfere with his duties as dispensary-surgeon, or sufficiently lucrative to enable him to dispense with the salary of that office. There is not, at present, a medical man here who would gratuitously undertake the care of the poor. A retiring allowance would not be given to the physician of this establishment; the present physician possesses in an ample degree the confidence of the poor, and they have been known to declare, that they were well aware of the right they possessed to complain of his inattention or harshness, if such should happen, and that they would not be slow in availing themselves of the tribunal for the redress of their grievances, which exists in each of the subscribers.

The room in which the medicines were dispensed was but indifferently kept, as regards neatness and cleanliness. Pharmacy.

In the pharmacy we found most of the ordinary medicines good in quality, but the supply rather scanty. Of the more delicate preparations we only observed quinine. They were procured from Messrs. Leslie & Co. of Dublin, who are subscribers of two guineas annually, and are paid for by the treasurer; the expense of them we could not ascertain, as the treasurer's accounts were not to be had. The drugs always remain in the custody of the medical attendant, and as he does not practise as an apothecary, there is no room for misappropriation. In addition, he is not permitted to sell on any pretext. The charity does not possess surgical instruments of any kind. Leeches are never afforded, on account of their expense; any one who requires them is obliged to pay at the rate of 1s. a piece. The medical officer is not bound to give vaccine matter gratis, as it is not used at this dispensary; he is not prevented from inoculating with small-pock matter, but would not use it.

An accurate register was kept for a considerable time, in which an account was given of every one who received advice and medicine; but when the number of applicants increased to more than 100 daily, it was found impossible to continue the practice to the same extent. At present a few only are entered, on the last day about 40; of these, we found the names and the nature of their diseases, also the name of the person who had recommended them. Nearly 200 present themselves on every public day; and at the time of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, about six persons were being attended to by the physician at their own houses. He amputated a thigh lately, and the operation was successful; he generally has three or four midwifery patients to attend to in each year. Patients' Registration.

A recommendation, with the signature of a single subscriber, is sufficient to entitle the bearer to relief. There is no limit to the number of these recommendations, and while on the one hand no destitute person need ever go without the benefit of the charity, the facility of procuring them, on the other, enables many to acquire gratuitous relief who are very well able to pay for it. Servants of subscribers are always attended to by the medical officer when recommended. Who entitled to Relief.

It has been already stated that the present medical attendant receives extern applicants at all times; when a visiting ticket is presented to him he also, in most cases, goes to the dwelling of the person indicated on it, but we were assured by the Roman-catholic rector, that it would be utterly impossible for one physician to attend to all the claims of this kind which are made on him. The number of the poor precludes it; he has however occasionally inspected urgent cases, within a mile of the town, two or three times during the day; and is often called up during the night to give his assistance in cases of accident, fracture, &c., for the treatment of which he is supplied with every necessary apparatus by the establishment; the physician is only appealed to in difficult cases of midwifery. Poor women generally fall into the hands of midwives, who are, for the most part, grossly ignorant, having had no instruction whatever; and the medical officer assured us that he has seen many instances where the serious injury of the mother and the death of the child might have been prevented by the display of no very extraordinary skill. We were much surprised to learn that vaccination was here totally neglected. The poor, indeed, have very little confidence in its virtue; but the Rev. Mr. M'Dermott, P. P. stated, that the better description of persons in the place would gladly have recourse to the practice if they had an opportunity. In the mean mean time, small-pox increases in frequency, and Mr. Egan is disposed to attribute it in a great measure to travelling inoculators, who go about and demand 2s. 6d. for inserting the virus, and if not able to get that sum (which he has known to be given) will perform their noxious operation for any thing that may be offered.

There is no charitable institution here to supply the poor with nourishment, and perhaps there is no place where such provision is more needed. The town and surrounding country are the property of a nobleman, who is an absentee for ten months out of the twelve, and there is no other charitable institution in this place; in fact, with the exception of the maintaining of this dispensary, no steps are taken by any one to meet and relieve the wants of the poor in this neighbourhood; in this opinion most of the persons present at the examination concurred.

There has not been a general meeting of the subscribers since the formation of the institution. The general management, as regards medical matters, is altogether left to the discretion of the medical attendant; and as regards the funds, to the treasurer. Of the last, no information could be obtained by the Assistant Commissioners, as the treasurer would not attend.

A committee was appointed in 1831, at the first formation of the charity, but have never met since the day of the election of the present medical attendant. The grand jury have not appointed a board of superintendence, and, with the exception of a solitary visit from the nobleman before alluded to in the last two years, and an occasional one from his agent, the institution seems to have been left literally to go on of itself.

The officers, not medical, do not receive any salary. The secretary was appointed at the same time with the treasurer, but has never been called on to act. We were assured that religious prejudices would not be allowed to interfere at any election in this charity.

A written report is presented to the treasurer of the grand jury once a year. The clergy, medical men, gentry, &c. might here be well formed into a board of health; and the district affords a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, if there were any prospect of getting permanent relief for the sick, aged and infirm.

The Assistant Commissioners could not procure any information whatever with respect to the finances of this institution, which were intrusted to the treasurer, and this gentleman did not think proper either to attend in person, or to supply any account, declaring that he would not form one of the meeting, "as he did not see what good could result from the inquiry."

Tarmonbarry
Dispensary.

CHARLES ARMSTRONG, esq.—FANNY GORDON.—BIDDY KELAGHER.—The Medical Attendant.—
Rev. Mr. LLOYD, rector of Killglass.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district of the Tarmonbarry dispensary possesses a population of nearly 15,000 persons, and extends in some directions to nearly six miles. There are similar charities at Mohill and at Drumsna, each about six miles off; also at Drom, distant about one mile and a half. But as all these places are in the county Leitrim, it cannot be said that there is a redundancy of medical relief in this part, or indeed in any part of the county Roscommon. Some persons have been refused relief at this institution, but it was in consequence of an order of the committee, who decided that the tenants of an individual who declined subscribing, were not fit objects for the charity. An anxious wish was expressed for the formation of medical districts, to each of which should be attached dispensaries; and to a certain number of them, and in a central situation, a mixed fever and surgical hospital, on a small scale. It was suggested that a dispensary district ought not to exceed a space which would make any point in it more than five miles distant from the institution. At present great inconvenience is felt here from the want of nearer hospital accommodation than that the county infirmary, at Roscommon affords, distant above twenty miles.

Building and Grounds.

A small room in a mud-built cabin for keeping and dispensing medicine is all the space allotted to this dispensary; the poor wait their turn of admission in a shop adjoining the dispensary room; the house is the property of the medical attendant, who pays 4l. per annum head-rent for it, and receives for the use of it 4l. per annum from the funds of the dispensary, besides 5l. from the clerk who resides in it, and is also his tenant for a small piece of ground attached. In this case an annual tenure cannot be the cause of inconvenience, as a similar place could at any time be procured for the same rent; the witnesses, nevertheless, thought it would be better that this and other such places should be the property of the county.

Medical Officer.

A retired army surgeon, aged about 42, is the medical attendant, he was appointed to discharge the united duties of physician, surgeon and accoucheur, at the formation of the establishment in 1829; he had studied midwifery in London, and previous to his election by the subscribers he had carried on business as an apothecary in Strokestown, at least eight miles distant, where he still continues to reside and to practise the same profession. On

Mondays

Mondays and Thursdays in each week, from eleven until two o'clock, he is expected to attend the poor who may present themselves at the dispensary, and he never has had occasion to send a substitute; however, the time afforded on those days is not by any means considered enough for the efficient relief of the numerous applicants, and if any demands should be made in the interval, they must, for the most part, remain unanswered, as there is not any person to dispense medicine in his absence. The poor can make complaint to any subscriber, who has the power of calling on the committee to redress any irregularity or want of attention on the part of the medical attendant. Fifty pounds per annum is the amount paid to the medical attendant, but he has not any allowance for lodging or for a horse. The grand jury have the power, by refusing or diminishing the presentment, to check any disposition on the part of the subscribers to raise the pay of the medical attendant beyond the amount of a just remuneration; but they cannot prevent the formation of dispensaries for the private objects of individuals, in places where such charities are not wanted or already exist.

The physician is elected by the subscribers, and previous to proceeding to an election notice is always given by advertisement, but it is not considered necessary to inform the grand jury of the transaction. It would be well that a power capable of controlling improper appointments existed somewhere; at the last vacancy the present medical attendant was the only candidate, and he was not required to produce any qualifications; none were permitted to vote but those who had paid a subscription of 1*l.* 1*s.* There are not any individuals of easy circumstances residing in this neighbourhood, nor is there any physician who would give his services gratuitously to the poor.

The present medical attendant possesses the confidence of the lower order in an eminent degree, as we ascertained by conversing with several of them; a poor woman said, that she had come a long way to consult the doctor, as he had been so successful with a friend of hers; and another said, she had derived the greatest benefit from his medicines. At the same time all were well aware of the power which they possessed of checking any irregularity or harshness on the part of the physician, by an appeal to the subscribers.

The prescribing room was kept in very good order, and contained a fair stock of medicine, including all the more usual kinds; they were purchased from Messrs. Leslie & Co., of Dublin, druggists, and cost for the years 1832, 19*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*; 1833, 26*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*

The stock remains under the charge of the physician, who is not permitted to sell anything on any pretext. The pharmaceutic apparatus was in tolerable condition, but there were not any surgical instruments; leeches are not supplied, the expense forbidding it.

A register is kept by the clerk, in which he enters the names of all applicants, and also of those who have recommended them, a copy of which is lodged with the grand jury. On the day of our visit about 32 persons were waiting at the door for the physician, but in general the number is greater. He has never had occasion to perform a capital operation at this dispensary, during the last three years he has been called to visit 15 cases of difficult parturition.

Each subscriber is permitted to recommend three persons, at the same time, for relief, and it is only necessary to have a single signature to a recommendation in order to ensure to the bearer every facility of getting it. Servants of subscribers are considered to come within the province of the charity, but many other persons participate in its benefits whose circumstances might, be considered as placing them above the necessity of seeking gratuitous relief.

The aid afforded by this establishment must be considered very limited, when we state that the poor, who may be confined by illness, if visited at home, are obliged to pay for such extra attendance: moreover, it is quite impossible for the medical attendant, who resides so far off, to visit them at their own dwellings, except occasionally. There are no bandages, splints, &c., for affording adequate and speedy succour in cases of accidents, nor does it appear that the surgeon is bound to attend in such cases, nor, indeed, is he in the way to do so. Prescriptions of other medical men are not made up at the dispensary. As the medical officer only visits those lying-in women whose parturition is attended with unusual delay or difficulty, and as for his attendance he always expects to be paid, the poor are obliged to have recourse to midwives, who are, for the most part, exceedingly ignorant. Vaccination is not here much resorted to, though the opinion of the physician is decidedly in favour of it: on the other hand, the confidence of the public in it is rapidly diminishing, and small-pox has become a frequent disorder of late years.

There are no charitable institutions for the supply of food or clothing to the poor of Tar-monbarry. The general management, in which the surgeon has not any participation, not being a governor, is vested in a body of 21 subscribers. These are expected to meet every half year, when every governor is entitled to attend and vote, but not by proxy. These half yearly meetings are regularly attended by from five to seven (five being a quorum), and minutes are kept of their proceedings.

There is a managing committee, which meets twice a year, of whose transactions an account is always kept: in the interval, some of the governors undertake to inspect the affairs of the institution from time to time, but not officially.

The treasurer is the only officer not medical. He was elected, by open voting, at the first meeting of the subscribers, and without any reference to his religious belief. He does not give any security, but he considers himself accountable not only to the subscribers, but to the grand jury.

The only servant is a porter or clerk, who is paid 5*l.* per annum as wages, and further receives an allowance of 1*l.* annually for the supplying of turf to the prescribing room.

There are not any printed rules.

At each assizes a written report is laid before the grand jury: in it are detailed the state of the finances of the establishment, the number of applicants, &c. &c.

For the last three years the receipts have consisted solely of annual subscriptions, and of a sum equal to their amount, which has been given by the grand jury. The subscriptions were in 1832, 41*l.* 2*s.*; 1833, 32*l.* 19*s.*; 1834, 38*l.* In the list of subscribers, we do not find any of the poorer classes, and there is a great equality in the contributions of most of the individuals, whose names are on it, none of whom have made any improper stipulation for relief to be given them in return.

The treasurer collects all the funds which remain in his custody till occasion requires them.

The chief items of expenditure usually are—salary, medicine, rent and wages. The total sum disbursed for each of the last three years was as follows, viz.: 1832, 79*l.* 12*s.* 8½*d.*; 1833, 63*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.*; 1834, 86*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.* Bills are examined by the committee previous to payment, and the vouchers are afterwards presented to them by the treasurer, through whom alone money is paid.

Twice in the year accounts are made up and laid before the committee, who are summoned for the purpose of inspecting them.

Tulsk and French-park
Dispensaries.Examinations taken by
Cusack Roney, esq.

TULSK dispensary exists only in name, as it consists of but a few damp and useless medicines kept in a dilapidated shed by the roadside, presenting a most wretched and inefficient mode of relief for the sick poor; and it appeared to the Assistant Commissioner perfectly useless to enter into a detailed examination of this institution. There is no management of any kind; it appeared that a few gentlemen in the neighbourhood subscribe about 38*l.*, the grand jury granting as much more annually, thus making the charity more productive to the person called its medical attendant (his salary being 55*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*) than to the poor; on the whole, a more inefficient or useless establishment cannot exist, nor one calling more loudly for some regulation. The medical attendant of this is also the attendant of the French-park dispensary, though lately, his son, is said to do the duty there, a distance from his residence of 10 or 12 miles. He goes over two days in the week to see any person having a recommendation, and the dispensary of French-park presents similar subjects for observation to this of Tulsk. It is most miserably situated, appears to afford no relief to the sick, and is kept in a thatched cabin, at a small rent, from a man who says he is the attendant, and performs a great portion of the medical duty of it; he bleeds, inoculates, prescribes, sets fractures and reduces dislocations, and even performs some of the more capital operations. He showed one poor woman he has repeatedly tapped for dropsy; and the Assistant Commissioner cannot avoid adding, that at the time of his visit, this person had above forty patients under the influence of small-pock, inoculated by himself; of this he seemed particularly proud, affirming that he was always lucky, "having inoculated hundreds upon hundreds", and never lost one; thus keeping the disease continually ripe in the place and neighbourhood. Words sufficiently strong cannot be used to express the disapprobation of the Assistant Commissioner of the whole of this establishment. That at Tulsk is comparatively innocent, though inefficient, but in this place, positive injury must arise to the surrounding poor when an ignorant individual of the lowest grade is permitted to perform all these duties, and even to extend the baneful effects of small-pock, without any attention, on the part of its paid medical officer, to either prevent it or even introduce the cow-pock. There is no management, but there is a treasurer, and the same observations apply here as to the other dispensary (the Tulsk), under the medical care of the same person, that to go into a detailed examination would be perfectly useless. The average subscription for the last four years amount to about 48*l.*, of which one gentleman has, during that period, subscribed 36*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* annually; the surgeon's salary is 50*l.* per annum. The two dispensaries under consideration are examples of such bad management, such inefficient regulations, and such a total dereliction of duty on the part of the officers of them, as to preclude the necessity of saying more than that the former is perfectly useless, and the latter calculated to do the most serious injury, not alone to the surrounding poor, but to all ranks in the country. The state of these two dispensaries are so bad as to demonstrate the absolute necessity of some immediate measure to remedy the abuses that exist in this class of institutions, nor can the account of them be concluded without expressing an opinion that they exhibit the system of keeping up such establishments for the benefit of the nominal medical attendants, without reference to the wants, health, or even the lives of the poor, for whose sake they would appear to have been intended.

Persons seen or visited by the Assistant ommissioners.

[The letter which the Assistant Commissioners sent to the medical officer of the dispensary at Howth and Baldoyle was still in the Post Office, the medical attendant having left the place some time previously; the Assistant Commissioners then endeavoured to see such gentlemen as they were informed were likely to take an interest in the dispensary affairs, and they called on — GEOGHEGAN, esq. M. D. — SWIFT, esq. barrister, Baldoyle.—They afterwards visited MARK FARREN, esq. at Drumnigh.—The medical attendant was visited the next day at his residence in Dublin.]

THE medical officer estimated the extent of district, to the sick poor of which this dispensary is intended to afford relief, at four miles in each direction from the institution, but none of the gentlemen consulted could say what the amount of population might be, though the charity was stated to be adequate to it. Another institution of this class already exists at Raheny, distant about two or three miles to the west; and it is endeavoured to establish another at Belgriffin, at about the same distance in another direction. The gentlemen visited were all of opinion that it would be an excellent improvement to have a few beds for cases of fever or accidents attached to dispensaries.

There is no building of any sort or kind belonging to this dispensary, but the medical officer was allowed 15 l. per annum as rent, for which sum he was bound to provide proper accommodation both at Howth and at Baldoyle. As the medical officer had been long absent, and the dispensary-room locked up, the Assistant Commissioners could not obtain a view of it at Baldoyle, but were informed that it was suited to its purpose, and was a room in the house occupied by the medical officer himself. The place allotted to the purpose at Howth is a small space, about four feet broad, and ten or twelve feet in length, boarded off from the end of a cottage. The situations in both places seemed to be central for the patients; it was thought it would be better if dispensary buildings belonged to the county.

The sole medical officer is a graduate in medicine and a member of the College of Surgeons at Edinburgh, and also a licensed accoucheur of the same place; he is about 29 years of age; previously to his appointment he resided five years at Paris, and three in Scotland; he resided constantly at the institution to which he was elected in 1829, by the subscribers at large, and now holds no other appointment. He practises as physician, surgeon and accoucheur, but not as an apothecary; the rules of this charity not forbidding private practice. The medical officer has never performed his duty by proxy, but was in constant attendance at Baldoyle, and visited Howth twice a week. Poor patients, in case of neglect or harshness on the part of the medical officer, could appeal to a member of the committee, and such appeal would always be listened to.

The medical officer is paid from the funds of the institution, which arise from subscriptions and the county grant: his salary was originally fixed at 100 l. per annum, but, as every expense was to be first paid, the medical officer seldom received that sum; the salary was without other allowance or perquisite of any sort: should the committee choose to authorize larger salaries or allowances than sufficient to obtain efficient medical officers, the grand jury may check them by refusing the county grant.

The right of election of medical officers rests with the subscribers, the grand jury having no control over the appointment; in case of a vacancy, an advertisement is put into the newspaper, but no notice is sent to the grand jury. This neighbourhood is considered to contain persons able to pay for advice and medicine, sufficient in number to induce a medical man to reside, independently of the dispensary emolument. No medical officer attached to this institution has died either at Howth or Baldoyle.

A register is kept, but did not appear to be carefully or accurately dated; it was the only document, however, from which the printed report was taken; but the numbers do not correspond; thus, in the printed report, is set down "deaths 14," whereas, on inspection of the original register, three only were found for the year 1832 and 1833; again, in the printed report are stated 93 cases of small-pox, only 18 cases appeared in the original document; the gross number only of patients attended is sent to the grand jury, and no account is kept of the number of midwifery cases.

The medical officer stated that no one was ever refused advice or medicine, but that to have a recommendation from a subscriber was the more regular course. Many of the farmers, and some others who subscribed, required that they themselves, their families and all living on their farms, should be attended gratis.

Attendance was given as often as required in the night, but no practitioners are authorized to have their prescriptions for the poor made up at this dispensary. Poor women, when lying-in, are generally attended by midwives who are very unskilful, and injury, both to mother and child, is often the result; the medical officer attended in difficult cases. Prescriptions are not entered in a book.

Vaccination is performed here, and generally with success, though small-pox has been frequent of late years, and the medical officer thought the confidence of the public in the operation was a little shaken.

The committee is elected from and by the subscribers, and the medical officer is not one of their body. They appear to have met four times in the years 1827 and 1828, but only twice in each succeeding year. Minutes were kept of their proceedings.

The medical officer stated his opinion that it would be well, if there were no subscriptions to institutions of this sort, and that the Government were to pay every thing and have the appointment, as there were always great dissensions in the managing committee, partly on account of religious differences and partly from persons of inferior degree being on the committee, conveyance, nor for board or lodging, but if the committee or subscribers choose to authorize salaries or allowances higher than are requisite to obtain efficient medical officers the county has no control whatever, although obliged to contribute to the funds of the charity a sum equivalent to the amount of annual subscriptions. Besides, many arrangements might be made by which the county would be unnecessarily taxed over which there is no control.

Here the medical attendant advanced for one subscriber 2 l. 10 s., which sum he admitted he had not been repaid. And in this year (and this year only) his wife subscribes 1 l. 10 s., which it is evident he must get returned, together with the same amount from the grand jury. There is no guarantee that an unprincipled man might not combine with a few friends to raise an institution for the sake of the medical appointment, the medical man returning the money subscribed by his friends, and retaining that subscribed by the county, and the Assistant Commissioner has cause to believe such is done; for any control exercised by the grand jury is not equal to preventing the occurrence of such an abuse.

The medical officer is elected by the governors. The vacancy to which the present medical attendant was appointed was published in the newspapers, but no notice given in particular to the grand jury, who have not, at all events, any power to take a part in the appointment, nor is there a power of veto vested in them or any other persons.

It appears that in the last appointment there were not any testimonials required; if there had been, the present medical officer could not be elected, only having, as he says, the power of acting as an apothecary; neither is there any limitation to the youth or old age of the officers. The number of candidates on the occasion of the last vacancy were for Clane three, for Donadea two, as stated by the medical officer. No control whatever exists to prevent persons from raising a subscription, and electing, at the expense of the county, a man without any of the qualifications for such an appointment. There is no notice of any kind sent to the grand jury. The mere payment of the annual subscription of 1 l. 1 s. entitles every such subscriber to vote. In case the medical officer should be harsh or neglect his patients, they can appeal to any governor of the institution, but no instance has occurred of such having been done, although the poor are said to be acquainted with such tribunal of reference.

It is considered that the individuals in the immediate neighbourhood capable of paying for advice, are not sufficient in number to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument.

There are many medical gentlemen in the district qualified to be elected to the institution, but they are all connected with dispensaries, and none are willing to serve gratuitously. There are no retiring allowances. There has been no instance of mortality, or even sickness among the medical officers.

The room in which the medicines are kept at Clane appears most miserable, but, the medicines, &c. appear tolerably well kept, and of good quality, and sufficient quantity, even of the more delicate and expensive sorts, such as quinine, &c., except morphia, which the medical attendant says he would be afraid to give the poor. These medicines are supplied by the medical attendant himself, who has an allowance of 24 l. per annum for that purpose.

There is no guarantee whatever that the person supplying medicines shall not introduce inferior medicines, and be a gainer in the difference of cost between good and bad. The medicines are paid for by the treasurer on the signature of five of the committee, who need not meet for the purpose. These medicines are purchased by the medical attendant from Messrs. Boileau & George, and he sells them or uses them as he pleases.

The prescriptions are prepared and distributed by himself in person, and the stock of medicines are always under his care, they being his own property.

They are never sold to persons recommended as patients to the dispensary, but are to all others who will pay for them. There are no medical instruments of any sort belonging to the institution. It is stated that leeches are supplied to the patients occasionally, but none appear to be kept. The medical attendant inoculates with vaccine matter freely, but never with small-pock matter, although not prevented from so doing, and it is freely used in the neighbourhood. The medicines, and every thing connected with the Donadea dispensary, appears of the very best quality, and in the very next shop is every thing on a small scale that would be desired; on the whole, the system of regularity and general arrangement fully evinces the care taken of this establishment.

There is a registry kept of persons applying for medical aid, but not of the terminations of their cases. The entries are made by the medical attendant at the time of presenting the recommendations. The numbers treated are returned to the grand jury, and there never has been an instance where any person properly recommended has been refused. There have not been any capital operations performed within the last three years. The number of mid-wifery cases attended are about 20 annually.

A recommendation from a governor entitles a person to relief. The servants of subscribers are attended. It very rarely happens that persons participate in the benefits of the charity who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance, neither is attendance given gratuitously to any of the poorest subscribers. In fact no contract has been made with individuals for the purpose of swelling a subscription list, and thus obtaining large grants from the county. It is quite requisite to obtain an order of recommendation for the aid of the institution, signed by one subscriber, and which orders are most easily procured. The subscribers are not limited in the number of their orders, and although a poor person might not be known to, or liked by the subscribers, he could not be excluded from the benefits of the national institution; and if a poor person should be refused an order, or neglected by the medical officer, or harshly treated, he can appeal to any governor without danger of incurring the displeasure of the wealthier classes, but such appeal does not rest to the grand jury.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, and sick poor are attended at their own dwellings when so ill as to be unable to rise, or come to the institution. There is no limit to the distance for this attendance. The patients are entitled to the personal attendance of the medical officer, whenever medical or surgical aid is required; and if two or three visits a day were necessary they would be paid; attendance has often been given in the night. In case of fractures or other accidents, the institution possesses the means, splinters, bandages, &c. of rendering immediate assistance, and such would be afforded. It has occurred (but very rarely), that the prescriptions of authorized practitioners were made up at the institution for the poor. Lying-in cases are attended by the medical officer, whenever recommended; they are in general attended by midwives, and these are mostly very badly educated; and injury very frequently arises to the mother or the child from their ignorance.

Daily attendance on the sick, particularly in acute diseases, is considered absolutely necessary. These cases are visited at the residences whenever requisite. It is considered that occasional attendance, except in cases of chronic complaints, is of very little use, if any. There is no prescription book kept at the institution. Vaccination is performed there every day when applied for, and it appears to prevent the small-pock, which has not of late years been frequent in this country, and the confidence of the public in the efficacy of vaccination appears from the numbers that are vaccinated to be increasing.

Nourishment.

There is nothing but medicine ever furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. No institutions exist in the neighbourhood upon which the medical man can give an order to the sick poor for food, clothing or fuel.

Intern Patients.

There is no accommodation for intern patients attached to this institution; and when cholera prevailed in this neighbourhood, the medical attendant declined attending cases, unless a place were fitted up for those labouring under it.

General Management.

There is no committee of management, nor are salaried officers governors; but it appears the medical attendant regulates every thing connected with the charity of Clane, as no meeting of either subscribers or any other body appears in the book for years past. There is no person in the principal direction ex officio. The institution at Donadea appears to be nearly a private one, being under the entire control of the Rector of the parish, who acts as collector, treasurer, and general manager. Quarterly meetings were fixed by an original resolution, but such meetings are not regularly, or scarcely at all attended. Five should constitute a meeting, though it has happened that six or seven have attended. All governors are equally entitled to attend and vote, but not by proxy. Whenever a meeting did take place, it has been noticed and entered.

Managing Committee.

There is no managing committee, nor board of superintendence. The governors or committee never act during the intervals of meeting, nor do any of them ever visit the patients officially.

Officers not medical.

The only officer is the medical attendant, who was appointed by the subscribers regularly called together as before stated. The appointment is during good behaviour. The rules are in manuscript. Voting for officers is open, and no particular religious belief excludes a person from being an officer. The present medical attendant is a Roman Catholic. It would most certainly be right to vest in a central board a veto to prevent improper appointments. At present, the grand jury take no part whatever in the elections.

The salary of the medical attendant is 60*l.* per annum for Clane, and 40*l.* for Donadea; but no payment for being treasurer. He does not as such treasurer give any security, but accounts to the grand jury. There is no instance of an officer having been suspended or removed.

Stores.

There are no stores except the medicines, and these are supplied, as before stated, by the medical attendant, at a contract of 24*l.* per annum; and he is the only governor, member of the committee, or officer, who supplies any article to the institution. There are no articles whatever of furniture, clothes, food, fuel, or wine, &c., purchased. There are no articles belonging to the institution which could be lent or used by any governor or officer.

Reports.

No reports are made. The clergy, medical men, gentry, &c., might in this district be formed into a board of health with very great advantage. The district affords a sufficient number of persons for such purpose who would be fitted and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, if it should be found expedient to extend the relief afforded by the dispensaries to a supply of food and clothing and the improvement of dwellings.

Funds and Accounts.

The amount of subscriptions for the Clane dispensary were, in 1831, 46*l.* 1*s.*; 1832, 34*l.* 16*s.*; 1833, 39*l.* 10*s.*: the largest subscription being 5*l.*, and the smallest 5*s.* The income arises from subscriptions, donations, and grand jury presentments. In 1831, there were 29 subscribers; in 1832, 27; in 1833, 25. None of the poorer classes subscribe; and if the subscriptions were to fall off, the institution would cease. There are no principal subscribers upon the continuance of whose bounty the institution depends, but its existence rests upon very slender grounds, particularly as many subscribers are retiring. It is stated, that subscriptions are not accompanied with any stipulation that the subscriber or any part of his family are themselves to receive medicine and medical advice gratuitously. There is no capital stock, houses or lands, belonging to the institution, from which any annual income is derived.

The funds are collected by personal application, and remain with the treasurer. The expenditure, in 1831, amounted to 94*l.* 3*s.*; in 1832, 94*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*; in 1833, 88*l.* 15*s.*: principally for salary to medical attendant, medicines, and rent of cabin. The bills are examined by the governors previous to payment, and by them ordered to be paid. The accounts are made up every half year, and are said to be as often presented to the full body of the subscribers, and copies sent to the grand jury. There are no students attached to the institution, nor are lectures given; and dissections are not permitted.

Dispensary.

THIS dispensary is intended to afford relief to the sick poor in a district extending six miles by four, including two parishes and the town of Maynooth, the population of which town alone amounts to 2,000; but that of the entire district could not be ascertained. There is a dispensary at Kilcock and one at Celbridge, with a branch at Leixlip, each three miles distant; another at Rathcoffey, about four miles and a half distant, and one at Lucan, at Dunboyne and at Newcastle, each five miles off; besides many more within a distance of ten miles. Medical institutions of this class are considered to be too numerous in this part of the country, and more than are wanted for the relief of the sick poor. About 10 years since there were two dispensaries in the town of Maynooth, each having a grant from the grand jury equal to the amount of subscriptions. An influential resident in the county established the first dispensary in 1813, which was attended by a non-resident physician three days in the week, and a second was established the year after by the townspeople, who felt the want of a resident medical attendant, but it was discontinued after three years, because the medical attendant, on his return from Glasgow, where he had gone to graduate in medicine, did not like to keep up the dispensary, fearing it would have the appearance of opposition to the influential individual before alluded to. He continued, however, to give advice and medicine to the poor, at his own expense. The absence of the regular dispensary physician was acknowledged to be a great inconvenience to the public, if not an evil; one labourer said he had just had a bad surfeit on a non-dispensary day, and he should not have known what to have done if the resident medical gentleman had not attended him; another "that it was painful to be obliged to call upon a man who would take nothing for attending him." Under these circumstances the two dispensaries were remodelled and formed into the one institution now under consideration.

Population and
Extent of Country.

With regard to the greatest extent of country and amount of population which should be included in one dispensary district, it was thought that one medical institution of this sort, with a resident medical attendant placed near the centre, would be sufficient for a district comprising a radius of five miles and a population of 6,000 to 10,000; this would be better adapted to rural districts where the inhabitants are scattered over the country, but if collected in towns and villages, as in this part, and the population is dense, perhaps three miles should be the greatest district, and a medical man should reside in each town. Those present at the examination concurred in opinion that it would be desirable to have a few surgical beds here, or attached to the Celbridge institution, for the reception of cases of accident occurring in the neighbourhood.

The dispensary is held in a small lodge at the entrance of an extensive landed proprietor's demesne, who himself thought it would be better to have a house in the town, which should be the property of the county; the present arrangement was made for the sake of sparing expense to the funds of the institution; the pharmacy room is rather confined and small, but there is a waiting-room adjoining it, and upon the whole it answers the purpose very well.

There are two medical officers to this institution, the one a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, about 45 years of age, the other a graduate of the University of Glasgow and Licentiate of the Apothecaries' Hall, Dublin, who is about 55 years old; the former residing at Leixlip, the latter at Maynooth; the first having been appointed by the subscribers at the original establishment of the charity, the last only in January 1834, his appointment having taken place in conformity with the wishes of a great number of the townspeople, who thereon became subscribers. The resident medical officer was, previous to his appointment, residing and practising in the town of Maynooth, and holds no other appointment; the non-resident, besides attending this dispensary, is physician to the Celbridge Fever Hospital and Dispensary of Leixlip, which is a branch of the former, and to the Lucan Dispensary; the amount of salary which he draws, and it did not appear what sum he was paid from the funds of the institution at Lucan. In case of the illness or temporary absence of either of the medical officers, the other would act in his stead. The resident physician does not attend midwifery cases, but the other received his education in that branch of his profession at the Lying-in Hospital, Dublin; both attend at the dispensary twice in the week. of seeing the poor at his own house on any day in the week. In case of harshness or neglect on the part of either the medical officers, Dalton, the labourer, said, that "he would not hesitate to apply for redress to the treasurer or any other gentleman amongst the subscribers." One of the medical officers resides close at hand, and if he happened to be absent his apprentice would afford immediate assistance in cases of accident. The medicines are dispensed by either of the medical officers before alluded to.

The arrangement for the payment of medical men seems to be of their own making, and to have been left to themselves by the subscribers, as there has been no notice taken of it in the books, nor any resolution entered into regarding the more recent appointment of a medical officer; the arrangement was stated to be thus,—the first appointed physician to retain the 45*l.* subscribed by the patron of the charity and his friends, and the more recent appointed medical officer to receive 30 l. and whatever sum besides subscribed by his friends, and to have the grand jury grant in addition, in consideration of his visiting the patients at their own dwellings, attending to them on non-dispensary days and supplying the medicines.

The only guarantee against any person combining with a few friends to raise an institution for the sake of a medical appointment, is the power which the grand jury possesses of examining, on oath, such medical or other person, if any such circumstance were suspected.

One of the medical officers was appointed at the original formation of the charity by the governors, each subscriber of a guinea being a governor; the more recent appointment was made under an understanding made with a general meeting of the governors. It was thought a controlling power over elections should be vested in a board established for that purpose, the subscribers being careless in their attendance and not competent judges of the qualifications of a medical man; there are persons in this district capable of paying for advice in sufficient numbers to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary emolument, as the resident dispensary physician, having resided and practised at Maynooth previous to his appointment, the non-resident had ceased to possess the confidence of the people, but not from any fault of his.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed is small, but neatly kept and pretty well arranged; the medicines good but scantily supplied; the reason assigned for this, was that they would become mouldy, but this would not necessarily be the case, as there was a fire-place. The Assistant Commissioner could not but look on the arrangement before alluded to as made between the medical officers as being the real cause; the more delicate and expensive medicine not being at all found here, the resident medical officer supplies medicine from his own private stock, engaging to give it, with attendance and advice, for a certain sum, the character of this medical officer being the only security against his supplying medicines of an inferior quality; his predecessor having adopted the same plan of supplying for a certain sum, from his own stock, such medicines as were wanted for the dispensary. The annual expense for the past three years could not be stated, but it was supposed to be about 25 l. There were no apparatus for preparing decoctions, nor were surgical instruments of any sort found in this institution. Leeches are occasionally used. Vaccination is very regularly performed, but although the medical officer is not prevented, he does not inoculate with small-pock matter.

There is a register kept by the resident medical officer, but it does not distinguish residence of patients, termination of disease or persons recommending; it appeared, however, by this document, that the numbers applying at the dispensary during the last nine months, for relief, were as follows : *

At Dispensary	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	3,671
At Medical Officer's house	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2,251
Visited at their own houses	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	441
Vaccinated	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	86

The medical officer has not been called on to attend midwifery cases, which appears to be owing to there being a midwife regularly brought up at the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, and placed there by one of the principal subscribers, who allows her 5*l.* per annum.

All poor persons within the district are entitled to relief at this dispensary. The medical officer may refuse a ticket on the ground that the person presenting it is capable of paying, and the subscribers giving the tickets may appeal and bring the complaint before the governors. The lower class of servants of subscribers are entitled to relief, but not those who are capable of paying.

Extern patients are seen at the institution and visited at their homes, so often as their case may require, either by night or day. One of the medical officers stated that in the night, previous to the examination, he had visited a dispensary patient at a distance of three miles from his residence; but in cases of accident, there are no splints or bandages belonging to the dispensary, by means of which to afford immediate assistance. The opinion of the medical men is very strong in favour of vaccination, and the confidence of the public in the practice appeared to be increasing, and small-pock has been very little in the district of late years.

Wine or other extras are not afforded from the funds of this charity, nor does there exist any institution in this neighbourhood on which an order can be given for food, fuel or clothing.

About 35 of the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, constitute the principal direction, exclusive of salaried officers; but it was stated, that the institution had been essentially left to

to the management of the medical officers, there were no fixed meetings of the direction; indeed, this dispensary forms one instance among many others where there has been no meeting of subscribers held, nor a committee formed for the regulation and management of the affairs of the institution.

The only officer not medical is the treasurer, who does not give any security; he is appointed without any meeting by an understanding amongst the subscribers: religious belief does not exclude any one from becoming an officer. It was the opinion of one of the principal landed proprietors in this county who subscribes largely to six institutions of this class, that there should be one regular and uniform system for the management of dispensaries, which is left to individuals; however good their intention may be, they will never confer the benefit which might be expected from them when rightly managed for the community. It was said that it would be very desirable that the clergy, medical men, &c. should form boards of health in every district, and this district would afford a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in such a purpose.

None of the poorer classes are amongst the subscribers, nor does it ever happen that subscriptions are accompanied by any stipulation whatever in favour of the subscribers. The continuance of the institution mainly depends on the bounty of one subscriber, and possesses no capital stock in houses or lands.

Subscriptions are sent in by the different subscribers to the treasurer, in whose hands the funds remain. There is not any property or sums of money left in the hands of salaried officers or servants of the institution.

The general heads of expenditure are salaries and medicine, which are paid by the treasurer.

Accounts are annually made up and copies thereof presented to the grand jury, but there are no meetings of the full body of the subscribers, for the purpose of auditing them.

[N.B. The medical officer of the institution did not attend the examination, although the day and hour was duly noticed to him by the Assistant Commissioner; this was the more singular, as Tuesday, the day of this examination, the Assistant Commissioner was given to understand, is one of the usual days of attendance at the dispensary. The hours of attendance were generally from ten to one o'clock in the forenoon, but at eleven o'clock on the day in question the medical officer had not made his appearance. Part of the investigation was gone into by the treasurer, but it was quite useless to pursue it any further, that officer not being able to reply to such questions as did not concern himself.]

Newbridge
Dispensary.

THE extent of the district for attendance of the poor is understood by the governors to embrace a circle of two miles. The nearest institutions for medical relief are Clane, on the north, five miles distant; Kilcullen on the south, four miles distant; Naas, where the Assistant Commissioner was given to understand the medical officer resides, on the east, six miles distant; and Kildare on the west, four miles distant. Within the bounds of the district for which the Newbridge dispensary is intended, there is no other medical institution for the relief of the poor.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The institution consists of one room, taken by the year at a rent of 12*l*. This is made to serve for all the purposes of the dispensary. There is no garden or ground of any kind attached to the institution.

Building.

There is one medical attendant attached to the institution, whom the Assistant Commissioner was given to understand resides at Naas, distant, as already stated, six miles from Newbridge. In cases of accident, therefore, or sudden illness, occurring within the district, no immediate medical attendance could be had. With reference to the circumstances under which the appointment of the present medical officer took place; the nature of his qualifications; whether, in the event of absence or illness, any substitute could be found; under what regulations; whether he is allowed private practice; and the nature of his practice generally,—the Assistant Commissioner was, in consequence of this officer's absence from the examination, unable to obtain any positive information. Through the treasurer, however, the Assistant Commissioner learned that the medical officer was appointed to attend on two days in the week, from the hours of ten in the morning until one in the afternoon. This attendance was not, however, considered by the treasurer to be sufficient. It forms a part of the medical officer's duty to dispense the requisite medicines. There is no student, pupil, or other person residing on the spot to afford immediate relief in cases of sudden accident.

Medical Officers.

The medical attendant is the only officer paid; his salary is 50*l*. annually, without any allowance for a horse or other conveyance. The Assistant Commissioner was informed that there were no bye-laws on the subject of the payment of the medical officer.

Payment.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers, and when a vacancy occurs, notice is given in the newspapers. There were eighteen or nineteen candidates for the last vacancy, which was considered mainly attributable to the publicity given through the advertisements. The grand jury takes no part whatever in the appointment of the medical officer. There does not appear to be any limitation as to the age of the officers of the institution, nor does any control exist to prevent persons from raising a fund and starting an institution at the expense of the county. In case the medical officer should be harsh to, or neglect the patients, patients, they can give information to the subscribers; the poor are acquainted with such mode of reference, and there have occurred instances of its having been had recourse to.

It is considered that there are in the immediate neighbourhood individuals capable of paying for advice, sufficient in number to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument. It is not, however, thought that any medical man would be willing to attend the institution gratuitously. There is not any retiring allowance allowed to the medical officer. Up to the time of the examination there had occurred no instance of mortality as regards the medical officer of the institution.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed appeared to the Assistant Commissioner to be neatly kept, and the medicine to be of good quality and sufficient quantity; owing to the absence of the medical attendant, it was found impossible to ascertain whether a good or any supply of the more expensive medicine was kept.

Medicines are supplied by Messrs. Allen & Co., druggists, Dublin, and paid for by the treasurer on order of the subscribers. The prescriptions are prepared and distributed to the poor patients by the medical attendant himself, and during his absence, the medicines are placed under the care of the woman who keeps the shop on the ground floor of the house, and who lets the room in which the dispensary is held.

The treasurer informed the Assistant Commissioner, that, there were some medical instruments belonging to the institution, but in the absence of the medical attendant he was unable to specify them; for the same reason it could not be ascertained whether the medical officer was bound to supply vaccine matter to the neighbouring poor gratis; whether he was allowed or was in the habit of inoculating with small-pock matter.

Any person getting a recommendation is entitled to be attended from the institution, and no person would be attended without such. Each subscriber is unlimited in the number of his recommendations.

Persons who attended the Examination.

The Medical Attendant.*

THE medical attendant does not know what is the amount of population in the district, but its extent, north and south, is about nine miles, and not more than two, east and west. The neighbouring medical institutions are Drumcondra on the west, Louth on the north, Dunleer south-east, Castlebellingham east, and Collon on the south. There are no other medical institutions in this district, but it is considered too large for one medical man, if he were to attend all the sick poor.

The neighbouring medical institutions are pretty well placed.

This dispensary possesses intern accommodation, viz.: two wards, with two beds each, but they are solely for subscribers' domestic servants.

It would be very desirable to have a few beds for fevers and accidents among the paupers.

The dispensary-house is built of stone, with a slate roof. On the ground floor are, one sitting-room, a kitchen, with pantry, a dispensary-shop, with store-room, a waiting-room for patients, and an entrance-hall; three bed-rooms and two wards on the upper floor. There is no house furniture belonging to the dispensary.

The wards to which there is a separate entrance contain two beds each; they are sufficiently large, and exceedingly well ventilated; there is a fireplace in each. The water is not good, and the situation is low and damp. There is a slipper bath belonging to the institution; about a rood of good garden ground is attached. There are good out-houses for horses, &c. &c. The ground was granted by the corporation of Ardee for ever at a nominal rent. The building belongs to the subscribers, and is in most excellent repair. The cost of erecting it was from 800 l. to 900 l.

The sole medical officer, aged 42, graduated in medicine at Edinburgh, and passed the College of Surgeons, London. Resides at the institution, to which he was appointed in 1827 by election, and holds no other appointment. He practises as physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary, so far as the dispensary is concerned, but not otherwise. In cases of absence a proper person is appointed by the committee; he has private practice; studied midwifery in Edinburgh and London. The patients come to the dispensary on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, from 11 to 1 o'clock.

The poor patients can complain in case of irregularity on the part of the medical man to any subscriber, and are aware of the fact. There are to be found complaints against a predecessor of the present medical officer on the book of proceedings of the committee. The medical attendant has no assistant, and dispenses the medicines himself.

His salary is fixed at two-thirds of the whole income which arises from subscriptions, the county presentment, and the interest of a sum of money in the funds; he is besides provided with unfurnished lodgings.

The medical officer is elected by the committee, who are very particular with regard to testimonials; and advertisements were put into many newspapers on the occasion of the last vacancy, and the number of candidates who then came forward was 20. The district is sufficient to support a medical man independently of the institution. There is one medical man, eligible eligible living in Ardee. There are no retiring allowances granted from the funds of this charity. One medical officer died of fever.

The dispensary is in most excellent order, and contains an ample stock of all required; medicines which are supplied to the institution by the medical attendant himself out of his salary, and his character is the sole guarantee that inferior medicines shall not be supplied. He never supplies any medicines in private practice. The average expense of medicine amounts to upwards of 40*l.* per annum. A stomach pump and a few splints are all the instruments belonging to the institution, and these are not sufficient for its purposes, the medical attendant being occasionally obliged to use his own. The stomach pump is sometimes lent, and leeches, when supplied, are at the private expense of the medical attendant. The custom of the dispensary, with regard to vaccination, is to supply vaccine matter to the neighbouring practitioners, and every body who comes is vaccinated gratis. The medical attendant never inoculates, but some itinerant practitioners sometimes bring small-pock matter into the neighbourhood.

A register is regularly kept by the medical officer, and the total number of the patients attended is sent to the grand jury. This year the new patients average about 15 daily, and 10 or 11 are now being visited at their homes.

Every person relieved must have a recommendation; and care is taken that no one who is not a fit object should have a ticket: but this is often abused. There is no limitation as to the number of recommendations by each subscriber, and the medical attendant is bound to attend in any case of emergency; but as the district is very populous, he seldom attends or prescribes for those who cannot procure a ticket.

The attending patients at their homes depends upon the discretion of the medical man, who visits frequently in the night. Difficult cases of lying-in are attended, as the midwives are not skilful, and injury has been known to arise in consequence of their ignorance. The medicines prescribed are such as are usually considered proper. The confidence of the public is great in vaccination here, and small-pox has been unknown for the last two years.

Wine, spirits and beer are given at the discretion of the medical attendant; but there are no institutions in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given for food, fuel and other extras. Clothes for lying-in women, flannel, &c., are also given from this charity.

Intern patients, it is understood, must be domestic servants of subscribers, but there have been exceptions. Cholera cases were not admitted. There are no distinctions of any kind made with regard to persons coming to see intern patients.

The diet for intern patients is supplied by the person recommending.

The principal management is vested in a committee of seven, elected by the subscribers.

The committee here are very attentive. Three are considered a quorum. The medical attendant is not one of their body. One of the committee visits the dispensary once a month. Minutes are kept of their proceedings, and four is about the average number attending.

The treasurer is the only officer not medical, and he is assisted by a neighbouring clergyman to collect the subscriptions; and the accounts are audited by the committee.

The mode of voting is open, which has been found beneficial.

The present medical attendant is a Protestant; and previous to his election there was no sudden accession of subscribers. His salary for the last three years has been averaged about 150*l.*, out of which sum he is bound to purchase all the medicines.

There is a nurse attached to this institution, who is paid 5*l.* per annum to keep the ward in order, and 10*d.* a day when there is any in-patient, at which time only she is accommodated in the house. The wards are beautifully kept, but for the last two years there have been no in-patients.

The Assistant Commissioners were unable to obtain a copy of any rules or regulations. There are many bye-laws entered in the minute-book of the proceedings of the committee, but little or nothing is printed.

This neighbourhood affords persons amply sufficient in number, qualified, and willing, to form a board of health, or otherwise to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, should it be found expedient to extend the relief afforded by dispensaries.

The income of the institution arises from subscriptions, the county grant, and interest of a funded sum of money, which has accumulated from the custom of investing every year one-third of the income, or such part of this one-third as remains after small extras for repairs, painting, &c., are paid. The medical attendant does not know exactly what the amount of the funded sum is, but believes between 400*l.* and 500*l.*

One family subscribes largely, and if it withdrew its support, the charity would most likely fall to the ground, or, at any rate, the funds would be most materially reduced; but there is no probability of this occurring. The largest subscription is 20*l.*, from the corporation of Ardee; the smallest is one guinea.

The funds lie with the treasurer, who gives no security.

The accounts are made up and audited every year, and laid before the grand jury.

The income and expenditure of this dispensary was, for the past year,—

Subscriptions	-	-	-	-	-	-	£. 119	12	2

Out of which all the medicine must be provided.

The other expenses are small, namely, wages to a nurse, 5*l.*, and sundries uncertain.

THE medical attendant estimates the population of the district for which this dispensary is intended at 8 or 9,000 ; its extent north and south is about 10 miles, and east and west about four. The medical institutions within six miles are the Dundalk infirmary on the south, and Jonesborough dispensary on the north. There is no other medical charity in this district. The medical attendant does not think the district too large. Paupers are never refused advice, medicine, or attendance, at their dwellings. It was considered it would be a most excellent plan to have a house in the district containing six or eight beds, for fevers and accidents among the poor.

There is no building belonging to the dispensary, but the parish has put itself to some inconvenience, and has given a room in the school-house, rent-free, in which the medicines, &c. belonging to the dispensary are kept. The situation is healthy, and supplied with good water. There are waiting-rooms for patients.

The sole medical officer of the institution, aged 32, is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, Dublin, and was educated in midwifery at the lying-in hospital there. He does not reside at Ballymascanlan, but at Forkhill, about six and a half English miles distant. He was appointed to this institution in 1829, by election ; was previously a medical student. He is also surgeon to the Forkhill dispensary ; practises as physician, surgeon and accoucheur. In case of absence, he is obliged to apply to the governor, and to find a proper substitute at his own expense. Is allowed private practice. The periods of attendance at the dispensary, on the part of the medical officer, are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, from twelve o'clock till all patients are seen. The duty is never done by proxy. All controlling power lies with the governors, to whom the poor can apply in case of any harshness or neglect of duty towards them, and they are aware of this fact. There is no resident medical man, and the medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant himself.

The medical officer is paid the balance remaining of the common fund, when all the expense of necessary supplies is deducted, without any allowance for horse or lodgings.

The grand jury can and do inquire into the items of expense, and possess the power of regulating the amount of the county grant accordingly.

The medical officer is elected by vote, the grand jury taking no part in the appointment. There has been no election since the establishment of the institution, and then there was no advertisement for the purpose of raising competition for the medical appointment. The present medical officer was known, and testimonials were not required ; nor was any notice of the election sent to the grand jury.

The rules contain no limitations as to the age of the medical officer. All subscribers of a guinea and upwards vote. The neighbourhood is not sufficient to maintain a medical man independently of a dispensary, nor is there one medical man living in the district. There are no regulations relative to superannuations or retiring allowances.

The room in which the medicines are kept is about twelve feet long by nine feet broad, and is neatly arranged. The medicines appear to be of good quality and in sufficient quantity, including those of the more delicate sorts.

The medicines are ordered by the medical attendant, and paid for by the treasurer, being supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin, at an average cost of 18*l.* per annum.

The room in which the medicines are kept is locked by the medical attendant, who always keeps the key.

The medicines are not sold under any circumstances. The institution possesses the necessary apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c., but no surgical instruments of any kind.

The medical attendant does not supply medicine in his private practice. Leeches are supplied to the patients when required, and paid for by the treasurer ; but no particular arrangements are made for ensuring a regular supply of them. They are bought, at prime cost, of an apothecary in Dundalk.

Vaccination is performed gratis, and vaccine matter is given away.

The medical attendant does not, and never would inoculate with small-pock ; but there are no laws or regulations of this charity relative to vaccination or inoculation.

A register of the diseases treated is kept by the medical attendant, and a summary is laid before the governors and grand jury. No sick poor are ever refused attendance at the dispensary, or at their homes if necessary, with or without a subscriber's ticket. On the last day of attendance, there were thirteen former patients, five new ones, and three visits at the dwellings of the sick. There have been six capital operations performed in the last three years, and in all these cases the patients recovered. About sixty midwifery cases have been attended within the same period.

All sick poor who get tickets are entitled to relief. Some of the servants of subscribers are attended gratis. Persons who, from their circumstances, ought not, do sometimes apply for relief. The signature of one subscriber is sufficient, and there is no limitation to the number of tickets each subscriber may issue, and as relief is never refused, no poor person can be without advice and medicine.

There are none but extern patients at this dispensary, who are visited at their own homes, when necessary ; and, if within the district, attendance is also given in the night, if required : but in cases of accident, the institution does not possess splints, bandages, or other means of affording immediate assistance. No practitioner can have his prescriptions made up at this dispensary.

The medical officer attends lying-in cases, when asked. A prescription list is kept, and the medicines usually considered proper are ordered. Vaccination is considered efficacious; but the number of small-pox cases has increased of late. Yet the confidence of the public in vaccination is strong, and not diminishing.

There are no extras allowed from the funds of this institution, nor does there exist in this neighbourhood any charity on which the surgeon can give an order for food, fuel or clothing.

The general management is vested in the subscribers, who meet twice a year, three of whom form a quorum; the medical officer not being one of their number, the management has never devolved on the surgeon, as the governors are attentive.

There is no person, ex officio, in the general management. The fixed meetings of the governors take place on the first Friday in November and the first Friday in May, on which occasions, four or five governors form the average attendance.

All governors can vote, but no proxies are allowed; minutes are kept of their proceedings.

The collector and treasurer is the only officer not medical, and he is appointed by the subscribers; the voting is open, a mode of election that has been found beneficial; there are no bye-laws of this charity for the regulation of this appointment. No religious creed excludes any one from becoming an officer; the present surgeon is a Protestant. The treasurer is not a paid officer, and gives no security.

There are no printed rules. An annual report is made to the governors, but isn't printed.

The district affords a sufficient number of persons (clergy and gentry) to form a board of health, or otherwise to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, should it be found expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The annual amount of subscriptions varies, but averages about 20*l.*; the funds of this charity are derived from subscriptions and county grants; the number of subscribers is about 14; the largest subscription amounts to 5*l.*, the smallest to 1*l.* 1*s.*; none of the poorer classes subscribe. The withdrawal of one or two subscribers would materially affect the institution, and make its existence precarious.

Subscriptions are in no cases attended with any stipulations in favour of the contributions.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands.

The income and expenditure of this dispensary for the years 1832 and 1833 were thus stated:—

		£.	s.	d.
Income	Subscriptions	-	-	-
	County Grant	-	-	-
		21	11	-
		21	11	-
		£. 43	2	-
Expenditure		-	-	-

The accounts are made up by the treasurer, audited by the governors, and laid before the grand jury.

Persons who attended the Examination.

ROSS CARTHY, esq.—THOMAS GERNON, esq.—ROSS GILES, esq.—CHARLES LUCAS, esq.—WILLIAM MOORE, esq.—THOMAS STEWART, esq.—Rev. CHARLES WARING, and the Medical Attendant.

The district is about eight miles square, the population amounting to 11,927, according to the census of 1831. There is no medical institution within six miles; the district is not considered too large. No poor applicants are ever refused relief with or without a ticket. It would be most desirable to have a building in the district capable of receiving six or eight intern patients, as all bad cases of accidents are now obliged to be sent to Dundalk, a distance of 12 miles.

There is no building of any sort belonging to the institution, but the dispensary is kept at a house which is jointly taken yearly by the committee and the medical attendant. The house is in a good airy well-drained situation, and supplied with excellent water, but contains no waiting room for patients. If this house were given up great inconvenience would arise. Hence it is very desirable that the dispensary building should be the property of the charity.

The sole medical officer of the institution is about 27 years of age; he was educated and studied midwifery in Dublin, and is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London; he resides at the institution, to which he was appointed in 1833. He was brought up to the profession of medicine; he was elected by the subscribers, and holds no other appointment. He practises as physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary. There is no bye-law relative to absence or illness of the surgeon, but it is customary to let the committee know, that they may procure a proper substitute. The surgeon is allowed private practice. The days of attendance at the dispensary are Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, from eleven till three.

three o'clock. The duty is never done by proxy. The poor patients, in case of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical officer, may complain to the subscriber from whom he received his ticket, and they are well aware of this resource. The medical attendant is always resident, and dispenses the medicine himself; he also keeps an assistant.

The surgeon is the only medical officer paid; last year he received 45*l.*; but the amount of his salary is liable to vary, being paid from a fund formed by subscriptions and county grant; in short he receives the balance, all other dispensary expenses being paid. The grand jury are not bound to give the county grant, without inquiring into the accounts of the charity.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers, without notice being given of a vacancy to the grand jury, who have nothing to do with the appointment.

Testimonials are considered indispensable; but no limitations exist with regard to age, except such as the qualification requires. There were six candidates at the last vacancy.

All subscribers of one guinea or more have a right to vote.

There is only one medical man eligible to the office of surgeon to the dispensary resident in the neighbourhood, which is not considered sufficient to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument.

There are no regulations respecting the granting superannuations or retiring allowances; nor has there been any mortality among the medical men.

Pharmacy.

The room in which the medicines are kept is neat and in good condition; it is in fact the surgery of the medical attendant. The medicines are well kept and in sufficient quantity. The more expensive and delicate are included.

The medical attendant can have any medicines he requires by applying to the treasurer, who orders them from Messrs. Leslie & Co., Dublin, and pays their bills, which for the last year amounted to 14*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* The stock of medicine is always under the care of the medical attendant. Those belonging to the dispensary are never sold, and are kept distinct from, but in the same room or shop with those for private practice or sale.

The instruments which the dispensary possess are a stomach pump and three catheters, which are used in private practice, and might be lent to a surgeon, if required. These are not sufficient for the purposes of the institution. Leeches are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co., of Dublin. There is a bye-law of this charity which obliges the medical attendant to give away vaccine matter gratis; but no regulations exist with regard to inoculation; the medical attendant, however, never inoculates.

Patients.

A register of patients is kept; but it is not easy to determine from it how many have been attended, as it does not include those who were relieved without tickets. No account of patients is sent to the grand jury. The number of patients now in attendance is 21. It appeared by a summary of the register for the past year, that four capital operations were performed, and only one death had occurred.

Who entitled to Relief.

All who can obtain tickets are entitled to relief. Servants of subscribers are not attended gratis. As much care as possible is taken that no person who ought to pay should have a ticket; but there is no difficulty in a poor person getting one; moreover it is very usual to give medicine without one.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, and the sick poor attended at their own houses, any where within the district, and if requisite, in the night. The institution cannot furnish bandages or splints, and no neighbouring practitioner is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at it. All lying-in cases to which he is sent for are attended by the surgeon; the midwives are very unskilful, and injury often happens to both mother and child. Vaccination is performed at the institution gratis, and is found generally efficacious. Small-pox has been frequent of late; but no one suffered severely who had been vaccinated; although a few cases after vaccination did occur, the confidence of the public in vaccination is great and rapidly increasing.

Nourishment.

No extras are allowed from the funds of this institution, nor does there exist any charity on which the medical officer could give an order for food, fuel or clothing.

General Management.

The general management is vested in a committee elected by the subscribers, of which the medical officer is not a member.

The committee has been very attentive. There is no person ex officio in the principal management; the fixed meetings are quarterly, and three form a quorum; from three to seven generally attend. Voting is not allowed by proxy, and minutes of the proceedings are kept. The treasurer and collector is not a paid officer; he is elected annually; but no bye-law exists on the subject. All voting is open, which mode is found to act beneficially. Religious belief excludes no one from becoming an officer. The present surgeon is a Protestant. No sudden accession of subscribers has taken place at any election.

Reports.

There is no annual report of the state of the charity entered in the minute book; one has, however, been occasionally made, but never printed. This neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to enter into a more minute inquiry into the wants of the poor.

Funds, Accounts, Receipts.

The amount of subscriptions is about 40 l. per annum. There is no great subscription, the withdrawal of which would break up the charity; but if several fall off, the institution must cease to exist. None of the poorer classes subscribe. No subscription is attended with any stipulation in favour of the subscriber.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, and those sick poor whose cases require it, are attended at their own homes night or day, when expressly recommended by the subscribers, and the distance limited only by the extent of the district.

The chief medical officer attends difficult cases of midwifery. Sixteen cases were attended last year.

The midwives here are not skilful, and injury has consequently been known to arise. The public here have confidence in vaccination, which is found to be very efficacious; and small-pox has not been known here for the last two years.

Some extras are allowed from the funds of this dispensary, such as wine or spirits, but no clothing, nor is there a charity on which an order can be given.

The committee consists of twelve, of which number the medical officer is not one. The principal management devolves on the treasurer. The governors pay little attention to the charity. No person is ex officio in the principal direction. Days were fixed for meetings, but they were not attended to. Three form a quorum. All governors can vote, but none by proxy. Minutes are kept of the proceedings.

The Assistant Commissioners were not able to inspect the books, &c. containing the minutes of the proceedings of the committee, as these documents were in the care of a gentleman who, at the period of this examination, was in England.

The treasurer collects the subscriptions without salary, and gives no security. The voting is open. The chief medical attendant is the only salaried officer. He is a Protestant.

An annual report of the affairs of this dispensary is furnished to the grand jury, but not printed. The clergy and gentry of this district might form a board of health, and meet at the dispensary. The district furnishes a sufficient number of persons able to attend to the wants of the poor. It appears from the report furnished to the Assistant Commissioners, that, in the year ending July 1833, the number of patients recommended during the preceding twelve months, was - - - - - 1,023

The subscriptions amount to 72*l.* 2*s.*, received from 31 subscribers. The county presentment amounts to 71*l.* 1*s.* The largest subscription 10*l.*; the smallest 1*l.* 1*s.* The continuance of this institution does not depend on the bounty of any one individual. Collon Dispensary.

Lord FERRARD.—Rev. WILLIAM HENRY FOSTER, and the Medical Attendant.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE Assistant Commissioners could not ascertain what was the population of the district for which this dispensary is established, but it extends about six miles north and south, and four east and west.

The neighbouring medical establishments are Ardee and Dunleer to the north, Drumcondra to the west, Drogheda to the east, and Slane to the south. There is no other medical institution in the Collon dispensary district.

As a dispensary the present establishment is sufficient, but there is great want of a few beds for fever and accidents; there are however no funds for this purpose. A district of three miles radius, with a rural population, is considered as much as a single medical man can attend to. No one is ever refused either to be visited or furnished with medicine from this dispensary.

Lord Ferrard, Rev. Mr. Foster and the Medical Attendant are decidedly of opinion that there should be established some institution for in-patients—one containing eight beds would probably be sufficient, and could be maintained at an expense of about 100*l.* per annum. The original expense of the building would be about 300*l.* or 400*l.*

and Grounds.

The dispensary is a slight low brick building, two stories high, standing on an area of about about 50 feet square. It contains two parlours, four bedrooms, a dispensary-shop, kitchen, stable, &c. The shop measures about 18 feet each way. There is no furniture belonging to the institution. The building is in a good state of repair and the situation is healthy and convenient, well supplied with good water and proper sewers.

There are no baths belonging to the dispensary, nor is there a waiting-room for the patients. A garden containing about a rood of ground is attached to the building.

The proprietor has granted a lease of the ground on which the dispensary stands to the institution at a rent of 1s. per annum, so long as it is used as a dispensary. The gentlemen present think the building should belong to the governors of the dispensary, or if any change took place, to the governors of the county hospital. This is, if not the oldest, at least, one of the oldest dispensaries in Ireland, it was founded in 1806, under the Act of 1805, by the late Lord Oriel, and the present possessor of the title has for many years paid unceasing attention to its concerns.

The sole medical officer of the institution is 25 years of age; he studied in Dublin, afterwards in London; of the College of Surgeons, of which latter place he is a member.

He resides constantly at the institution, and was appointed on the 12th May 1833, by the governors of the dispensary; before that period he was a student of medicine in London; he holds no other appointment. He practises as a surgeon and accoucheur, being licensed by the Lying-in hospital, Dublin. In case of illness or absence, he is bound by a bye-law, to find such a substitute as shall be approved of by the governors.

The days of attendance at the dispensary are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, from 10 to 12 o'clock, or so long as there are patients to be attended.

In case of any neglect or irregularity of attendance on the part of the medical officer, all controlling power lies with the governors. The medical officer is always on the spot, and dispenses medicines himself; he has at present an apprentice.

Fifty pounds per annum is the salary paid by the governors to the medical officer from the general fund of the charity, without any allowance for a horse or other conveyance; he has, however, unfurnished lodgings at the institution.

The grand jury has a controlling power, to prevent the committee or subscribers from authorizing salaries or allowances higher than requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, or to prevent the county being otherwise unnecessarily taxed.

The character of the medical officer and of those concerned in the transaction is the sole guarantee against a combination to raise a sum of money, obtain a county grant, and then return the money subscribed to the several subscribers.

The medical officer is elected by the governors; but it has not been usual to give any notice in the papers or elsewhere. The only veto vested in the grand jury against the appointment of an improper individual is the power of refusing or diminishing the county grant. No limitation exists as to the age of the medical officers; on the occasion of the last vacancy there was but one candidate for the appointment.

The condition on which governors and subscribers vote at the election of medical officers are regulated by the Act. In case of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical officer, the patients can apply to a governor; the last medical officer was dismissed from the charge of the institution in consequence of the just and general complaints of the pauper patients, and no apprehension exists that evils may arise from the negligence of the medical officers, through a fear, on the part of the poor, of making complaint.

This neighbourhood is not found sufficient to induce a medical man to reside in it, independently of the dispensary emolument, nor is there any medical man living in the district qualified to be elected to the institution. There are no regulations with regard to age or resignation, or any retiring allowances. One instance has occurred of a medical officer having died at the institution.

The dispensary shop is very neatly and properly kept. The medicines appear in sufficient quantity and of good quality, with a supply of the more delicate and expensive varieties.

The medical officer contracts with the governors to supply medicines to the dispensary patients for 30*l.* per annum, the governors determining where they shall be purchased; at present they are supplied by Messrs. Leslie, of Dublin.

The medical officer prepares and dispenses the medicines, and as he lives at the institution they are always under his own care; he is obliged, by a bye-law, to keep an open shop, and those medicines for sale, private practice and dispensary use are all kept in the same room. The institution possesses no surgical instruments; but the medical attendant has a very ample and a very expensive assortment, his private property, including trusses, cupping apparatus, stomach pump, &c. Leeches are not provided for the pauper patients. The medical officer is bound to furnish vaccine matter gratis to all, whether recommended or not, and is forbidden by the governors to inoculate.

A register of the patients is kept by the medical officer, who enters therein the diseases and terminations as they occur; but it is not usual to lodge a copy of it with the grand jury. No one is ever refused advice and medicine. Thirty patients were on the books at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners.

There has not been any capital operation performed within the last three years. In the last 18 months there have been four cases of midwifery attended from the institution.

According to a bye-law of this institution, every pauper must have a recommendation; but it is usual to give advice and medicine at once, in urgent cases, though the patient should not have an order, as he is always able to procure one. Servants of subscribers are attended gratis; but none of the subscribers themselves, or any other person who is thought capable of paying for it.

Collon
Dispensary.

The patients relieved by this dispensary are solely extern, and all who can attend are seen at the institution ; but such as cannot leave their homes are visited by the medical officer at any place within the limits of the district for which the dispensary is established, as often as the case requires, and in the night, if requisite.

The institution furnishes no splints or bandages ; but every other assistance, in cases of accident, is immediately given. No one but the resident medical man can have prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are attended under certain bye-law regulations, which require that 10s. should be paid to the medical man. The midwives in the village are tolerably skilful, and no cases in which the mother or child have been injured have come under the notice of the dispensary surgeon.

As far as the order-book affords information, it appeared to the Assistant Commissioners that proper medicines are furnished to the pauper patients.

Vaccination, as before stated, is performed at the institution gratis, and has generally proved efficacious ; but small-pox has been frequent, and the confidence of the public in vaccination is diminishing.

Nourishment.

No wine or other extras of any description are given to the patients by the institution, nor does there exist any charity in this neighbourhood on which an order could be given to the sick poor for food, clothing or fuel.

General Management.

The general management is vested in the governors, and the medical man is not one of their number. The attention of the governors of this institution to its affairs has been constant ; three constitute a quorum, and they meet every quarter. All governors are entitled to vote, but not by proxy. Minutes of their proceedings at their meetings are kept. There is no committee or governor who visits the patients officially.

Officers not medical.

The agent of a neighbouring principal proprietor collects the subscriptions gratis. The treasurer of the county infirmary is also the permanent treasurer of this institution, for which he acts without salary. There are no printed bye-laws for regulating the appointment of these officers. The election is by open vote, a mode of proceeding which answers very well.

The present medical officer to the institution is a Protestant.

At the last election there was an accession of subscribers. There is no danger of improper appointments taking place, nor in this instance any want of a veto being vested in a central board to prevent such.

Rules.

The grand jury take no part in the election.

It does not appear that any existing regulations restrict the utility of this dispensary, and no alterations were suggested to the Assistant Commissioners.

Reports.

No reports are printed. It was considered that it might be well to form a board of health, which might conveniently meet at this institution. The neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, in case it should be intended to extend the relief afforded by dispensaries.

Funds and Accounts.
Receipts.

The amount of subscriptions, according to a list furnished to the Assistant Commissioners, is 57*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* The only other source of income is the county grant. The number of subscribers is 18 ; the largest subscription is 36*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, the smallest 10*s.* 6*d.*, but the subscriber of the latter sum cannot vote. The existence of this dispensary depends solely on the bounty of a principal landed proprietor, whose care is unremitting. Subscriptions are not accompanied with any stipulation that the subscriber or any part of his family are to receive medicine or advice gratuitously.

Collection.
Custody.

The present treasurer of this charity, who is also treasurer to the county hospital, and secretary to the grand jury, takes charge of the funds.

Expenditure.
Accounts.

The accounts are examined and audited by the governors once a year, and paid by the treasurer, and then sent to the grand jury.

Louth Dispensary.

THE population of the Louth dispensary district is estimated at about 9,000 souls; the extent is about nine miles east and west, and six and a half north and south, and contains about 20,000 acres. There is no dispensary within six miles; the district is not thought too large, and the nearest dispensaries are well placed as respects population. It would be very desirable to have attached to the dispensary a house, containing a few beds for fevers and accidents among the paupers.

Population and
Extent of Country.

There are no buildings, or any sort of property belonging to this dispensary. The contract with the medical officer is, that he shall attend all the patients the subscribers recommend, and provide all necessary medicines, for which he is to be paid 80 l. per annum.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The sole medical attendant is an apothecary of the Dublin College; 36 years of age; he was appointed to the institution at its foundation in 1825, and holds no other official appointment. He does not act as surgeon or accoucheur, but merely as physician and apothecary. The patients attend at the dispensary three times a week, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, from 10 to 12, when the medical attendant sees all who bring subscribers' tickets, but not otherwise; he attends on the poor patients at their own houses, day or night, when required. In case of any neglect or irregularity on his part, the people are well aware that they can complain to the subscribers for redress. The medical attendant dispenses all the medicines himself.

Medical Officers.

The sole medical officer, as before stated, receives 80 l. a year for medicine and attendance on the sick poor.

Payment.

When the present medical officer came to reside in Louth, he was asked on what terms he would attend the poor, and the agreement before-mentioned was then entered into. There are consequently no printed bye-laws regulating the election of a medical attendant. This neighbourhood is probably not sufficient to maintain a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument, for there is not one resident in the district eligible to the appointment.

Election.

The medical attendant has an apothecary's shop, which is well supplied, and neatly kept. The medicines appeared to be of good quality, and in abundance, including a supply of the more delicate and expensive varieties. The average annual expense of medicines for the use of the institution appears to be about 20 l. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the dispensary. Leeches are given in cases of absolute necessity, but at the medical attendant's own expense. He vaccinates all who apply; but never inoculates.

Pharmacy.

There is a register kept of all cases attended at the dispensary, distinguishing those visited at their own homes. A copy of it is lodged with the grand jury. It appeared by the return for the year, from 1st July 1832 to 30th June 1833 inclusive, that the number of patients continued on the book from the previous year, was

No case has occurred of a poor patient failing to get a ticket, and consequently being refused advice at this dispensary. At the period of this examination, there were about 100 patients under attendance. The medical officer does not attend midwifery cases.

All pauper patients, who can obtain a subscriber's ticket, have advice, attendance and medicine; but subscribers' servants are not attended.

Who entitled to
Relief.

There are no subscribers among the poorer classes. It has never occurred here that a contract has been made with individuals for the purpose of swelling the subscription list, and thus obtaining large grants from the county. The poor can have no difficulty in obtaining tickets of recommendation, each subscriber being unlimited in the number he may issue. In case of harsh treatment towards the patients, or neglect on the part of the medical officer, or in case of a poor person being refused a ticket of recommendation, no appeal can be made to the grand jury.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, or, at the discretion of the medical attendant, visited at their homes, any where in the district, and at any time of the day or night; but, owing to the nature of the contract with the medical attendant, the institution possesses in itself no means, such as splints, bandages or the like for rendering immediate assistance, in cases of fractures or other accidents; and, from the same cause, the prescriptions of authorized practitioners are not made up at the dispensary. In lying-in cases, the poor are generally attended by midwives, some of whom are considered skilful.

Vaccination is found very efficacious, and the medical attendant stated that, for the last twelve years, he had not known a case in the village of small-pox after vaccination. He thinks, however, that not above one-third of the population have confidence in the operation.

No extras, such as wine, &c. are given to the sick from the funds of this institution, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood on which an order could be given for food, fuel or clothing, &c. for the sick poor.

There is a meeting of the subscribers once a year to inspect the accounts, and send them to the grand jury. The subscribers are but few in number, and their attendance not more frequent than once a year.

The secretary to the grand jury is treasurer to this institution. There are no regulations excluding persons of any particular religious belief from becoming officers. The present medical attendant is a Protestant.

There is a general report made out annually, but never printed. This district does not contain many persons able to assist in a more minute examination of the wants of the poor.

If two subscribers to this charity of 9*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* each should withdraw from it, the funds would be so much diminished as materially to affect the usefulness of the institution; but this is not likely to occur.

The funds are generally collected by the medical attendant, and by him handed to the treasurer.

The accounts are audited and examined by the committee, and on their order paid by the treasurer.

Persons who attended the Examination.Termonfeckin
Dispensary.

The Medical Attendant was the only person who met the Commissioners at the dispensary.—The Rev. Mr. KERR, rector of the parish, and Mr. ALFORD were called upon in Termonfeckin.—Mr. MARKEY and Mr. CHESTER were seen in Drogheda.

THE Assistant Commissioners could not learn what was the population* of the district for which this dispensary was established. Its extent is about seven miles east and west, and six north and south. The nearest medical establishments are the Drogheda Infirmary and Dispensary, and the Dispensaries of Collon and Dunleer. There is no other medical establishment in the Termonfeckin district, which is not too large for one resident medical officer. No sick pauper residing in the district is ever refused assistance. It was the unanimous opinion of the gentlemen questioned, that a few beds for fevers and accidents would be highly beneficial.

Mr. Chester and Mr. Parkey (subscribers to the dispensary) feared that the prejudice of the poor against hospitals was so great, that they would not go into them. This was the case when cholera prevailed in the district.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary building is of stone, and consists of one room only, with a very small window, an earthen floor, no ceiling, and a slated roof. It contains a fire-place, and is altogether in a good state of repair. It is supplied with good water, but the situation is low and damp. The building is hired from year to year, at a rent of 4*l.* per annum. It would be much better if the dispensary building were the property of the charity.

Medical Officers.

The sole medical officer of the institution is about forty years of age. He graduated in medicine at Edinburgh, and lives at Drogheda. He was elected to this institution in 1831, by the subscribers, and has no other appointment: he acts as physician, surgeon and accoucheur. He has never yet been absent, but understands that in case he should be, he must immediately inform the governors. He is allowed private practice; was educated for midwifery. Attends at the dispensary twice a week, on Tuesdays and Fridays, from twelve to two o'clock, or as long as there are patients to be attended to.

The pauper patients are perfectly aware that they can complain to a subscriber in case of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical officer.

The Rev. Mr. Kerr stated, that though the medical officer resided in Drogheda, he was very regular in his attendance at the dispensary, and of great service to the poor.

The Rev. Mr. Kerr had been a subscriber, but the state of his income, which arises from tithe, was such as to oblige him to withdraw his subscription for the present, but he hoped to be able to renew it.

There is no pupil or student resident at the institution, and the medical attendant dispenses the medicine himself.

Payment.

There are no printed bye-laws on the subject of the payment of the medical officer, who receives 52*l.* 10*s.* per annum, from a fund in the hands of the treasurer, formed by subscriptions and a county grant.

The

* The Rev. Mr. Kerr stated that the district contains but 160 Protestants.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers, who would probably advertise on the next vacancy. The present medical officer was well known, and testimonials of his qualifications were, therefore, not required: there were two candidates at the last election, the unsuccessful candidate was a Protestant; each subscriber of a guinea has a vote. The neighbourhood is not sufficient to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary, and there is not one residing in it.

The medicines are kept in a neatly arranged chest, and appear sufficient in quantity, and of good quality.

The medical attendant buys the medicine of Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin, and sends their bills to the governors, who give him the money to pay them. The annual expense averages from 10*l.* to 12*l.* The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant, who locks the chest, and keeps the key himself. The medicines used in private practice are not kept in the same place. Leeches are not supplied by the institution. There is no law relative to vaccination, but the medical attendant gives vaccine matter to all applicants gratis; he never did, and never would inoculate.

A register of the cases, as they occur, is kept by the medical attendant, and shown to the governors; about 40 patients were on the books at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners. About six midwifery cases are attended annually from the institution.

The medical attendant never refuses advice and medicine to any person applying, but all ought to have recommendations.

Patients are visited at their own homes as often as required. No one but the medical attendant is authorized to send prescriptions to be made up at the dispensary. Difficult cases of lying-in are attended. Vaccination is performed gratis at the dispensary, and is generally efficacious; small-pox has not been frequent in the village; there is one case there now, and that modified.

No extras are given from the funds of this institution, nor is there any charity in this district on which to give an order for food or clothing, &c.

A committee of five governors meet twice a year, and are regular in their attendance. They transact all the business of the institution; the medical officer is not a governor, nor is there any one ex officio in the principal direction. All governors can vote, but ladies only by proxy. Minutes of the proceedings are kept.

The treasurer is the only officer not medical, and the subscriptions are paid into his hands at the general meeting; there are no printed bye-laws. The mode of voting for officers is open. The present medical officer is a Roman Catholic.

There are no reports of the affairs of this charity printed. A board of health was formed among the gentry during prevalence of cholera, and it is thought that this neighbourhood would afford a sufficient number of persons qualified to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, in case it should be determined to extend the relief afforded by dispensaries.

The subscriptions in 1831 amounted to 158*l.* but they now amount to 21*l.* only, the lowest subscription is 1*l.* 1*s.* The medical attendant stated, that the reason the original subscription was so large, was, that at first the owners of the land, who are all Protestants, subscribed, but have since withdrawn. It is probable, that if one or two subscribers were to withdraw, the charity would cease to exist. The subscriptions are unaccompanied by any stipulations, such as, that the subscribers, or any part of their families, should receive medicine or medical advice gratis.

The funds are in the hands of the treasurer, who gives no security. The funds consist of the original 158*l.* subscribed and county grant, and the subscriptions and county grant since received; but the annual expense being greater than the income, in a few years the money will be exhausted and the dispensary probably cease to exist.

The medical attendant informed the Assistant Commissioners that the annual expenditure of the institution averages about 65*l.* All bills are examined by the governors and paid by the treasurer.

The accounts are settled twice a year, and copies sent to the grand jury.

Persons who attended the Examination.

JOHN P. WINTER, esq. J. P., and the Medical Attendant.

This dispensary was established by a magistrate residing in this neighbourhood, and is intended for the sick poor of a district two square miles in extent. There are other dispensaries within a radius of three miles, the distance of the nearest being two and a half, at Rathmolion.

The dispensary consists of one room in a cottage, and its condition, in point of repair, is humble but clean. There is no garden attached. The house is occupied by the person of whom it is hired, at an annual rent of two guineas, which is paid by the treasurer.

The only medical officer connected with the institution is a licentiate of the College of Surgeons of Edinburgh; but not of the Company of Apothecaries. He is not provided with apartments at the dispensary house; he attends at the dispensary once a week, from 10 to 12 o'clock, at which time prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. The medical officer also attends at Summerhill dispensary, for which he receives an additional salary of 50*l.* a year, including house rent. His medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

The present medical attendant was elected by the subscribers. There was no other candidate. The election of a physician or a surgeon is not restricted to graduates of particular universities, or to licentiates or members of particular colleges. The person acting as apothecary must be a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin.

The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well educated practitioners to settle amongst them; hence there are not medical men in the neighbourhood qualified and disposed to give their services to the dispensary gratuitously.

The surgery is clean, and the bottles and shelves well kept. None of the persons who supply articles of medicine are members of committee. The druggist's bill was not produced, being in the hands of the treasurer, who was not present at the examination.

A register of diseases, with the names of the patients, appears to be kept; but none of the more important cases are recorded in detail. The number of sick on the books at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioner was 34; viz. 30 who came to the dispensary and four attended at their own houses. Amongst the above there was one case of fever. No cases of cholera or surgical cases, nor any instance of capital operations or lunatics.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. The medical officer is paid for his attendance when called in to the family of a subscriber. There have been no cases in which medical assistance has been refused to applicants from their being without subscribers' tickets. Each annual subscriber of one guinea may recommend patients to be visited at home, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a radius of two miles, no charge or allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officer receives no gratuity from charity patients directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously. It is not found to be a perfect security against small-pox. This disease has not been frequent during the last 17 years in this district. The confidence of the public in vaccination is strong, and there are numerous applications.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick poor from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation.

Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin, but are not readily received. There is no lunatic asylum in this county. Four lunatics were in the gaol of Trim a fortnight ago, previous to the holding this examination, and one had recently died there. The Richmond lunatic asylum has been considered that of the county Meath for some three or four years, under the orders of the Lord Lieutenant. The expenses are paid by the grand jury.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the committee, which consists of the original founder of the institution, the treasurer and the medical officer, who remain permanently in office.

The committee meets once a year. It is generally attended by one or two of that body. The surgeon is a member of the committee. There are no ex officio directors or visitors.

The duties of treasurer and collector are performed by the same gentleman, who was appointed to the office by the founder of the establishment; he gives no security, remains permanently in office and acts gratuitously. The qualifications necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of a guinea. Religious belief does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.

There are no servants of the charity.

There are no written rules or bye-laws for the guidance of this dispensary. The privileges of five shilling subscribers are, therefore, not defined. They all, however, understand that they are entitled to advice and medicine. No alterations in the management of this institution are suggested by the committee or by the medical officer.

The reports of the progress of the charity are never printed.

The number of subscribers for the year was nine; in the next year they amounted to 42, in consequence of part of the subscribers of the Summerhill having given their names to this dispensary. The lowest rate of annual subscription accepted is 5s.; the highest received is ten guineas, paid by the founder and patron. There are no medical charities in this barony, parish or township which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer.

Persons who attended the Examination.

The Treasurer, two of the Committee, the Physician and the Apothecary.

Athboy and Balliver
Dispensaries.

THESE charities were established by the Earl of Darnley, and were intended for the sick poor of a district twelve miles by fourteen in extent. Balliver Dispensary is five and a half miles from Athboy, within four miles of which there is another dispensary in the county Westmeath, but none within a radius of three miles.

Extent of Country.

The Athboy house consists of a waiting-room and surgery, the state of which, in point of repair, cleanliness, &c. is particularly well arranged and orderly. There is no garden. The house is not occupied. It is hired at an annual rent of 8 l., which is paid by the treasurer.

Building.

The chief medical officer is a graduate of the university, and a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons of London, about fifty years of age, who has been attached to the dispensary for the last fifteen years. The accoucheur and apothecary is a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. Neither of these gentlemen are provided with apartments at either of the dispensary houses, nor is either a member of the committee. The chief medical officer also attends the Balliver Dispensary, for which he receives an additional salary of 27 l. 13 s. 11 d. per annum. He attends at Athboy twice a week, from ten to two o'clock. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. The apothecary attends every day, and is also apothecary and accoucheur to the Balliver Dispensary, for which he is paid 18 l. 9 s. 3 d. per annum. Prescriptions are daily dispensed to the poor. There is no visiting apothecary.

Medical Officers.

The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and has remained in office since 1819. Both the physician and the apothecary were elected by the subscribers. In the election of physician or surgeon, there is no restriction as to graduates of particular universities, but the apothecary must be a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. There was but one candidate for the last vacancy of physician, which occurred in 1819, and but one for that of apothecary, which took place at the same time. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them. Hence there are no medical men within seven miles, who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

Election.

The surgery is neat and orderly, and the bottles and drawers are nicely kept. The medicines of these establishments are in ample quantity, of the best quality and most expensive kind, and are particularly well kept. None of the persons who supply any of the articles of medicine, &c. are members of the committee. The amount of the druggist's bill, from 1st January to 31st December 1833, was 51 l. 8 s. 5 d.

Pharmacy.

A register of diseases, but without their terminations, appears to be most accurately kept, and some of the more important cases are instructively recorded in detail. The termination of dispensary cases can very seldom be satisfactorily ascertained, particularly in rural districts. The number of sick on the books at the period of this examination was - 33

Of the above there was one fever case, one slight cholera and one convalescent lunatic.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. Medical assistance was not refused to any applicant during this year on account of the want of governors' recommendations. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at their own dwellings, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Who entitled to relief.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a radius of seven miles, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officers are paid for their attendance, when called in to the family of a subscriber. They receive no gratuity from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox. This disease has not been frequent, during the last fifteen years, in Athboy, although inoculation appears to be frequently performed by itinerant quacks. One of these quacks is stated by the apothecary to be in the habit of inoculating children furtively, for the purpose

County Meath.	Lunatics are provided for with difficulty.

Officers not medical.	The qualifications necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the payment of a guinea annually. Religious belief does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.
Attendants.	There is one male servant, who is paid three guineas a year; he is hired by the committee, and may be discharged by them upon the medical officer's complaint.
Rules.	This institution seems to be so well managed, that no alteration appears to be necessary in the rules by which its concerns are governed.
Reports.	Reports of the progress of the charity are drawn up and printed every year.
Funds and Accounts.	The income for the year ending 31st December 1833, including both dispensaries, was as follows:—

There are general meetings of the governors once every year, which are usually attended by a large portion of their number; and minutes of their proceedings are regularly registered in a book kept for that purpose, which was exhibited to the Assistant Commissioners, and was found to contain the proceedings of 15 years, ever since the foundation of the charity.
Medical Instruction.	There is an articulated pupil of the apothecary's admitted to attend the practice at the dispensary. Practitioners established in the neighbourhood are permitted to witness capital operations, and any remarkable cases that may occur.

Extent of Country.	This charity was established in 1822, by the neighbouring gentry, and was intended for the sick poor of a district twelve miles by four in extent; there is another dispensary at Kinnegad, three miles distant.
Building.	The dispensary consists of one wretched room, about eight feet square, in a labourer's cottage, the state of which, in point of repair, cleanliness, &c., is wretched in the extreme; there is no garden; the house is not occupied; it is hired of Callaghan, the tenant of the cottage, at the annual rent of 2 l. , which is paid by the treasurer and secretary.

The

The only medical officer connected with this establishment is a licentiate of the College of Surgeons, Dublin; he is provided with a house at Ballyboggan, about two miles distant, which was built by the Marquis of Lansdowne; it consists of two stories, and appeared to be very comfortable; his lordship vested it in the names of three trustees, for the benefit of this charity, and as a residence for the medical officer for the time being; the rent charged is ten guineas, which is given by his lordship as his subscription to the dispensary.

The medical attendant's salary is 63*l.* per annum, with an additional sum of from 10*l.* to 25*l.* for the Kinnegad Dispensary, where he attends on Saturdays; at Clonard he attends on Mondays, at twelve o'clock, when prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

The present medical attendant was elected by the subscribers. When a medical officer resigns he cannot influence the election of his successor. The election of physician is not restricted to graduates of particular universities, nor that of surgeon to licentiates or members of the College of Surgeons, but the apothecary must be of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. The number of candidates for the last vacancy of surgeon, which occurred in 1832, was six, and for that which occurred in 1833 there was but one. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; hence there are no medical men in the neighbourhood, within four miles of the dispensary, who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

The surgery consists of one room, so damp and inconvenient, that the medical attendant has been compelled to keep his principal stock of medicines at his own house at Ballyboggan; on inspecting a list, these were found to be in ample quantities and of the best descriptions, and well kept. The stock was not itself seen by the Assistant Commissioners, owing to the medical attendant not having received notice of his coming, and being therefore absent on the occasion of his visit. None of the persons supplying articles of medicine, &c. are members of the committee. The amount of the druggist's bill from June 1833 to June 1834 was 19*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*

A register of diseases, with their determinations, appears to be very carefully kept; but none of the cases are recorded in detail. The number of sick on the books was 50, of which six were surgical cases. There were two lunatic paupers in this parish, but no asylum provided in the county.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. Medical assistance has not been refused to any applicant from want of recommendations, during this year. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at their own houses, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings within a radius of seven miles, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officer is paid for his attendance when called in to the family of a subscriber. He receives no gratuity from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox. This disease has not been frequent during the last year in the district. The confidence of the public in vaccination is very strong.

Articles of diet are never given to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish, for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation.

Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin, but not always received there.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the governors, through a managing committee, which consists of six, who are elected annually by the subscribers, and remain in office one year. There are no committee meetings, unless they are required. There is only one ex officio visitor, namely, the treasurer, who acts as collector. He was appointed by the subscribers, gives no security, and is not paid for his services. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of a guinea.

The following alteration in the general management of the institution was recommended by the medical officer, viz. that a dispensary consisting of a pharmacy and waiting room, &c. suitable to the wants of the neighbourhood of Clonard, should be erected.

Reports of the progress of the charity are usually drawn up and printed every year. There were more however last year. There are no standing rules, nor bye-laws.

The income of the year ending 31st May 1834 was as follows:

	£.	s.	d.
Subscriptions - - - - -	50	15	6
Presentment - - - - -	50	15	6
	£. 101	11	-

The number of subscribers for the year was not stated. The lowest rate of annual subscription accepted is half a guinea. There are no medical charities in this barony which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer.

Crossakeale
Dispensary.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Rev. Mr. OSBORNE, and the Medical Attendant.

Building.

THIS charity was established by the proprietor, and is intended to afford relief to the sick poor of a district four square miles in extent. There is another dispensary at Clonmellan, in the county of Westmeath, within a distance of three miles.

The house consists of two rooms in a cottage, occupied by four orphans, and is hired of them at an annual rent of five pounds. There is no garden. The state of the house, in point of repair, cleanliness, &c. is tolerably good.

Medical Officer.

The only medical officer connected with this establishment is a Licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries Dublin, about 32 years of age, who has been attached to the dispensary 12 years. He is not provided with apartments at the dispensary house. He also attends, as apothecary, the Clonmellan dispensary, at an additional salary of 30*l.* per annum. He attends the Crossakeale dispensary twice a week from 11 to 4 o'clock, at which time medical prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Election.

The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and remains in office from year to year. The apothecary was also elected by the subscribers. The apothecary must belong to the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. There were four candidates for the last vacancy of medical attendant, which occurred in 1822. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well educated practitioners to settle amongst them. Hence there are no medical men in the neighbourhood who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

Pharmacy.

The surgery and the bottles and drawers appeared to be in good order, and well kept. The amount of the druggist's bill, from 7th February to the 29th May 1834, was 10*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*

Patients' Registration.

A register of diseases, but without the termination of each case, is kept, but none are recorded in detail. The number of sick on the books was said to be seventy-nine; viz. sixty-eight who attend at the dispensary, and eleven attended at their own houses. There were no fever, cholera nor surgical cases, nor were there any capital operations. There was one lunatic. The general return of diseases, &c. cannot be made out from the dispensary books, as at present kept.

Who entitled to
Relief.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. Medical assistance has not been refused to any applicant during this year, on account of not having recommendations. Each annual subscriber of five shillings may recommend patients to be visited at home, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Extern Patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a radius of five miles, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officer is not paid for his attendance when called in to the family of a five shilling subscriber. He receives no gratuity from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox. This disease has been very frequent during the last year in this district. There were sixty cases, of which eight were fatal. The confidence of the public in vaccination is not strong, nor is it increasing.

Nourishment.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick poor from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation.

Intern Patients.
ment.

Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin.
The general management of the establishment is solely under the direction of the proprietor.

There

There are no committee meetings. The only ex officio director or visitor is the curate, who was present at this examination.

The proprietor is also collector and treasurer, having been appointed by the subscribers. He does not give any security, but remains permanently in office acting gratuitously. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of a guinea. Religious belief does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.

There are no servants of the charity.

There are no reports of the progress of the charity, nor are there any standing rules or bye-laws.

The medical attendant states, that the treasurer being absent, no money documents can be produced, nor any further information given as to the finances of the institution, he having all the books in his possession. The number of subscribers for the year was not known to the medical attendant. There are no medical charities in this barony, which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer, by whom all disbursements are made, to the order of the medical attendant.

The accounts are audited twice a year, and a report submitted to the grand jury, and governors in meeting called for that purpose at the vestry.

There are meetings of the governors twice every year, which are generally attended by one half of the entire body, and the minutes of their proceedings are said to be registered in a book kept for that purpose, but were not produced, being, as was stated, in the possession of the treasurer.

There is no medical instruction afforded at this institution.

Dispensary.

This charity was established in the year 1817, and was intended for the sick poor of a district two square miles in extent. There are no other dispensaries within a radius of three miles, the nearest being that at Ardee, five miles distant.

The dispensary house consists of two rooms, and in point of repair, cleanliness, &c. is very comfortable. It has no garden, nor is the house occupied as a dwelling. The medical attendant thinks that a rent of 6*l.* per annum is charged.

The only medical officer connected with the institution was a graduate of the university, and member of the College of Surgeons of Glasgow. He acts as physician, surgeon and accoucheur. His age is about fifty-seven, and for the last seventeen years he has been attached to this dispensary. There are no apartments provided for him at the dispensary-house. He holds also the appointment of physician to the Kingscourt Dispensary, at an additional salary of 70*l.* per annum. The periods of his attendance at the Drumcondra Dispensary are twice a week from eleven to two o'clock, when prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. The medical duties are never permanently performed by proxies, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Both the treasurer and the physician were appointed by the proprietor of the institution. In the election of either physician or surgeon, there is no restriction as to particular universities or colleges. Individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district are not sufficient in number to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them. Hence, there are no medical men in the neighbourhood who are qualified and willing to give their services to this charity gratuitously.

The surgery is neat and orderly, and the bottles and drawers well kept. The druggist's bill in December last amounted to about 16*l.*

A register of diseases, with their termination, is said to be kept, but no cases are recorded in detail. The register-book was with the treasurer, who resides in Dundalk, and was not present at the examination. The number of sick now on the books is about 24; viz.—

Of the above, there was one fever and four surgical cases; cholera has never appeared in this village; during the year 30 acute cases were treated, of which two were typhus; there were 700 chronic cases.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity. The admission of patients is left to the discretion of the medical attendant, when an admission ticket from a subscriber is not presented.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a distance of two miles, in any direction, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox; this disease has not been frequent during the last

	THESE charities were established in the year 1831, by the neighbouring landholders, and intended for the poor of a district extending seven miles by five. The nearest dispensary is at Bellewstown, two miles distant.
Extent of Country.	The dispensary house, which is occupied by the medical attendant, is two stories high, containing six rooms, with a front court, and a garden, half a rood in extent : the state of the house, with regard to repair, cleanliness, &c., is good, as far as regards the room in which the medicines are disposed. There is no store of medicines at the Black Lion branch, such as are required being carried from the chief establishment at Duleek. The Duleek house is hired at an annual rent of 20 l. , paid out of the funds of the charity.
Building.	The only medical officer connected with the institution is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, and member of the College of Surgeons London; he is 40 years of age, and for the last three has been attached to the dispensary, where he is provided with apartments; he is also physician to the Black Lion branch; he attends at Duleek twice a week, from ten to one o'clock, and at Black Lion once a week, when prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.
Medical Officer.	The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and remains in office from year to year: no security is given by him, nor is he a paid officer. The physician was also elected by the subscribers. When a medical officer resigns, he cannot influence the election of his successor in an election, whether it be for physician or surgeon; there is no restriction as to particular universities or colleges, &c.; when the last vacancy of physician occurred, which was in 1831, there were at least ten candidates. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is said not to be sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; hence there are no medical men in the neighbourhood who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.
Election.	The surgery is in good order, and the bottles and drawers are well kept. The medicines for the charity are supplied by contract by the medical attendant, who is permitted to sell medicines for his own profit; the stock on hand appears respectable. Duleek and Dispensaries.

The medical attendant stated, that 50 patients were then under treatment; there was one fever case.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. Medical assistance was not refused to any applicant during this year for want of a governor's letter of recommendation; each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at home, besides an unlimited number of patients to attend at the dispensary.

Who entitled to
Relief.

Such patients as are not able to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a radius of three miles and half;* no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visit. The medical officers are paid for their attendance when called into the family of a subscriber; they receive no fee from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox, which disease has not been frequent during the last three years in Duleek; the confidence of the public in vaccination is increasing.

Extern Patients.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick poor from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish, for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation.

Nourishment.

The present medical attendant was elected by the subscribers, and remains in office from year to year. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of a guinea.

Officers.

The general management of this establishment is under the direction of the governors. A managing committee is annually elected by the subscribers, but this committee seldom or never meets. The medical attendant, who is not himself a member, on being questioned on the subject of the committee, stated that no member resided in Duleek at the time.

The number of subscribers is not stated, but at the late election of the medical attendant, there was an accession of subscriptions of at least 150*l*. The lowest rate of annual subscription is a guinea. In some cases two subscriptions of 10*s*. are paid under one name. There are no medical charities in this barony, which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer.

DISPENSARIES.	The house consists of five rooms on one floor, with a paddock and a garden half an acre in extent. The state of the house as to repair, cleanliness, &c. is rather improved since the last visit. It is occupied by the medical officer's assistant, who is a Licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. He sees the dispensary patients occasionally, and retails the medicines on the medical officer's account. He is paid by the medical officer, as he states, 36 l. per annum.

Dunboyne Dispensary.	The only medical officer is a graduate of the university of Dublin, a licensed accoucheur from the lying-in hospital, and a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of the same city. He is provided with apartments in the dispensary house, which are occupied by his assistant. He attends three times a week, from 12 to 2 o'clock, and is not now physician to any other dispensary. Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays are the days of his attendance. He states that he has ceased to belong to the Rathcoole dispensary since August 1833. Prescriptions are dispensed to the poor every day, for payment or otherwise, by the medical officer's assistant.
Medical Officer.	The Assistant Commissioner observes, " This is dispensary day and hour, yet three patients only have applied from twelve to half-past two o'clock (Wednesday). The names of those who are said to have attended on Monday last, and other dispensary days, are entered on loose slips of paper, affording no information that can be relied on. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy whether paid or unpaid. The assistant visits all the ordinary cases. He states that he is paid by the medical officer, whose private assistant he is, and although he attends seven days in the week, he does not belong to the dispensary. There is no visiting apothecary.
Election.	The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and his tenure of office is permanent. The medical officer was also appointed by the subscribers, on the recommendation of an apothecary at Leixlip. The election, whether it be for physician or surgeon, is not, it is said, restricted to graduates of particular universities, or to the licentiates or members of particular colleges. With respect to apothecaries, it is said there is some restriction, but that there are no bye-laws on that subject. When the last vacancy for physician occurred, which was in 1817, there were no candidates. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them, yet there are no medical men stated to be residing within five miles of the dispensary, who are qualified and disposed to give their services to the charity gratuitously.
Pharmacy.	On the second visit of the Assistant Commissioner, they found the surgery much improved since their first inspection, and the bottles and drawers appeared to be much better kept. Neither the landlord of the dispensary house, nor any of the persons who supply any of the articles, &c. are members of the committee. The medical officer stated that he could not produce the druggist's bill.
Patients' Registration.	A register of diseases, with the terminations of the several cases, appears to be very irregularly kept, and no cases are recorded in detail. The number of sick on the books was 14 under treatment.

Who entitled to Relief.	Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. There was not any case of an applicant being refused medical assistance from want of a governor's letter during this year. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at their own houses, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.
Extern Patients.	Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings within a distance of six miles from the institution, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. A horse is sometimes sent by the patient.
	The medical officers are paid for their attendance, when called in to the family of a subscriber, but they receive no gratuity from charity patients directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox, which disease has been frequent during the last year. There were twenty cases, of which two were fatal. The confidence of the public in vaccination is increasing.
Nourishment.	Articles are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order of recommendation. Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin, and are always received.
General Management.	The general management of this institution is under the sole direction of the medical officer, who states that when first appointed to the charity, he was in every way unqualified as to diplomas; that he contracted to supply the medicines at the lowest prices, which have since continued to be supplied on the same principle; viz. that of contract. The medical officer was apprentice to the apothecary at Leixlip, when appointed to this charity, but obtained his licence as apothecary within the first year.
Managing Committee.	There are no committee meetings, nor are there any ex officio directors or visitors.
Officers not medical.	The collector was appointed by the medical officer; he is a tithe proctor; gives no security; has remained in office three or four years, and is paid at the rate of five pounds per per annum. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers, is the payment of a guinea annually.

There are no servants employed at the dispensary.
The medical officer recommends no alterations in the present system of the Dunboyne Dispensary.

Reports of the progress of the charity are drawn up, but there are none printed, except such as are required by the grand jury. There are no standing rules or bye-laws.

There was no ledger or day-book in the dispensary from which a correct annual account could be made.

The medical officer receives the whole of the subscriptions, as well as the county grant, for which he pays all the expenses of the establishment, never leaving a balance. He makes affidavit to the value of the medicines distributed to the sick poor. Few or none of the governors certify to the amount thus sworn to, and the treasurer makes affidavit that a certain sum has been lodged in his hands as subscriptions for the year. All disbursements are made by the treasurer to the order of the medical officer.

The accounts are audited once a year, and a report of the number of cases treated submitted to the governors in full meeting, called for that purpose. This charity was established in the year 1829, by the resident gentry, and was intended for the relief of the sick poor of a district seven square miles in extent. There are two other dispensaries within a radius of three miles from Julianstown, one of which is the Bellewstown branch, at the distance of two miles. This dispensary (Julianstown) is said to have been founded upon the proposition of the son of an apothecary, residing four miles off, at Drogheda ; he procured some names, five or six of whom for subscriptions of only 10s. per annum, upon which a presentment was applied for and obtained.

Building.

In a lodging-house, or rather cottage, there is for the purpose of the dispensary one very small room, eight feet by four, which is tolerably clean ; there is no garden, nor is the house occupied ; it is hired of a labourer, at an annual rent of 2 l., which is paid by the treasurer.

Medical Officer.

A member of the College of Surgeons of Glasgow, and of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin, is the only medical officer connected with this establishment ; he is 25 years of age, and has been four years attached to the dispensary ; he is not provided with apartments

His father keeps an apothecary's shop in Drogheda. His medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and remains in office from year to year; the surgeon was also elected by the subscribers; at the last vacancy for surgeon there was no candidate. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; hence there are no medical men in the neighbourhood who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

The surgery is tolerably neat, and the bottles and drawers are pretty well kept, but there was very little medicine; some articles were exhibited which had been brought in a basket from Drogheda on the morning of the examination, such as sulphate of quinine, &c. There was no inventory made out, although the letter of the Assistant Commissioner had been received eight days before. None of the persons who supply any of the articles of medicine, &c., are members of the committee; there was no druggist's bill produced for either dispensary, the medical attendant being himself the contractor for the supply of medicine, at the annual sum of 40*l.* for the Julianstown establishment, and for the supply of those poor who may present recommendations from governors, at his father's apothecary's shop in Drogheda.

A register of diseases appears to be kept, with the termination of cases, &c., but none are recorded in detail; the number of sick on the books when examined was five; viz.—

Of the above there was one case of mild indigenous cholera. No return of diseases at Julianstown had been made out.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers, except the subscribers of 10*s.* annually, who expect medicines and advice for their servants and tenants. No applicants were refused medical assistance for want of governors' letters of recommendation during this year. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox, which disease has not been frequent during the last four years in Julianstown: the confidence of the public in vaccination is strong.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin.

The general management of the establishment is essentially under the direction of the medical attendant, there being no managing committee. There are general committee meetings once every year, which are generally attended by one-fourth of that body.

The treasurer is also the collector, he was appointed by the subscribers, and gives no security; he remains in office from year to year, but receives no payment. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of one guinea; religious belief does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.

It is stated by the Assistant Commissioner that the dispensary establishment of both Julianstown and Bellewstown call loudly for amendment.

All disbursements are made by the treasurer to the order of the committee.
The accounts are audited once a year, and a report submitted to the governors in full meeting called for that purpose. There are also general meetings of the governors, but no time is stated. They are generally attended by about one-fourth of the body, and minutes of their proceedings, so far as relates to matters of accounts only, are regularly registered in a book kept for that purpose.

THIS charity was established in the year 1815, and was intended for the poor of a district three miles by three in extent. There are no other dispensaries within three miles, the nearest being four miles distant.

The house consists of one room and a closet, and its state in point of repair, cleanliness, &c. is orderly. There is no garden, nor is the house occupied. It is hired at an annual rent of 8*l.* 8*s.*, (in which is included fuel and attendance,) which is paid by the treasurer.

The medical attendant is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, and member of the College of Surgeons Dublin, is 50 years of age, and has been attached to the dispensary 19 years. This gentleman and the apothecary have the care of this establishment. Neither one or the other is provided with apartments at the dispensary house. The physician attends no other institution. The chief medical officer attends twice a week from 12 to 2 o'clock, when prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. The apothecary is a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin, about 40 years of age, and attached for the last 18 to the dispensary, where he attends twice a week from 12 to 2 o'clock. He also holds the appointment of apothecary to the fever hospital, and keeps an apothecary's shop. There is no visiting apothecary.

The treasurer was elected by a general meeting, and has remained in office one year. The physician and the apothecary were both elected by the subscribers. In an election, whether it be for physician or surgeon, there is no restriction as to particular universities or colleges. With respect to the apothecary, he must be a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. There were two candidates for the last vacancy of physician, which occurred in the year 1815; and for that of apothecary, in 1816, there were three candidates. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; hence there are no medical men in the neighbourhood who are qualified or inclined to give their services gratuitously.

The surgery is clean and in proper order, and the bottles and drawers are very well kept. None of the persons who supply any of the articles of medicine, &c., are members of the Committee. The amount of the druggist's bill from 1st May 1833 to 1st May 1834, was 26*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*

A register of diseases with their terminations cannot be kept, from the nature of dispensary practice. No cases are recorded in detail. The number of patients who came to the dispensary was omitted to be taken down. There was one person at this time attended at his own house. There were neither fever, cholera, nor surgical cases, nor were there any lunatics or capital operations.

Those who are able to purchase medicines, are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. Medical assistance was not refused to any applicant for not having a governor's letter during this year. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at home ten times, besides fifty daily patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a radius of three miles, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officers are paid for their attendance, when called in to the family of a subscriber. They receive no gratuity from charity patients directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox, which disease has not been frequent in Kells during the last ten years. The confidence of the public in vaccination is increasing.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel, or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. Lunatics are sent to Dublin, but on this subject there are great difficulties.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the governors, through a managing committee, which consists of seven, who are elected by the subscribers and remain permanently in office. The medical attendant is a member of the committee. There are committee meetings once every year, which are generally attended by one half of that

The accounts are audited once a year, and a report is submitted to the governors in full meeting called for that purpose. There are also general meetings of the governors once every year, or sometimes more frequently, but are not numerously attended. The minutes of their proceedings are regularly registered in a book kept for that purpose.

There is no medical instruction, except that of the apothecary's apprentices, who attend as pupils.

Dispensary.

Extent of Country.

THIS charity was established by the neighbouring gentry, and is intended for the sick poor, extending over a district of four square miles. There are no other dispensaries within a radius of three miles, the nearest, which is at Kingscourt, in the county Cavan, being three and a half miles distant.

Building.

The house consists of two rooms, and though small is, however, adequate to the wants of the institution. There is no garden. The house is not occupied, it is hired at an annual rent of two guineas, which is paid by the treasurer.

Medical Officer.

The physician, who is also surgeon and accoucheur, is the only medical attendant connected with the institution; he is a graduate of the University of Glasgow, and a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin, is 50 years of age, and has been seven years attached to this dispensary. He is not provided with apartments at the dispensary, nor is he a member of the committee. He attends twice a week, from 10 to 12 o'clock, at which time prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. He is not physician to any other charity, but keeps an apothecary's shop in Kingscourt, county Cavan. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Election.

The physician was elected by the subscribers. The treasurer is permanent. In the event of an election, whether it be for physician or for surgeon, there is no restriction as to particular universities or colleges, but the apothecary must be of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. When the last vacancy for physician occurred, which was in 1827, there was no candidate. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; there are none, therefore, in the neighbourhood who are qualified and willing to give their services gratuitously.

Pharmacy.

The surgery is very small, the bottles and drawers are tolerably well kept. A hamper of medicines was just arrived from Dublin at the period of this examination. It stood unopened in the surgery.

None of the persons who supply any of the articles of medicine, &c. are members of the committee. The amount of the druggist's bill, from July 1833 to 29th May 1834, was 7*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*

Patients' Registration.

A register of diseases, but without their terminations, appears to be carefully kept, but none of the more important cases are recorded in detail.

The

The number of sick on the books was about 10, viz.—

Patients who came to the dispensary	-	-	-	-	-	9
Attended at his own house	-	-	-	-	-	1

Of the above cases one was fever and one lunatic.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. Medical assistance has not been refused to any applicant for want of a governor's letter, during this year, except to persons living on the property of gentlemen who are not subscribers. To such persons assistance has been refused. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at home, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their dwellings, within a radius of four miles, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officer is paid for his attendance when called in to the family of a subscriber. He receives no gratuity from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox, which disease has not been frequent during the last seven years in this district. The confidence of the public in vaccination is strong.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the subscribers, through a managing committee, which consists of five, who are elected by the subscribers and are permanent.

There are committee meetings once every year, which are generally attended by one-fourth of the body of governors, and minutes of their proceedings are regularly registered in a book kept for that purpose, but only as to accounts.

There is a collector who is permanently in office, he gives no security, nor does he receive any payment for his services. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of a guinea. Religious belief does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.

There is no servant of the charity.

With respect to the general management of this institution no alterations are recommended, either by the committee or by the medical officers.

Reports of the progress of the charity are drawn up but not printed. There are no standing rules nor bye-laws. By the report for the year ending 30th June 1833, it appeared that the number of cases treated during the year amounted to

The apothecary attends the dispensary twice a week at 11 o'clock, when prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. He keeps an apothecary's shop in the town of Kells. There is no visiting apothecary.

The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and holds the office permanently. The apothecary was also elected by the subscribers. It is required, by the rules of the charity, that the apothecary must be a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. When the last vacancy for medical attendant occurred, which was in 1827, there were two candidates. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them, hence there are no medical men in the neighbourhood who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

The surgery is orderly, and the bottles and drawers are well kept. The medicines are not provided by contract with the medical officer. The amount of the druggist's bill, from July 1833 to 29th May 1834, was 33*l*. There are no surgical apparatus belonging to the dispensary.

Patients' Registration.

A register of diseases, without the termination of cases, appears to be correctly kept, but none are recorded in detail. By this register, it appears that, during the year ending 31st December 1833, there were attended 815 cases, of which six were in fever. The number of sick on the books, at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioner, was 33 :

Nourishment.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation.

General Management.

Lunatics are sent to Dublin, and on this subject there are great difficulties.

The general management is under the direction of the founder of the establishment, through a permanent managing committee, which consists of four.

There are committee meetings once every year, which are generally attended by half of that body. There are no directors or visitors ex officio.

The first promoter of this charity acts also as the collector and treasurer. He gives no security, and receives no payment for his services. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of a guinea.

Attendant.

There is a female servant to attend the dispensary, who is paid at the rate of three pounds per annum.

THIS dispensary was established by the neighbouring gentry, and is intended for the sick poor of a district, twelve miles by seven in extent. There are no other dispensaries within a radius of three miles, the nearest, which is at Crossakeale, in this county, being six miles distant. The physician was of opinion, that a few beds for the reception of serious surgical cases attached to his dispensary would be of great benefit to the sick poor of this district. A small fever hospital, to which severe cases might be early removed, would tend to prevent the spread of disease.

Extent of Country.

The house consists of three rooms, and its condition in point of repair, cleanliness, &c., is as comfortable and as orderly as can be required; it is not occupied by any resident, but is hired at an annual rent of 8*l.*, which is paid by the treasurer.

Building.

The only medical officer connected with the institution is a graduate of the University of Dublin, and a licentiate of the College of Surgeons and of the lying-in hospital there; he is not provided with apartments at the dispensary house; he attends at the dispensary twice a week, from eleven to three o'clock, at which time prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Medical Officer.

The person acting as apothecary must be of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. When the last vacancy for physician occurred, which was in 1831, there were ten candidates for the situation. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them, hence there are not medical men in the neighbourhood qualified and disposed to give their services to the dispensary gratuitously.

Election.

The surgery is neat and orderly, and the bottles and drawers are well kept; the medicines are in ample quantity, of the best quality and kind, and are carefully kept. The landlord of the dispensary house is a member of the committee. The amount of the druggist's bill from July 1832 to May 1834, was 25*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*

There are many relieved who are not in this return, owing to their not having brought tickets.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. The medical officer is paid for his attendance when called in to the family of a subscriber. There have been no cases of applicants having been refused medical assistance from their being without a subscriber's ticket this year. Each annual subscriber of one guinea may recommend patients to be visited at home, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a distance of six miles in any direction, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officer receives no gratuity from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox, which disease is said to have been frequent during the last two or three years in this district; the confidence of the public in vaccination is not strong, nor is it increasing.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity; there are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation; the physician is, however, authorized to give recommendations to his poor patients, addressed to the lady of the proprietors of Loughcrew House, from whom they receive nourishment fitting for their respective cases.

Lunatics are sent to Dublin, and are difficult to be provided for.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the treasurer; the directors and visitors ex officio, are the subscribers.

The collector was elected by the subscribers; he gives no security, but holds his office permanently, acting gratuitously. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the payment of one guinea per annum. There are no servants of the charity.

The following alterations in the general management of the institution are recommended by the committee and by the medical officers; annual printed reports, appealing to the neighbouring gentry, and a code of regulations, also printed and circulated, would be an improvement in the conducting of this charity, and are, indeed, almost indispensable to the good government and success of all similar institutions. No general reports of the progress of the charity are drawn up or printed; the latest contains the number and the nature of the cases in which patients having tickets were relieved. There are no standing rules or bye-laws.

The income of the year ending 31st June 1833, was as follows:—

The number of subscribers for the year was eleven. The lowest rate of annual subscription accepted is a guinea, the highest received 40*l.* from one principal proprietor. There are no medical charities in this barony which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

All disbursements are made by the treasurer to the order of the medical attendant.

The expenditure for one year was as follows:—

The accounts are audited once a year, and a report submitted to the subscribers in full meeting called for the purpose. There are also general meetings of the governors once every year, which are generally attended by one-fourth of the whole, and minutes of their proceedings are regularly registered in a book kept for the purpose.

There is no medical instruction. Practitioners established in the neighbourhood are permitted to witness capital operations, and to see remarkable cases when they occur.

Persons who attended the Examination.

A. U. GLEDSTANES, esq., J. P.—The Clergyman of the parish, three other members of the committee, and the Medical Attendant.

THIS dispensary was established by the surrounding gentry in the year 1833, and is intended for the relief of the sick poor of a district seven square miles in extent. There are other dispensaries within a radius of three miles, the nearest (which is in Kilcock) being only one mile distant.

The house consists of two rooms on one floor. It is exceedingly neat, and its condition in point of repair is very satisfactory. There is no garden attached, nor any resident in the house. It is given rent free by a magistrate who lives close by.

The only medical officer connected with the institution, is a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. He is not provided with apartments at the dispensary house. He attends at the dispensary twice a week, from 11 to 2 o'clock, at which time prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid.

There is no visiting apothecary.

The present medical attendant was elected by the subscribers. The election, whether it be of a physician or a surgeon, is not restricted to graduates of particular universities, or to licentiates, or members of particular colleges. The person acting as apothecary, however, must be a licentiate of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. When the present medical attendant was elected, he was the only candidate for the situation. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them, hence there are no medical men in the neighbourhood qualified and disposed to give their services to the dispensary gratuitously.

The surgery is particularly neat, and the bottles and drawers are very well kept. The establishment is most liberally supplied with the best medicines, kept in the most orderly manner. None of the persons who supply articles of medicines, &c. are members of Committee. The amount of the druggist's bill from the 12th March 1833 to the 12th March 1834, was 24*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.*

The register of diseases, with the termination of the several cases, appears to be fairly kept; but no cases are recorded in detail. The number of sick on the books at the period of this examination was 45; viz.—

Extent of Country.	THIS charity was established in the year 1818, by the neighbouring gentry, and was intended for the poor of a district extending over four square miles. There is no other dispensary nearer than that at Dunshaughlin, which is three miles distant.
Buildings.	The buildings for the purpose of the dispensary, &c. consist of two rooms for the immediate business of it, and a dwelling house. The state of the entire, in point of repair, cleanliness, &c. is respectable. There is a garden attached, of an acre in extent. The house is occupied by the medical attendant, and is hired at an annual rent of 11 l. , which is paid by the physician from his salary.
Medical Officer.	The only medical officer is a graduate of the university of Edinburgh, and a licensed accoucheur. He is 37 years of age, and has been attached to the dispensary 16 years. He is provided with apartments at the dispensary house; but is not a member of the committee. Attendance is given by him three times a week, from nine to twelve o'clock, at which time prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Both

Both the treasurer and the physician were elected by the subscribers, the former only is permanent. In the election of a medical officer, whether it be for physician or for surgeon, there is no restriction as to particular universities or colleges. When the last vacancy for physician occurred, which was in 1818, there were four candidates. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; hence there are no medical men within five miles who are qualified or disposed to give their services gratuitously.

The surgery is not inconvenient; the bottles and drawers are pretty well kept. The medicines are ordered from Dublin, and paid for by the treasurer; they appear to be in ample quantity, and of the best kind. The landlord of the dispensary is not a member of the committee, but the person who supplies the medicines is a member. The amount of the druggist's bill from 1st July 1833 to 3d June 1834, 20*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*

A register, with the terminations of cases, appears to have been most carefully kept for 16 years, but no cases are recorded in detail. The number of sick now on the books is 20; viz.

Patients who come to the dispensary	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	12
Attended at their own houses	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	8
								20

Of the above cases there were four of fever, and three of dysentery.

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. There was not any applicant refused medical assistance from want of a governor's letter of recommendation during this year. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at home, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings within a radius of four miles, no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officers are paid for their attendance when called into the family of a subscriber, but they receive no gratuity from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and is found not to be a good security against small-pox, which disease is now frequent in this district. Nearly a hundred cases have occurred since spring. The medical officer sometimes inoculates, and with respect to the confidence of the public in vaccination, it appears that it is shaken.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. Lunatics are sent to Dublin.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the governors through a managing committee, which consists of seven, but which seldom meets. They remain in office from year to year, though not annually elected.

There are committee meetings once every year, which are generally well attended.

The treasurer acts also as collector. He was appointed by the subscribers, and gives no security. The appointment is permanent, but no salary is attached to it. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the annual payment of a guinea. With regard to religious belief, it does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.

There are no servants employed at the dispensary.

Reports of the progress of the charity are very carefully drawn up, but not printed every year. The latest printed was for the year ending 30th November 1833, by which it appears, that, during that year, the cases treated were, of

The number of subscribers for the year was 24, and the lowest rate of annual subscription accepted one guinea. One nobleman subscribes 10*l.* annually. There are no medical charities in this barony which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer.

Extent of Country.

THIS charity was established in the year 1808, by a noble proprietor, and was intended for the sick poor within a district of six square miles. There are no other dispensaries within three miles; that at Collon, in the county Louth, being four miles distant.

Building.

The dispensary-house consists of two rooms on the first floor, and its state, as to repair, cleanliness, &c., is good; there is no garden attached to it, and the house is not occupied by any resident; it is hired of the original founder of the charity, at an annual rent of four guineas, which is paid by the treasurer.

Medical Officer.

The only medical officer connected with the institution is a graduate of the University of Dublin, 33 years of age, who has been seven years attached to the dispensary; he is not provided with apartments in the dispensary-house. Attendance is given by the physician three days in the week, from ten to twelve o'clock, at which time prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Election:

The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and is permanent, but receives no payment. The medical attendant was elected by the committee in 1827. The election of physician is not restricted to graduates of any particular university; when the last vacancy occurred, which was in 1827, there were sixteen candidates. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them, hence there are no medical men residing within five miles of the dispensary, who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

Pharmacy.

The surgery is tolerably orderly, and the bottles and drawers are pretty well kept. The various articles being low in quantity at present, an order has been sent to Dublin, and a supply is daily expected.

Patients' Registration.

The amount of the druggist's bill, from May 1832 to May 1833, was 30*l*.

There has not been a register of diseases kept since 1832, nor are there any cases recorded in detail. The number of patients who come daily to the dispensary average about - - - - - 40

And of those who are attended at their own houses	-	-	-	6

Of the above, there were six cases of typhus fever, and one surgical case—a fractured leg. The following is a copy of the medical attendant's note, on the subject of the diseases treated at the dispensary: "Number of patients admitted, 4,000. By far the most considerable of this number were chronic cases, of which the diseases of the prima via were conspicuous, viz. dyspepsia, diarrhoea, dysentery and common cholera. Fever prevailed to a considerable extent, chiefly in the mountains; and its type was, in most instances, of the low typhoid kind. The mortality, however, was very inconsiderable, perhaps not one in twenty. A good deal of fever prevailed in the town of Slane; but, with one or two exceptions, was confined to children. Its character, however, was precisely the same; and in one instance, I could trace the developement of the fever now prevalent in the mountains to that among the children of Slane. Those cases of the acute kind, such as fevers, accidents, difficult labours, miscarriages, &c. were all visited at the respective houses of the patients, as often as the exigencies of their cases demanded."

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. It does not appear that there was any case of an applicant having been refused medical assistance for want of a governor's letter of recommendation. Each annual subscriber of a guinea, may recommend patients to be visited at their own houses, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Who entitled to Relief.

Extern Patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings within a radius of four miles, no charge nor allowance being made for horse-hire for such visits. The medical officer is paid for his attendance when called in to the family of a subscriber, but receives no gratuity from charity patients directly or indirectly. Vaccination is is always performed gratuitously, and is found to be a good security against small-pox, which disease has been very frequent during the last four or five years, and fatal in many cases. Inoculation is privately carried on to a considerable extent, even in Drogheda. The confidence of the public in vaccination is strong.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. The only charitable fund is that collected at the church on Sundays. With regard to lunatic patients, they are sent to Dublin.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the Rector of the parish and the medical attendant. There is no managing committee.

The Rector is an ex officio director. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers, is the payment of a guinea annually. Religious belief does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.

Reports of the progress of the charity are annually drawn up, but not printed.

The amount of income for the year was as follows :

Presentment	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	60	-	-
									£. 120	-	-

The number of subscribers for the year was ten, and the lowest rate of annual subscription accepted a guinea. There are no medical charities in this barony, which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer.

The amount of expenditure for one year was as follows :

Physician's salary -	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	84	-	-
Rent -	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4	4	-
Medicines -	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	30	-	-
									£. 118	4	-

All disbursements are made by the treasurer to the order of the physician.

The accounts are not audited, but a report is submitted to the grand jury. There are no general meetings of the governors.

It does not appear that any medical instruction is given.

The Medical Attendant.

This charity was established in the year 1830 by the neighbouring gentry, and intended for the sick poor, of a district six miles by two in extent. There is no other dispensary within a radius of three miles, that at Julianstown being the nearest, which is three miles and a half distant.

The house consists of one room, the state of which, as to repair, cleanliness, &c., is very respectable. There is no garden attached, nor is the house occupied by any resident. It is hired at an annual rent of 4*l.*, paid by the treasurer.

A member of the College of Surgeons of London, is the only medical officer connected with this institution. He is not provided with apartments at the dispensary house, nor is he a member of the committee. He is surgeon to the Balbriggan dispensary, at an additional salary of from 80*l.* to 100*l.* a year, varying according to the income of the charity. He attends the Stamullen establishment on one day in the week, from twelve to two o'clock, at which time prescriptions are dispensed to the poor. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and is permanent. The surgeon was also elected by the subscribers. In an election, whether it be for physician or surgeon, there is no restriction as to graduates of particular universities or colleges. When the last vacancy for surgeon occurred, which was in 1830, there was but one candidate. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; hence there are no medical men residing within five miles of the dispensary, who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

The surgery is neat and orderly, and the bottles and drawers are well kept. The medical attendant's medicine-chest seems to be very well supplied with medicines of the best kind. The medicines are paid for by the funds of the charity. Neither the landlord of the dispensary, nor any of the persons who supply any of the articles of medicine, &c. are members of the committee. The amount of the druggist's bill from 25th July 1833 to 2d June 1834, was 20*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, including about 16*s.* for printing, &c.

Medical assistance has not been refused to any applicant for not having a governor's letter of recommendation during this year. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at their own houses, besides an unlimited number of daily patients to be seen at the dispensary.

Nourishment.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in this parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. Lunatics are sent to Dublin, and the difficulties on this subject are great.

General Management.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the governors, through a managing committee, which consists of seven, who are elected annually by open vote, and remain in office from year to year.

Managing Committee.
Officers not medical.

There are committee meetings four times every year, which are generally well attended. Two subscribers act as the directors, and visitors ex officio. The surgeon is also the collector, and as such was appointed by the treasurer. He gives no security, and remains in office from year to year, but receives no payment. The qualification necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers is the payment of a guinea annually.

Attendants.

There are no servants employed at the dispensary. The medical attendant suggested that the balance of 17*l.* 1*s.*, now in the hands of the treasurer, might be beneficially employed in affording nourishment to very urgent indigent cases, at his recommendation.

All disbursements are made by the treasurer to the order of the committee.

The accounts are audited once a year, and a report submitted to the governors in full meeting called for that purpose. There is also a general meeting of the governors once every year, which is usually attended by about one-third of that body, and minutes of their proceedings are regularly registered in a book kept for that purpose.

THIS charity was established in the year 1817, by the late Countess of Bective, and was intended for the sick poor of a district five miles by three in extent. There are no other dispensaries within a radius of three miles, the nearest being four miles distant.

The house consists of six rooms, or two stories, and its state as to repair, cleanliness, &c. is respectable. There is a garden attached to it of about a quarter of an acre in extent. The house is occupied by the medical attendant, and is hired at an annual rent of 12*l.* which is paid by the occupant.

The only medical officer connected with this institution is a member of the College of Surgeons Edinburgh, acting also as an accoucheur. He is forty years of age, and has been attached to the dispensary fifteen years. He is a member of the committee. The medical attendant resides at the institution, and is consequently in constant attendance. Prescriptions are dispensed to the poor by him at all hours. He is also surgeon to the Agher Dispensary, at an additional salary of 40*l.* per annum, and to Rathmolion Dispensary, at 50*l.* per annum. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. The medical attendant sometimes employs his brother to do his duty for him. There is no visiting apothecary.

The treasurer was appointed by the founder of the charity, and is permanent. The surgeon was elected by the subscribers. In the election of physician, or that of surgeon, there is no restriction as to graduates of particular universities, or to members of particular colleges. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is not sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them. This village, however, appears to be highly respectable, and there is a comfortable inn. The country about is rich. In consequence of the usual county grant having been refused to this dispensary last Wednesday, on account of the principal subscriber having withdrawn his subscription of 25*l.* per annum, the medical attendant states, that he is about to take a qualified apothecary into partnership, and to open an apothecary's shop in Summerhill, in order to prevent a competitor settling there. This, he states, has been long wished for by the inhabitants. There are no medical men residing within three miles of the dispensary, who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

The surgery is neat and orderly, and the bottles and drawers are carefully kept. Neither the landlord of the house, nor any of the persons who supply any of the articles of medicine, &c., are members of the committee. All money documents are said to be in the hands of the treasurer, who was not present at this examination.

A register of disease, without the termination of cases, appears to be imperfectly kept, and no cases are recorded in detail. Neither the treatment, nor is the termination of the cases, noted. The number of sick now on the books is 25; viz.

Patients who come to the Dispensary	-	-	-	-	-	22

Those who are able to purchase medicines are not supplied from the charity, though they may be subscribers. Medical assistance was not refused to any applicant, during this year, for want of a governor's letter. Each annual subscriber of a guinea may recommend patients to be visited at home, besides an unlimited number of daily patients.

Such patients as are unable to attend the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, within a radius of three miles; no charge nor allowance for horse-hire being made for such visits. The medical officers are paid for their attendance when called in to the family of a subscriber, but they receive no gratuity from charity patients, directly or indirectly. Vaccination is always performed gratuitously, and, according to the medical attendant, is not found to be a perfect security against small-pox, which disease has not been frequent during the last 15 years in this district. The confidence of the public in vaccination is considerably increasing.

Articles of diet are never furnished to the sick from the funds of the charity. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. Lunatic patients are sent to Dubin: they occur but rarely.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the committee, which consists of three or four, who are permanent.

There are committee meetings once every year, which are generally attended by one-half of that body, and minutes of their proceedings are regularly registered in a book kept for that purpose, only relatively to the accounts.

A register of cases, but not with their terminations, appears to be kept, and some of the more important cases are instructively recorded in detail. The number of sick on the books was 40; viz.

Medical Attendant.

THE dispensary of Blessington is the only institution of the kind within a considerable circuit. The nearest dispensaries in any direction are those of Dunlavin, Tullagh and Naas. The two former being distant about 10 miles, and the latter not less than eight.

The medical attendant is a gentleman, 29 years of age, who having fulfilled his period of study in Dublin, where he obtained the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and graduated in the university, was elected to discharge the duties of physician, surgeon and accoucheur to the establishment about three years ago. His qualifications to practice midwifery are derived from his education at the Dublin Lying-in Hospital. He is not attached to any other medical or charitable institution, but he is at all times permitted to attend to the calls of his private practice, and to extend it.

It is contrary to custom, that the duties of the medical attendant should be performed by proxy; and it is stated that the usage has never been deviated from except on one occasion, when the sanction of the committee was obtained to the introduction of a temporary substitute, who was a licentiate of the College of Surgeons.

The fixed days for attending to the poor of the district are two in each week. On these they are received at the dispensary, and are provided with the medicines deemed necessary. In addition to this, however, the medical attendant prescribes for all patients who present themselves during one hour every morning at his private residence.

Payment.

His salary, when first appointed to his present situation, was not more than 80*l.*, but by an unanimous vote of the governors, it has been recently raised to 100*l.* a year. A servant is provided to assist him in the dispensing of medicine, who is paid 5*l.* per annum.

Election.

The offices connected with this charity are filled by election of the subscribers; the mode of election and the details of it being always arranged in conformity with the Act of Parliament. The appointments thus made are held only so long as the good conduct of each officer entitles him to the approbation of the electing body; however, it has not hitherto happened that any one has been either removed or suspended.

Pharmacy.

All the medicine required is supplied by the Messrs. Boileau & George, druggists of eminence in Dublin. This firm subscribes to this dispensary as well as to others to which they supply drugs. They are therefore governors, but it is stated that they never exercise their privilege by taking part in the proceedings of the meetings. The expense of medicines has not varied much during the last three years, having averaged about 15*l.* per annum. In addition to medicine, there is a stock of pharmaceutic apparatus and utensils, provided for the purposes of the charity, and these it is not permitted either to the officers or governors to apply them to any other uses.

Patients' Registration.

The extent to which the poor avail themselves of the assistance offered by this charity is ascertained by a register, in which are entered the number of persons who make application for relief, together with the manner in which all cases have been treated, and the result of such treatment. This register is kept by the medical attendant, and from it, it appears that about 1,500 persons have been relieved in each of the last three years. Of this number fully seven-eighths were cases of a purely medical character, and the remainder consisted in equal parts of cases requiring surgical assistance, and of cases of lying-in women.

Who entitled to Relief.

This dispensary does not count any of the humbler classes of society among its subscribers, and from the evidence which was given it would appear that its aid is strictly limited to those only who should constitute the proper objects of its benefits, that is, to those whose circumstances entitled them to gratuitous relief.

In reply to a question to what extent and under what circumstances he considered that he could be called upon to render his services in connexion with the charity, the medical attendant stated that "a recommendation from a governor always entitled the bearer to be attended to; if he resided within a distance of five miles, and that he always deemed it his duty to visit, at their houses, any person whose case required unusual attention; provided that a request to such effect were borne on the recommendation of the governor." He also attended lying-in cases under the same circumstances. He added, that "in the many acute diseases which admit of no delay, daily attendance on the part of the physician was absolutely necessary;" and that in fact occasional visits, except to persons labouring under chronic disorders, were of little or no use.

Nourishment.

The same witness goes on to say, that "he has, in many instances, been summoned to visit patients who were supposed to be afflicted with different distempers, which on examination proved to be of such a character as would be far better treated by a liberal supply of wholesome and nutritious food, than by any medicine whatsoever." It is, therefore, a part of the design of the charity to furnish wine and other matters in those cases which may be deemed likely to benefit thereby.

General Management.

Applications for the relief of lunatics have been occasionally made to the medical attendant. Having no other mode of affording assistance in such cases, he has made use of his influence to gain their admission in the Richmond Lunatic Asylum, and has been generally successful.

The management of the institution is vested in the hands of the governors, amongst whom are the treasurer and secretary. Twice a year it is appointed that meetings of the governors shall take place. At these meetings five constitute a quorum, and the average attendance of members at them never exceeds seven, although votes by proxy are not admitted.

Managing Committee.

A list exists also of a managing committee, who should meet monthly, to arrange the details of the charity; but they are stated never to have performed this duty, so that in the interval interval of the general meetings of the governors, there is in truth no superintendence, inasmuch as no visitor is appointed for the purpose.

The appointments in this establishment seem to be quite uninfluenced by sectarian feeling.
At present the physician is a Protestant, and the servant who has been already mentioned is a Dissenter.

A copy of the rules and regulations for the general conduct of the institution and of its officers was submitted to the examination of the Assistant Commissioner.

The following table presents a view of the annual income and expenditure for the last three years: the income resulting partly from subscriptions and donations, and partly from presentment by the grand jury.

The funds remain until they are required in the hands of the treasurer, who, though not a paid officer, is held accountable for their disposal, both to the grand jury and to the governors. He is not authorized to discharge any bill, until it has previously been examined by the Govenors.

The Rector and the Curate of the parish.—The Treasurer and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

WITHIN a circuit of ten miles round the dispensary of Carnew there are six similar establishments, and at the following distances from it: Shillelagh, distant three miles; Gorey, county Wexford, eight miles; Tinnehaly, six miles; Newtown Barry, seven miles; Clonegall, six miles; Ferns, seven miles. The medical attendant is an M. B. of Trinity College, Dublin, and had studied his profession both in the that city and in Edinburgh. Previous to his connexion with the institution under consideration, he had been attached to one of the medical charities in Dublin. His age is 53. Except at the dispensary, his practice is solely as a physician, and he is not in the habit of attending to midwifery cases. He states that he has not, except on rare occasions, been in the habit of discharging the duties of his situation by proxy, and in those instances he has always been able to secure the services of a very intelligent apothecary as his substitute.

Patients are received at the dispensary every morning from nine until eleven, and the physician states he is also at all times ready to visit at their own dwellings those persons who may be confined by illness, and who require to see him. This latter evidence differs from that given by the Rector, by his curate and by the treasurer. These witnesses assert that they have been quite unable to procure the attendance of the physician on extern patients, and in proof of their assertion, they refer to a charge in the treasurer's accounts for the last year of 70*l.*, paid to another medical man in the town for his visits to the poor, and allowed by the committee. The attending physician replies, that "he never heard of the complaint until the present moment, and that he has never refused to see any patient; but the reverse." In confirmation of the truth of his denial, a letter was read in evidence, from the Roman Catholic clergyman of the parish, in which that gentleman speaks in strong commendation of the entire conduct of the physician, and of the kind and excellent professional services rendered by him to his flock. In this letter there was no intimation of the slightest inattention on the part of the medical attendant. The committee have promised, on the return to Ireland of the agent of a neighbouring nobleman, to summon a general meeting of the governors, to investigate and report on the charge.

The attending physician has been attached to the dispensary since its origin, a period of 15 years. He was appointed by the subscribers, and receives a salary of 100*l.* per annum, late currency. All the offices of the charity are filled by election, and are only held during good conduct; however, there has not been any necessity hitherto either for the removal or the suspension of any of those who have been chosen.

The medicines required for the use of the establishment are procured from Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin, who, being subscribers of two guineas annually, enjoy the privileges of governors: the outlay under this head, during each of the last three years, has amounted to nearly 40*l.* There is also a stock of the usual apparatus, &c., and it is stated that they are strictly reserved for their proper purposes, and are never lent to any one in connexion with the charity.

The subscribers consist exclusively of individuals of the richer classes of society; and those only possess the privilege of recommending persons for relief who contribute to the extent of 1*l.* 1*s.* and upwards annually. Sufficient precautions are adopted to ensure that no one shall participate in the benefits of the charity, except those whose circumstances really entitle them to gratuitous relief. As to the extent to which he affords his aid to the poor, the physician states, that "it is enough if the person be poor; with or without a recommendation I never refuse; and if the case require it, I consider it my duty to visit the patient at his own residence, if that be not at a greater distance than four miles." The same witness observes, "that in cases of acute disease, it is absolutely necessary that the physician should see his patient daily, and that occasional visits are of little or no use, except in chronic disorders."

The medical attendant keeps a register of all the applications made to him in connexion with the dispensary. He specifies in it the disease of the applicant, and the mode of treatment which he adopts; but he finds it extremely difficult to obtain correct information as to the result. Nearly all those who apply to him labour under diseases of a so called medical nature. Surgical cases are few, and severe accidents extremely rare, for the district does not include any manufacturing town. Cases of lunacy sometimes offer themselves, and his practice is to make application for their admission into either the Carlow Lunatic Asylum or the Richmond. In the former he finds no difficulty in obtaining his request, but it requires personal influence to succeed at the latter.

On the first Tuesday in each month the governors are in the habit of holding a meeting, which is however seldom attended by more than four or five of them. Three constitute a meeting, but all are equally privileged to participate in the proceedings and to vote, but not by proxy.

A managing committee also exists, whose duties are limited to the details of the institution, which they regulate at their monthly meetings. Besides these, there is no other control over the charity, neither visiting governor nor board of superintendence.

The nature of the evidence given by the witnesses, fully established that sectarian feelings have not been allowed to interfere with the affairs of this dispensary in any particular. The medical officer and the nurse are both Protestants.

The rules and regulations are not printed.

The income of this charity is derived from subscriptions and from grants annually made by the grand jury. Its funds are deposited with the treasurer, who receives no salary, but accounts regularly both with the grand jury and with the committee.

It is his duty to pay all demands of the establishment, but before he does so it is necessary that the bills should have received the signature of three members of the committee.

Persons who attended the Examination.Dunlavin
Dispensary.

The Protestant Clergyman.—The Treasurer and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

Extent of Country.

WITHIN a circuit of 10 miles around the dispensary of Dunlavin, there are six other institutions of a similar nature. Their situations and distances are as follows; viz. Ballytore, five miles; Kilcoole, five; Naas, ten; Blessington, nine; Waterford Hospital, five; Baltinglass, seven and a half.

Medical Attendant.

The medical attendant, a gentleman of 37 years of age, was elected in February 1822, and has no other establishment of the kind under his care, but is engaged in private practice on his own account. Previous to his appointment he had just concluded his professional studies, having served an apprenticeship to an apothecary in Dublin, and having taken the degree of Bachelor of Medicine in the University of that city. He had also been a pupil of the Meath Hospital and County of Dublin Infirmary, and had qualified himself to practice midwifery, by the required attendance at the Dublin Lying-in Hospital. In his present situation he discharges the duties of surgeon and physician, but not of accoucheur, as by the laws of the charity he is not called upon to visit lying-in women gratuitously. Under ordinary circumstances he is not permitted to discharge his duties by proxy, but on one occasion of illness he obtained the permission of the committee to procure a substitute, in the person of a gentleman from Dublin.

On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays the poor are received at the dispensary by the physician, during the two hours of from 10 until 12 each day.

Payment.

The salary of the medical attendant is 90*l.* per annum, and 5*l.* is annually allowed to him as the rent of the dispensary, which is held in his private residence.

Election.

Not only the medical but all other officers connected with the charity are appointed by election, and in strict conformity with the provisions of the Act of Parliament. Hitherto the electors have had no reason to be dissatisfied with their choice, for though the elections are renewed annually, there has been no instance of the suspension or removal of an officer.

Pharmacy.

The medicines required for the use of the dispensary are procured from Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin, who appear to be annual subscribers of two guineas, which subscription gives to this firm the privileges of governor. The average annual expenditure, under the head of drugs and medicines, has not exceeded, during the last three years, the sum of 16*l.* The miscellaneous articles, such as small groceries, &c., which are occasionally wanted, are obtained from a shopkeeper of the town, who is a contributor to the charity, but not to the extent which enables him to take a part in its management. It was stated by the witnesses, that the applications on the part of the poor, to have their children vaccinated, were by no means constant; that they were, in fact, nearly altogether confined to the summer months. The experience however of the medical attendant enabled him to assert, that he had never, in the cases of persons who had been vaccinated, met with subsequent small-pox in any degree of a violent or dangerous nature.

On

* A letter was received at the period of holding this examination by the medical attendant from the parish priest, in which he regretted his inability to attend in person, and wrote in terms of commendation of the conduct and attention of the medical attendant.

On examination of the register kept by the attending physician, and produced by him in evidence, showed the number of persons who sought relief from this establishment during the last three years to have been about 1,200 annually. This register contained, in addition to the number of applications, an account of the nature of, and mode of treating each case. It appeared that the most ordinary forms of disease were those which are usually classed as "medical complaints," such as bowel complaints, catarrhs, fevers, and dyspepsia in several shapes, together with affections of the skin. The list of accidents was small, and it was mentioned in explanation that those of a severe nature were usually sent for assistance to the county hospital.

With reference to the extent to which the benefits of this charity may be made available to the poor, it was stated that the power of recommending individuals to it was limited to annual subscribers of 1*l.* 1*s.*, and that in the list of the subscribers were not to be found the names of any persons among the poorer classes. It was also stated, that "hardly any instances were known, in which others than those whose circumstances properly rendered them objects for gratuitous relief, had known any kind of aid from it. In addition to his attendance at the dispensary on the days which have been mentioned above, the physician also considers it as part of his duty to visit at their own dwellings, all patients whose illness is of a nature to confine them to the house; and who have been specially recommended for the purpose by a subscriber. He is liable to be called on to pay visits of this nature to any place within a distance of ten miles from the dispensary," and, he adds, that "he frequently pays them, merely on the demand of the person requiring to be seen." On this point the medical attendant goes on to say that "he considers occasional attendance as absolutely useless, except in cases of chronic disorder, and that it is indispensable that the physician should see, at least once a day, all his patients who labour under disease in an acute form." Cases are represented to occur frequently, where the medical attendant finds on examination that the patient suffers rather from the continued use of improper or scanty diet than from any positive disease; what is here wanted is not medicine, but wholesome and judicious food, and under this impression, provision is made out of the funds of the charity for the supply of wine, meal and bread, and other articles, which the discretion of the physician may suggest.

The case of lunatic patients does not come within the design of this charity. Within the last three years, however, about five cases of that kind have presented themselves within its district, but through the exertions of the Rev. Mr. Morgan they have all found admission into the lunatic asylum.

The general management of the affairs of the dispensary rests with the entire body of the governors, there being no non-medical officer connected with it, except the treasurer. On the first Wednesday in the months of January, April, July and October, meetings of the governors are appointed to be held, at which all are equally entitled to be present, and to vote: votes by proxy not being permitted. These meetings are not often attended by more than seven persons; but three are sufficient to form a quorum, and to transact business.

There exists also a committee of management, consisting of 15 individuals, chosen annually, in the month of January, with instructions to meet quarterly, and direct the details of the establishment. On this committee three form a quorum; it is to be regretted, however, that in the interval between their meetings, no effective continuation of their control is provided for, there being neither Board of Superintendence chosen by the grand jury, nor any visiting inspector. The evidence given by all the witnesses tended to prove that religious distinctions have not had any influence on the decisions or elections of the great body of governors. The medical attendant is a protestant.

It was stated, that there was a collection of rules and regulations for the guidance of those engaged in the administration of the charity, but they were not printed, neither was a copy produced.

The income of the Dunlavin Dispensary is derived from three sources, viz. from subscriptions, from donations, and from annual grants presented by the grand jury. In each of the last three years, the accounts show a considerable surplus of receipts over expenditure, as in the following account:—

Receipts in 1831	-	-	174 16 -	Expenditure in 1831	-	-	122 12 1
" - 1832	-	-	162 5 5	" 1832	-	-	102 2 3
" - 1833	-	-	175 1 5	" 1833	-	-	118 4 4

The custody of the collected funds is committed to the treasurer, who does not receive any remuneration for his services, and is held accountable by the grand jury for his trust.

The bills due by the charity are not, however, discharged by him until they have been presented to the committee, and have received the signatures of three of its members.

The medical attendant of the Enniskerry Dispensary is a licentiate of the King and Queen's College of Physicians in Ireland, and is about 42 years of age. He is also attached to a very excellent fever hospital, which is unconnected with the first-mentioned charity. Previous to entering on the duties of these situations he had served as assistant-surgeon of the County Limerick Militia, and he now acts as surgeon, physician and accoucheur, in addition to the calls of his private practice. It is stated that he has never, except in one instance, had occasion to intrust the performance of his duties to a substitute, whom he then, with the consent of the committee, obtained in the person of a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons. He possesses the diploma of the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, which, being only granted after an attendance on the wards of that institution, gives him a qualification to practice midwifery.

The dispensary is open to receive and prescribe for the sick poor on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, between the hours of ten and twelve. In addition to the relief granted in this manner, the physician also attends at their houses those persons, who either labour under acute diseases, or may be unable to present themselves at the dispensary. Cases of infectious disorders are always admitted into the fever hospital.

Payment.

The salaries paid by this institution (consisting of the dispensary and detached fever hospital) are 100*l.* per annum to the physician, which he draws solely as attendant of the dispensary, and 10*l.* a year to a nurse-tender; both the physician and the nurse-tender are elected by the committee; the former has held his present situation for the last 20 years, having been, in fact, the first physician appointed to the charity. The appointment of the nurse-tender is not of so old a date, she succeeded her predecessor about seven years ago, who had been removed on account of drunkenness.

Pharmacy.

Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin, supply all the medicines which are required for this establishment; they are subscribers to its funds, and, of course, governors; medicine was formerly obtained from the Apothecaries' Hall, but it was not considered of the best quality. The present stock appears to be excellent, and it was stated that the average expenditure, under the head of drugs, has been about 35*l.* for the last three years. The pharmaceutical apparatus, and other articles belonging to the dispensary, are reserved strictly for their proper uses, and are never lent to any individual connected with it.

Patients' Registration.

The Assistant Commissioner had not an opportunity of examining the register, which, he was informed, was kept for the entry in it of all applications for relief, and of the manner in which they had been disposed.

Who entitled to Relief.

The power of recommending persons to the aid of this dispensary is confined by an annual subscription of 1*l.* 1*s.* and upwards, and in the list of subscribers are not to be found the names of any of the poorer classes. The physician states, that "he never has had any reason to suppose that any but those whose circumstances justly entitled them to gratuitous relief have participated in its benefits." He adds, that "although he is bound only to attend those poor persons who have provided themselves with the recommendation of a governor, yet he never refuses his assistance to any poor person; and where the applicant is unable to appear at the dispensary, he is in the habit of visiting them, at any distance within a circumference of 21 miles. With respect to the aid afforded to lying-in women, the presence of the dispensary physician is only called for in cases of difficulty, as there is a properly qualified midwife resident in the town, who is supported by subscription, which remunerates her for services to the poor." Speaking of the degree of attention which cases of acute disease require from a physician, the medical attendant observes, that "he considers occasional visits to such cases as nearly, if not altogether, useless, they require to be seen at least once in the 24 hours, and sometimes oftener." He dwells, also, on the amount of sickness produced by the continued use of improper food, and says, "I do believe that many cases of dyspepsia and gastrodynia are clearly referable to a cold, washy, vegetable diet." Some provision of wine, and other extra articles of diet, is made by a Poor Fund which exists in the town, for poor persons who may be sick in their own dwellings, and for the patients in hospitals; these, and other necessary comforts, are supplied in a very sufficient degree.

Cases of lunacy are of frequent occurrence in this district, and the medical attendant states, that "he finds the greatest difficulty in providing for their admission into the Richmond Lunatic Asylum; the conveyance thither of such patients is accompanied with the greatest inconvenience, and much expense, which is only met by the charity of private individuals in the neighbourhood.

General Management.

The non-medical officers of the charity are the treasurer and the secretary, both of whom are governors. Twice a year, namely, in June and in December, general meetings of the subscribers take place, at which all who pay 1*l.* 1*s.* annually are entitled to attend and to vote in person; votes are never taken by proxy. At these meetings the attendance of at least three members is required before any business can be transacted, but these have in general more than four present.

Managing Committee.

A managing committee also exists, who meet half yearly, but may be summoned oftener, and who never fail to attend. There is not any board of superintendence but two clergymen as constant visitors, and control the details of both branches of the charity.

From the evidence it may be inferred that religious feelings have no influence in any of the appointments. The physician is a Protestant, but the nurse-tender is a Roman Catholic. A copy of the rules and regulations of the institution was procured by the Assistant Commissioner.

Funds and Accounts Receipts.

Its income had but two sources, viz., private subscription and grants presented by the grand jury. The funds lie in the hands of the treasurer until they are required for the discharge charge of bills, which must, however, previously have been examined by the committee. The treasurer does not receive any remuneration for the duties which he discharges. His office is of a permanent nature, but he submits his accounts annually to the committee in the first instance, and afterwards to the grand jury.

The medical attendant of Kiltegan, a gentleman aged about 35 years, has never graduated any where. He served an apprenticeship of four years to Mr. Johnston, a surgeon in Dublin, and also attended the practice of the Carlow Infirmary and Dispensary for some time. In midwifery, however, he is possessed of the diploma of the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, where he resided as an intern pupil during a period of twelve months. He is engaged in private practice, and has no other medical appointment than the one under consideration, to which he is attached in the capacities of surgeon, physician and accoucheur. On one occasion, it is stated, that he obtained the permission of the committee to absent himself for eighteen months, during which time his duties were performed by a gentleman who was appointed to act in his place. Patients are prescribed for and receive medicine at the Kiltegan Dispensary on three days in each week; viz., on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; while those whose illness may render them unable to present themselves there, are visited at their houses by the medical attendant as often as it may be necessary.

Medical Attendant.

The surgeon has held his present situation since the year 1819, and receives an annual salary of 75*l.*, in addition to a house and garden, of which the rent, 21*l.*, is paid out of the funds of the charity. His appointment, as well as all those connected with this institution, took place by election; and there has been no instance of the removal or suspension of an officer.

Payment.

All the medicine required is purchased from Mr. Johnson, of Baltinglass, who is a governor. Neither wine, or any other extras, are supplied from the funds. The apparatus, which has been procured for the purposes of the charity, are reserved strictly for its use, and are never lent to either governors or any other person.

Pharmacy.

The Assistant Commissioner was informed that a register was kept, containing the number of applications for relief, together with the measures adopted in each case. It was not, however, produced. One case only of lunacy was mentioned to have occurred in the district, and that had been sent to the Richmond Lunatic Asylum.

Patients' Registration.

Subscribers of a guinea annually are alone entitled to recommend persons for relief to this charity. Some few farmers appear amongst the names of the subscribers to that amount; but it was stated that no persons in any way participated in the benefits of the institution, whose means did not justly entitle them to gratuitous assistance. The rules do not require that the medical attendant shall attend to any one who has not provided himself with the recommendation of a governor; but those that have done so, he is obliged not only to prescribe for at the dispensary, as has been already mentioned, but to visit at their own residences, if not distant more than four miles, when the nature of their illness requires such attention. Subscribers have also the power of procuring his attendance on lying-in women. Speaking of the claims which are thus made on his time, he observes, that occasional visits to patients labouring under acute disorders, are productive of very little if any benefit. In such cases, daily attendance is urgently necessary. It cannot be dispensed with, except where the disease is of a chronic character.

Who entitled to Relief.

Both the treasurer and the medical attendant of this institution are subscribers to, and governors of it; and the rules point out that there should be four meetings of the entire body of subscribers in the course of the year. However, it does not appear that such meetings ever take place, although it is only required that three should be present to constitute a quorum, and to admit of business being transacted. The witnesses assert the contrary, and add that five governors generally take part in the proceeding. They also state that the quarterly meetings alluded to perform the duties of a managing committee, and that, in the intervals of the meetings, a constant superintendence is directed to the affairs of the charity, by one of the governors, who has it in his power to summon a general assembly, if he should see cause. The witness represented that all appointments have hitherto been made without any reference to the religious belief of the candidates.

INCLUDED within a circle of ten miles around the Newtown Mount Kennedy dispensary, there are three other institutions for affording medical relief to the poor; viz. the County Infirmary at the town of Wicklow, and Dispensaries at Bray and at Delgany. The last named establishment is merely a branch of the one under consideration, and there is also a Fever Hospital at Bray.

The medical attendant of Newtown Mount Kennedy is a graduate of the Dublin University. He was elected by the subscribers, in accordance with the provisions which exist on the subject in the Act of Parliament.

The medicines are procured from Messrs. Boileau & George, druggists, in Dublin. This firm subscribes to the funds of the charity in the amount of two guineas annually, a contribution which, of course, entitles them to all the privileges of governors. They are the only persons in the general management who have any interest in the articles supplied to the dispensary, and it is stated that nothing is ever lent to any one connected with it.

No person is entitled to call on the medical attendant for assistance or advice, except those who have provided themselves with the recommendation of a governor, that is, of a subscriber, to the amount of one guinea or more annually. This rule is found effectually to prevent any participation in the benefits of the charity by individuals whose circumstances do not really place them in need of gratuitous relief.

Provision is made out of the funds of the charity for supplying wine, or any other extra article of nourishment, to those sick persons whose cases seem to the attending physician to require such matters.

The affairs of the dispensary are directed by the subscribers in the general meeting, which is appointed to take place every six months. The only officers of the institution who can take place in these meetings as governors, are the treasurer and secretary; and although all governors are equally privileged to be present and to vote, it seldom happens that more than seven or eight attend. Votes are not taken by proxy.

A managing committee also exists, whose duties are to regulate all the details of business. They assemble whenever it is deemed advisable to summon them together, and the numbers are elected every year. These two bodies constitute the entire direction of the dispensary, as the grand jury have not hitherto appointed any board of superintendence, and there is not any visiting governor. The general tenor of the evidence given, tends to show that religious prejudices have not been allowed to interfere in the selection of officers. It is also stated, that it has never been found necessary to suspend or remove any of them.

The income of the institution is derived partly from annual subscriptions and partly from the presentment allowed by the grand jury. The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they lie until wanted for the payment of bills which have been passed by the committee; none of the lower classes are to be found among the subscribers.

Extent of Country.
Medical Attendant.

THERE are three other dispensaries within ten miles of that at Rathdrum. One of them at Redcross is not more than five miles off. The other two at Arklow and at Aughrim, are respectively distant six and eight miles.

The medical attendant at Rathdrum had been surgeon to the 21st Fusileers previous to his entering upon his present situation. He served his apprenticeship to a surgeon, and is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons London, and a master of the Apothecaries' Hall, Dublin. His age at present is 46 years. He is not connected professionally with any other medical establishment, and is attached to this dispensary as surgeon, physician and accoucheur, his qualifications for the latter office consisting in his having studied under the late Dr. Creighton, who was professor of midwifery to the Royal College of Surgeons Ireland. His duties, he states, are never performed by proxy, except when confined by illness, or engaged in some other professional avocation. During two hours in each day of the week, he is expected to attend at the dispensary, and to prescribe for the patients who may present themselves, and he is also liable to be called on to visit individuals at their own residences, as often as the nature of their disease requires such attention.

Payment.

His salary as medical attendant is 92*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* a year, and he is allowed 6*l.* per annum for a servant. Payments are also made to the midwife to the extent of 5*s.* for each case that she attends.

Election.

The appointments in connexion with this charity are all made by election, and are only held so long as they are filled to the satisfaction of the electors. The power, however, of removing an officer has not been exercised more than once, when a nurse, whose general conduct was objectionable, was discharged.

Pharmacy.

The stock of medicine is obtained from Messrs. Boileau & George. This firm subscribes to the dispensary, and are the only governors who have an interest in the supply of any article for the use of the dispensary. Their bill during the last three years has amounted annually to about 40*l.* The usual articles necessary in an institution of the kind are to be found found here, and it is stated by the witnesses that they are never made use of for other than their intended purposes, being never lent to any one.

A register exists, in which the number of applications for the aid of the charity is noted; the terminations, however, of the cases are not mentioned, and the reason assigned for the omission is, that many of the patients do not return after they have obtained the desired relief. Nearly 6,000 persons are annually relieved, the diseases under which they labour not differing from those usually prevalent in districts similarly situated, such as the ordinary types of fever, abdominal complaints, coughs, agues, measles and scarlatina. This latter disorder has, of late, occurred with much frequency, and under a very aggravated form. There has not been one case of confluent small-pox, and only one cholera within the last three years. It will be perceived from the above detail, that the great majority of cases are of a purely medical nature. When serious accidents present themselves, they are sent to the county hospital, which is not more than eight miles distant.

The subscribers of one guinea and upwards annually, are alone entitled to recommend persons for relief from this institution, and the privilege is exclusively in the hands of individuals belonging to the richer classes. A sufficient watchfulness is, however, exercised to prevent any from participating in the advantages of the charity, whose circumstances do not really entitle them to gratuitous assistance. It has been already mentioned, that this charity retains the services of a midwife to attend on the poor. Generally speaking, therefore, the medical gentleman is not required to visit lying-in women, except when their cases present any features of difficulty, when his assistance is always called in. The physician speaks of the closeness which cases of acute disease must be watched, and he observes that occasional visits are only useful to patients who labour under chronic disorders. Those of a more rapid character must be seen at least once a day, and sometimes oftener. Within three years, only one case of lunacy has occurred in the district, and the medical attendant succeeded in procuring its admission into the hospital.

The regular fixed meetings of the governors take place four times a year, on the first Tuesday of the month. At these meetings, all are alike privileged to attend and to tender their votes in person, which is the only mode of voting admitted. No officer of the charity is a governor of it, with the exception of the treasurer, and the attendance of three only is required in order to proceed with business.

No committee of management exists, as the quarterly assemblies of the governors are considered to do away with the necessity of it. It is not usual to appoint expressly a visiting governor, but, it is stated, that some of that number direct a constant attention to the details of the dispensary, and would, if they saw any thing in the working of it to require such a measure, instantly summon an extraordinary meeting of the subscribers. The tenor of the evidence given leaves no ground for supposing that sectarian or religious belief have ever influenced any of the appointments in this institution, which are all made by election. A copy of the rules of the charity was produced. They have not, as yet, been printed.

The income of Rathdrum Dispensary is derived partly from donations, but principally from annual subscriptions, and from the grants which the grand jury are accustomed to make in its favour.

The funds arising from these sources are received by the treasurer, in whose hands they lie, until required for the purposes of the charity. The treasurer is not a paid officer, but he annually accounts on oath to the grand jury, also the governors, and to the accounts office. It is stated that the balance usually left in his hands is very trifling. He is not authorized to discharge any bill that may be presented to him, unless it have the signature of three subscribers who have been present at the quarterly meeting.

The Medical Attendant.

FIVE medical charities of a similar description are situated within 10 miles of the Tinchaly Dispensary; viz. at Carnew, Aughrim and Hacketstown, county Carlow, respectively distant six miles; at Shillelagh, distant four miles, and at Kiltegan, at a distance of nine miles. The medical attendant of Tinnahely is unconnected with any of them, and acts as physician, surgeon and accoucheur in that institution to which he is attached. He is still a private practitioner, and previous to acquiring his present situation he had been so for a period of 30 years in this county, having been also a surgeon in the navy. His qualifications consist in having served his apprenticeship to a surgeon, and having attended lectures in the Royal College of Surgeons. In midwifery, he received his education at the Dublin Lying-in Hospital. He states, that he has never, on any occasion, availed himself of the assistance of a substitute in the performance of his duties, which require his presence at the dispensary every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, from ten until one o'clock, to examine and prescribe for those patients who may present themselves there.

In the year 1829, he was appointed to this institution, at an annual salary of 79*l.* without any other emolument. The appointment, the only one that has taken place since the origin of the institution was made by election amongst the subscribers at large.

Medicines are purchased from Messrs. Boileau & George, of Dublin, who are governors of the charity, in right of their annual subscription of 1*l.* 1*s.* Their bill during each of the last three years has not amounted to 20*l.* There is also a stock of the usual medical apparatus and instruments, and it is stated that they are never lent to or made use of by any governor or officer.

Extent of Country.

The medical attendant produced a register kept by him, in which were enumerated all the applications that had been made for assistance, together with the measures that had been adopted in each case. From it, it appears that a great majority of patients laboured under diseases denominated medical; there were but few purely surgical cases, and not more than five bad cases of midwifery in the year. The total number of applicants averaged annually about 1,400.

Subscribers of not less than one guinea a year have the privilege of recommending persons for relief to this dispensary and none of the poorer classes are in the habit of subscribing. The benefits which this charity has in its power to confer are rarely obtained except by those for whom they are really designed, that is, persons in circumstances requiring gratuitous relief. Nevertheless, as there is not an apothecary's shop in the village, the witnesses observe that it is not easy to be very strict.

Properly speaking, no person can call for the assistance of the medical attendant, unless provided with the recommendation of a governor. This, however, he does not insist upon, and he states that he considers it to be his duty to give personal attendance on all cases occurring within a circumference of 20 miles which require either medical or surgical aid. The rules of the dispensary do not require him to visit lying-in women. He dwells particularly on the absolute necessity of daily attention to cases of acute disease; and he says, that "he considers occasional visits as nearly useless, except where the patient labours under disorders of a chronic nature."

Wherever the physician deems it necessary that a sick person should have an allowance of wine, bread, broth, &c. he is authorized to procure such from the funds of the charity. Cases of lunacy are described as rare; but whenever they have offered, the attending physician has been successful in obtaining their admission into the Richmond Lunatic Asylum.

Meetings of the governors, amongst whom there is not any officer of the institution, take place twice a year; viz. in June and in December. At these meetings all are alike privileged to attend, but no votes are taken by proxy. Not more than five are in the habit of attending, but three are sufficient to constitute a meeting.

There is not any managing committee, nor have any visiting governors been ever appointed to attend to the details of the charity during the long interval which separates the regular meetings of the governors. Occasional meetings, however, of the governors are held whenever anything unusual renders such necessary. From the evidence of the witness, the Assistant Commissioner was satisfied that religious opinions had not influenced any election connected with the charity. Both the medical attendant and the caretaker were Protestants. All appointments seemed to have been equally uninfluenced by any sudden accession of governors or subscribers immediately previous to their being made. It was stated that a series of general rules for the guidance of the officers of the establishment, and for its management in all particulars, existed, but not in print.

The income of this charity is derived from three sources; viz. from donations, from annual subscriptions, and from grants made by the grand jury. It amounted, in 1831, to 106*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*; in 1832, 120*l.* 18*s.* 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; 1833, 128*l.* 12*s.* 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

As the funds are received they are intrusted to the custody of the treasurer, who is not paid officer, but is held accountable to the governors and likewise to the grand jury.

The expenditure in 1831 was	-	-	-	£.105	7	8 $\frac{1}{2}$
Ditto - - - 1832	-	-	-	107	3	7

The bills due by the institution are discharged by the treasurer, but not until they have been examined, and have the signature of three of the governors.

THE district attached to the Aghada dispensary contains a population of 9,000 souls, and extends in some directions to a distance of five miles, comprising the entire ecclesiastical union of Aghada. The medical attendant is, however, occasionally called upon to visit patients at Carlisle Fort. Another institution of a similar kind exists at Cloyne, about five miles off, and within the bounds of the district at Farside a private dispensary has been founded, with the assigned reason that the district was sufficiently large and populous for two. The concurrent opinion of the witnesses is, however, that one would have been adequate to the wants of the inhabitants, although they are ready to admit that cases of acute disease cannot always, when occurring in remote situations, meet with that attention which would be desirable. It is stated at the same time, that relief in advice and medicine has never been refused to any applicant. The charity is altogether deficient in the means of affording intern accommodation to the sick poor, and the greatest inconvenience has repeatedly been felt from this want, as the nearest hospital is at Cork, 16 miles distant, and patients who have gone thither in the hope of being admitted, have not always been successful. To remedy this serious evil the witnesses would be desirous of seeing the establishment of convenient medical districts, of which several, according to circumstances, might have an hospital in common, common, for the treatment of fever and accident cases, in addition to being provided separately with a well regulated dispensary of the present kind.

The dispensary of Aghada is situated in the village of that name, and has appropriated to its use an apartment for dispensing medicines, and a waiting room for patients. The entire is on a very small scale; but neat and well kept. It possesses neither garden nor out-buildings, and is in the occupation of the attending physician, who pays for it an annual rent of 9*l.* It is not the property of the institution, nor of any of the subscribers, and is only held from year to year. Some of the witnesses apprehended inconvenience from the nature of tenure, in the event of a change in the ownership.

The sole medical attendant is a member of the College of Surgeons in Edinburgh, at which city and in Paris he was educated as an accoucheur. He is 26 years of age, and was appointed to his present situation by the subscribers, at the formation of the charity, previous to which he acted as a general practitioner in Cork. He now resides altogether at the dispensary, and is still engaged in private practice. The days of attendance are Monday, Wednesday and Friday, from eight to twelve, and as the physician is not connected with any other medical charity, he has seldom occasion to absent himself; but in case of illness it is provided, that with the consent of the committee he may transfer his duties to some professional friend. Although he has not an assistant, yet as he resides on the spot, and when away from home is accustomed to leave ample directions where he may be found, immediate attention, in case of sudden accident, is always to be had: the medicines are dispensed by him in person.

The salary of the medical attendant is 70*l.* per annum, and he is allowed 10*l.* annually towards the support of a horse. The two houses immediately adjoining the institution are likewise occupied by him, the rent of the two being 15*l.* per annum, of which sum 9*l.* is paid from the funds of the dispensary.

The attending physician is elected by the subscribers, and when a vacancy occurs notice is given in the newspapers by advertisement, and a circular is forwarded to each of the electors. By these means it is calculated that a sufficient competition is procured. The candidates who offer themselves are required to produce the diploma of a surgeon; but there is no limitation as to age either in appointing or displacing any medical officer. There are no superannuations or retiring allowances, and as yet there has not been any mortality in the medical department. It is conceived, that the small number of wealthy individuals in the district would be quite inadequate to the maintenance of a physician, independent of a salary from some public establishment. There is, in point of fact, but one other practitioner in the district. Complaints have on some occasions been brought against the medical attendant; but they have been proved, on investigation, to have been without any foundation. The poor know that they can at all times obtain easy redress for any irregularity or inattention on his part; but when his removal from the charity was sought by some resident gentlemen, they exerted themselves in such a manner in his favour, that he was retained at their express wish.

The dispensary room presented a very neat and orderly appearance. It contained a supply of the ordinary medicines, which, though scanty in quantity, were of a tolerably good kind. They had been furnished by Mr. Harrington, a druggist, Cork. When the absence of all the more delicate preparations, as morphia, quinine, &c. was alluded to by the Assistant Commissioner, it was replied, that "those medicines were not deemed requisite." The annual expense of medicine for the last three years, as paid for by the treasurer, has amounted to 30*l.* The stock is always under the care of the attending physician, and is not accessible to any other individual. He is not permitted to sell any part of it under any circumstances. In his private practice he does not supply medicine, confining himself merely to prescribing. The medical attendant is provided with but few surgical instruments by the charity; when the use of others is required, he is obliged to have recourse to his own. He is only authorized to make use of leeches in very particular cases. Vaccination is performed gratuitously at the dispensary; but the medical attendant states, that having seen several cases of fatal small-pox occurring in individuals whom he had himself vaccinated, he is inclined to put very little confidence in its preventive efficacy; such is also the opinion spreading among the population. Under these circumstances he inoculated upwards of 60 persons last year with variolous matter, all of whom took the disease in a most favourable degree. There was not one case of a confluent character amongst them, and not a single death. The disease taken naturally has prevailed to a considerable extent of late years.

A register is kept by the medical attendant, which specifies the names and residences of all who apply to him for relief, the date of application, together with the name of the subscriber who recommends them, and the nature of the disease under which they labour. At a subsequent period the termination of the disease is added. Whenever he has occasion to refuse aid to any one, he is accustomed to acquaint the recommending subscriber with his reasons for so doing. At the date of the visit of the Assistant Commissioner, the names of four patients were pointed out to him as being under course of treatment at their homes. Of these, one was an individual who had cut his own throat. They were likewise informed that 20 patients were in the habit of coming to the dispensary on the public days. The medical attendant was unable to speak accurately as to the number of capital operations which he had performed during the three previous years; but he stated that he had been called on in about 20 cases of difficult parturition.

A recommendatory letter from a subscriber is an indispensable condition in all those who seek the aid of this charity. An exception is only made in those cases of accident which require immediate attention. The servants of subscribers are at all times attended to, and as it is the custom to give both medicine and advice to some of the poorer subscribers, when such appears warrantable to the medical attendant, there is some reason to suspect that not

Munster County Cork.	On the days that have been already specified, all persons under the above conditions, who present themselves at the dispensary, receive advice and medicine; but in addition, the medical attendant is bound to visit at their own homes, both by day and night, those patients whose diseases confine them to the house; several of the witnesses bear testimony to the manner in which he has discharged this part of his duty; and he states himself, that "he considers daily attendance is quite indispensable in acute disorders, and that he would give it as often as might be necessary." In paying these visits the limits of the district are not always adhered to; in particular cases they are frequently exceeded. No prescription book is kept; but it was stated that no other prescriptions are compounded at the institution than those of the attending physician. Midwifery cases are only attended to by that gentleman when any feature of an unusual nature presents itself. In ordinary cases the poor are assisted by midwives, whose ignorance and unskilfulness is represented as being extreme, so much so, that fatal effects often result.

Nourishment.	There are not any institutions in this neighbourhood for supplying food or clothing to the poor.
General Management.	The principal direction of this charity rests in a committee of nine members, who are annually elected at a general meeting of the subscribers. They assemble at irregular periods, but minutes are always kept of their proceedings. The surgeon is not admitted to any share in the general management, nor is there any person ex officio among the governors. Besides the committee a board of superintendence is appointed by the grand jury, and on two recent occasions the state of the dispensary and its accounts have been examined by some of the gentlemen of whom it is constituted.
Officers not medical.	The only non-medical officer is the treasurer, who acts without remuneration, but does not give the security which the Act of Parliament requires. He is elected annually, but there are not any bye-laws to regulate the appointment. It is stated that religious prejudices are not allowed to interfere in the management of this institution, which is exclusively maintained by persons of the Roman Catholic persuasion. It has never been found necessary to remove or suspend any of the officers connected with it.
Reports.	A written report is annually made and laid before the grand jury. The want of unanimity which prevails among the inhabitants of this district operates very prejudicially to the interest of this dispensary. Its funds at present are very low, so much so, that it is to be apprehended, that it cannot much longer continue in existence. On the last occasion of applying for the usual county grant, it was found impossible to comply with the proviso which requires that a certain amount shall have been previously contributed. In consequence the presentment was withheld. At present the subscribers are for the most part in indigent circumstances, and are thus obliged, in order to provide the requisite number of guinea subscribers, who alone are entitled to vote and to become members of the committee, to unite their subscriptions and give them in as the contribution of one individual. (The dispensary which exists at Farside cannot be considered otherwise than in the light of a private establishment.)

The receipts in 1832 consisted of—

Collection.	The institution does not possess any fixed property.
Custody.	The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain exclusively in his hands.
Expenditure.	The principal items of disbursement are house-rent, the salary of the physician, and medicine. The expenditure for the year 1833, was 96 l. 14 s. ; but this account does not include quite the whole year. That of the year 1832 amounted to 124 l. 19 s. 2 d. Bills are examined by the committee, and on their order are discharged by the treasurer.
Accounts.	The accounts are balanced twice in the year, but no copy of them could be procured by the Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. M'CORMICK, and the Medical Attendant.

THIS dispensary is designed to afford relief to the sick poor of a population of about 8,000, within a district extending eight miles in a westerly, and six in a northerly, direction. The neighbouring institutions are those at Mallow, Kanturk, Buttrvant and Glantane, distant respectively about six miles. This dispensary is considered quite sufficient for the district. It is considered that five miles is the utmost distance that ought to be included in a dispensary district. No persons have ever been refused relief here; but there is no intern accommodation. In consequence, however, of the contiguity of the Mallow Infirmary, no inconvenience is on this account experienced. It was considered most desirable to establish medical districts, with a dispensary attached, to each capable of receiving a few cases of fever or bad accidents.

A small house in the village is hired, at the rent of six guineas per annum, which answers all the purposes of a dispensary. There are no baths or out-buildings of any kind attached to it.

The sole medical officer, aged 41 years, graduated in the university of Edinburgh in 1821, and was there also educated for midwifery: he resides about one mile from the institution, to which he was appointed in the year 1820, by the vote of the subscribers at large, as general medical attendant; previous to this period he practised as a physician. He holds no other appointment; but is allowed private practice. In the event of temporary absence (of which he is obliged to give notice) his brother, who has been educated to the profession, would attend for him. The days and hours appointed for his attendance are Tuesday and Friday, from nine until two o'clock. His brother occasionally assists him; but for so doing receives no emolument from the institution. In case he were irregular in his attendance, a controlling power rests with the subscribers at large. The medical officer is always at hand to afford relief in case of sudden accident; and the medicines are generally dispensed by him, but occasionally by his brother.

The salary of the medical attendant is 60*l.* per annum; an additional sum is, however, often given as a gratuity; he has no allowance for a horse or other conveyance, nor is he provided from the funds with board or lodging. The grand jury have no control whatever, if the committee or subscribers authorized salaries higher than were requisite to obtain efficient medical officers. Any combination between a medical man and his friends to raise an institution for the sake of the medical attendant, and defraud the county by retaining its grant and returning its subscriptions, is considered impracticable here; but the grand jury have no power sufficient to prevent such an abuse.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers at large. When a vacancy occurs notice is given by public advertisement in the newspapers in order to induce the largest possible competition. It is considered that a controlling power over the elections would certainly be desirable. A degree from some college or university is regarded as indispensable to a candidate. There is no limitation as to age, either in appointing or displacing medical officers, neither is there any superannuation nor retiring allowance. There was no other candidate than the present officer at the last election. The condition for voting is the payment of subscription, and this is never lost sight of. It is not deemed necessary to send notice of appointment with the age and certificates of qualification of the candidates to the grand jury. The neighbourhood is not sufficient to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument, nor is there any one resident in the district eligible to the institution, except those in Mallow, none of whom would be likely to serve gratuitously. No mortality has hitherto taken place among the medical officers. In case of harshness to or neglect of the patients on the part of the medical attendant, they can, without fear of consequences, complain to the subscribers at large, or to any one of them, and of this mode of redress the poor are generally aware. It has not occurred here that any medical officer has been appointed or retained against the known feelings of the people.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed is very neatly kept, and the medicines are of good quality, and in sufficient quantity, with an adequate supply of the more expensive description; they are furnished by Messrs. Gosnell and Co. of Cork, and are paid for by the treasurer, the cost amounting in 1831 to 24*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.*; in 1832, 27*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.*; and in 1833 to 23*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* The medicines are locked up, and the key kept either by the medical attendant or his brother. None are ever sold, nor does the surgeon ever avail himself of them for private practice. The apparatus for preparing decoctions is very good; but there are no surgical instruments of any kind belonging to the institution. Leeches are but very seldom supplied, on account of their expense. The medical officer is bound, as far as he is able, to give vaccine matter gratis to the neighbourhood. He is not prevented from inoculating with small-pock matter, but is not in the habit of using it.

A register, particularizing the disease of each patient and its termination is kept by the medical officer; but no copy of it is lodged with the grand jury, nor does it appear they have on any occasion required its production. No person properly recommended has been ever refused relief. The number of patients on the books of the institution when visited by the Assistant Commissioners was—attended at home, four; those who come to the institution, thirty. No capital operations have been performed within the last three years.

Patients.

A recommendation from a subscriber entitles the bearer to relief, and no difficulty in procuring one is experienced, the signature of one subscriber being sufficient, and no limitation being attached to the number which each may issue. Persons whose circumstances do not require gratuitous relief have occasionally participated in the benefits of the institution; but this abuse does not often occur. Attendance is given gratuitously to the poorer subscribers. No poor person from the mere circumstances of his being unknown to or disliked by the subscribers would be excluded from the benefit of the county subscription.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and the sick poor are visited, when necessary, at their own dwellings, within the limit of six or seven miles. Two or three visits in the day would be paid, or attendance given in the night, if required by the exigency of the case. If an accident, such as a fractured limb occurred, the case would be attended to, but the institution has not the necessary means (such as splints, bandages, &c.) for affording relief. Prescriptions of a practitioner unconnected with the charity are not made up at the dispensary. Difficult lying-in cases are attended by the medical officer, if required, but generally the poor employ midwives, who are grossly ignorant, and injury, and even death often occurs in consequence of their want of skill. Daily attendance on the sick is considered necessary, particularly in acute cases, which are visited as often as required. Occasional attendance, except in chronic cases, is of little or no use. The medical officer is bound to supply vaccine matter gratis, as far as he is able.

Vaccination is performed on all cases presented; the results are very favourable, as preventive of small-pox; there is however a good deal of the disease prevalent in the neighbourhood. In the opinion of the persons examined, the confidence of the public in vaccination is considerably increasing.

The medical attendant is not prevented from inoculating with small-pock matter, but he does not and would not do so.

Nourishment.

This institution does not supply wine or any other extra, nor is there in the neighbourhood any other charity on which the physician can issue an order for food, clothes or fuel.

Diet, Clothing.

None supplied.

General Management.

The general committee of management consists of about 26 individuals. The regular fixed meetings take place twice a year, but are not regularly attended; as many members as are present constitute a meeting, and not more than six or eight generally attend. All governors are equally entitled to attend and vote, but not by proxy. Minutes of the proceedings are kept. No person is ex officio in the principal direction. The medical officer is a subscriber and votes, but the affairs of the institution have not in any essential particular been left to his management.

Managing Committee.

There is no managing committee, but there is a board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury. During the intervals between the meetings no visiting governor acts or ever visits the patients officially.

Officers not medical.

Officers, not medical, are annually appointed by the subscribers at large, but there are no printed bye-laws to regulate elections; the voting is open, a mode of election considered beneficial. It would certainly be well to vest in a superior authority a veto to prevent improper elections. No particular religious belief excludes a person from being an officer. No sudden accession of governors or governesses took place before the election of any officer. The only non-medical officers connected with the institution are the treasurer and collector; the former acts gratuitously, and gives no security; the latter is a salaried officer. No instance has occurred of an officer belonging to the institution having been suspended or removed.

Attendants.

There is but one attendant, a female, who resides at the dispensary, and is paid one pound a year by the treasurer, without any other perquisite but her lodgings. She is appointed by the subscribers.

Reports.

Reports are made once a year to the grand jury, but not printed.

The clergy, medical men, gentry and middle class of farmers might, with the greatest advantage to the poor, be formed into a board of health. The district does afford a sufficient number of persons qualified, and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, if it were thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

Funds and Accounts, Receipts.

The amount of subscriptions and donations for the year 1831, was 61*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*; for 1832, 66*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*; for 1833, 67*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* Very few of the poorer classes subscribe. The existence of the institution is precarious, and in a great degree depends on the large contribution of one subscriber who gives 20*l.* a year, late currency, which, if withdrawn, would materially injure the institution.

Subscriptions are never here attended with the stipulation that the subscriber, or any of his family, should receive medicine or medical relief gratis.

The institution possesses no capital stock, in houses or lands, from which an income is derivable.

Collection.

The collector receives the subscriptions, on which he is paid a small per centage.

The funds remain in the custody of the treasurer, until required, no sums being placed in the charge of any salaried officers or servants.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THIS dispensary is judiciously placed in the centre of its district, which extends on all sides about six miles. Within its limits there is no second medical charity; but in the direction of the four cardinal points there are four institutions of a similar character very nearly on the boundary line. The witnesses consider that it is amply sufficient, so far as its expressed object goes, for the wants of the population for which it is intended, namely, about 12,000; but they add, that no dispensary can be effective which embraces a greater extent of country than the present. No patient has been ever refused relief here, at least from the want of means; but much inconvenience has, at times, been felt from the absence of any intern accommodation. The witnesses would be very anxious that medical districts should be formed to each of which a dispensary could be attached; and a small hospital, with a few fever beds to every two or three of such districts.

The dispensary is held in a stone built cottage, containing a dispensing room of about thirty feet square, and a waiting-room. The house is in very good repair, but contains no furniture beyond a few chairs, and is unprovided with baths.

The Building,
Furniture and Grounds.

The sole medical attendant is a gentleman aged twenty-six, who is a graduate of the university of Edinburgh, and was educated in midwifery in that city and in Paris. He was appointed to discharge the duties of physician, surgeon and accoucheur in the year 1834, and is unconnected with any other medical establishment. He also acts as apothecary to the institution, and is engaged in private practice. Before the period of his election, he had been a practitioner in the city of Cork, and had acted as cholera inspector for one half of that city. He resides within a few paces of the dispensary, and is the first resident attendant which it has had. His duties require his presence at it on three days in the week; and although he has not hitherto had occasion to absent himself, it is understood that he may obtain leave to do so, on giving a week's notice of his intention, and procuring a properly qualified substitute to act in his place. Being a resident, he is always ready to afford assistance in cases of sudden accident, and at all times dispenses the necessary medicines in person, which are administered to the patients by the nurses of the vicinity.

Medical Officers.

The physician receives an annual salary of 100*l.*, and does not obtain any further allowance for lodging or for a horse. He is paid from the joint fund arising from annual subscriptions and the grand jury grant; and the last named body have it in their power to check any undue increase of salary, by refusing to present for the usual equivalent to the subscriptions.

Payment.

There is, however, another possible abuse, which consists in the unnecessary formation of dispensaries by means of the subscriptions of individuals interested in creating a medical appointment; and it is admitted that in this case the grand jury are altogether without any adequate control.

The election of the attending physician rests with the subscribers, whose privileges as to voting are regulated in conformity with the Act of Parliament. Whenever a vacancy occurs, notice of the time at which it is intended to fill it, is inserted in the newspapers, in order to obtain a competition. At the last election, however, there was but one candidate, and the testimonials which were required from him were those of being either a surgeon or physician of some recognised university. Notice of his appointment, and of his qualifications, were furnished to the grand jury; and it is stated that the control over appointments which at present exists has been found quite sufficient, and that there is no necessity for any of a superior authority. The number of gentlemen, or of persons in circumstances to maintain a physician, by their patronage, resident in this neighbourhood, is very small; and were it not for this present institution, the district would be quite unprovided with medical assistance. There has been no mortality among the physicians who have been connected with the Ballynaboy Dispensary, nor have any arrangements ever been made for the granting super-annuations annuations or retiring allowances. Any irregularity or inattention on the part of the surgeon to patients can be checked by a complaint laid before the committee. The poor are represented as being acquainted with this mode of obtaining redress, and as not likely to hesitate in making use of it. Hitherto there has been always the best feeling between the medical officers and those confided to their charge.

The dispensary room was found to be in a perfectly clean and orderly condition, and to contain, in addition to the ordinary pharmaceutical apparatus, a very full supply of medicine of the best quality. None of the more delicate preparations, such as morphia, quinine, &c. were wanting, all having been procured from a wholesale druggist in Cork, who was perfectly unconnected with the institution, and had been selected merely because his prices were the most reasonable. His bill during each of the last three years has amounted to about 18 l., and has been discharged by the treasurer. The attending physician has no pecuniary interest whatsoever in the supply of medicine, or in the annual cost of it. With a view to prevent any thing of the kind, his salary has been determined at a fixed amount, and he draws his payment independent of any other circumstance. The stock of medicine, however, remains under the care of his assistant, but in no further degree than respects its custody, as he does not interfere with the disposal of it. None of it is allowed to be sold under any circumstances, and it is kept quite separate from the medicine employed in the private practice of the physician. In any but the most ordinary operations, the medical attendant uses his own surgical instruments, as he is not furnished by the institution with any thing beyond a pocket case, and a midwifery apparatus. These are, however, sufficient for the purpose, and are never lent to any practitioner unconnected with the charity. The high cost of leeches preclude their being made use of in the practice of this dispensary; the arrangements which have been made for the diffusion of vaccination deserve much praise. A resolution of the subscribers directs that notice shall be given three or four times a year from the several places of religious worship, of the days on which the physician proposes to be in attendance for the purpose of vaccinating gratuitously the children of all applicants. The confidence of the public is manifestly increasing in the practice, and the medical attendant confirms the justness of the general opinion. He states that a case of genuine small-pox seldom, if ever, occurs after vaccination, and that the disease has become positively rare during the last few years. Although not forbidden, his practice is, never to inoculate with variolous matter.

Patients' Registration.

The medical attendant keeps a register of the circumstances under which all applications for relief are made. On seeing each patient, he enters the nature of his disease, and when he ceases to be under his treatment, he makes a note of the termination. He has never had occasion to decline rendering assistance to any applicant, but if it should take place, the refusal and the grounds of it would be added to the register. The present physician having held his situation only since last August, is unable to speak of the number of capital operations which had been performed by his predecessor, or of the number of midwifery cases which he had attended, but since his own connexion with the charity, he has tended upwards of 120 patients, who are all at present on the books, and of whom 38 are receiving attendance at their own dwellings. It is not customary to lay this register or a copy of it before the grand jury, nor has its production been ever called for.

Who entitled to Relief.

One of the rules of the dispensary declares that none shall be relieved from its funds, except those who have procured the recommendation of a subscriber. This rule admits of medicine and advice being supplied to the servants of subscribers, but it is never very strictly enforced, and it is stated that any applicant, even a stranger, having the appearance of poverty, would at all times receive the aid of the physician. The subscribers of a guinea and upwards are not limited in the number of recommendations which they may issue; those who contribute in smaller sums are only entitled to give two or three at the same time, but in each case, one signature is sufficient; the latter class are, further, in the habit of receiving both medicine and advice gratuitously for themselves and family, by a distinct understanding, if not by a direct compact at the time of giving in their subscriptions. This practice, it would appear, is not considered incorrect, as the answer given by the witnesses to the question, whether persons participate in the benefits of the charity, who are not in circumstances requiring gratuitous relief, was in the negative.

Extern Patients.

In addition to the patients who are provided with medical advice and assistance at the dispensary on the public days that have been mentioned above, it is part of the attending physician's duty to visit at their own homes all those persons residing within the district who may be unable to seek advice in person. This attention is rendered both by day and night, and as often as is consistent with a due performance of the general duties of his situation. On this point the physician observes, "I am accustomed to visit acute cases as often as I can spare time, sometimes two or three times in the 24 hours; but if the situation of the patient's house be very remote, the visits must necessarily be less frequent. There are, however, many diseases besides those of a chronic nature, in which every object may be obtained by occasional attendance, such are those inflammatory affections, where immediate venesection is sufficient to arrest the further progress of the complaint." The personal assistance of the surgeon is always given when accidents occur, but unfortunately the institution does not place the necessary bandages and splints at his disposal. He is likewise liable to be called on in all cases of difficult parturition, but his interference is not often sought as an accoucheur, as the poor are generally attended by individuals who it is stated are perfectly ignorant of the branch of practice in which they engage. The medical attendant gives it as his opinion that many valuable lives have been sacrificed in consequence of their unskilfulness.

General
Management.

The prescription-book was examined by the Assistant Commissioners, who had reason to express their approbation of the nature of the remedies indicated by it. They were informed that no other prescriptions than those of the attached physician had hitherto been compounded with the medicines of the dispensary, inasmuch as there was no second practitioner in the neighbourhood; but it was added that no objection would be made to such a practice should necessity require it.

Neither this nor any other institution in the district, supplies wine or nourishment to the poor when affected with sickness.

The general management is vested in an annually elected committee, consisting of about twelve of the subscribers; this body is directed to hold meetings three or four times in the year, for the purpose of managing the details of the institution; but they are not very regular in the performance of their duty, as seldom more than six or eight members attend the quarterly assemblies, at which all governors are equally entitled to attend, while those who are absent are permitted to vote by proxy. The surgeon has no further share in the management of the charity than as respects his professional services, nor is there any person entitled, ex officio, to the privileges of a governor.

The proceedings of the committee are always recorded, and in the intervals of their meetings the working of the institution is subject to the check of an occasional visit from some of the members of the board of superintendence which is appointed by the grand jury.

There is but one non-medical officer, viz. the treasurer, who is elected annually by the subscribers, and performs his duty without any remuneration; conforms to the provision in the Act of Parliament, by giving the required security. There are not any printed bye-laws for regulating the appointment of this officer; but it is stated by the witnesses that religious belief has never influenced the election, which is conducted by open voting, a mode which has been found advisable. The treasurer is held accountable to the subscribers, and although there has never hitherto been any occasion to remove the individual who happened to hold that situation, yet it is suggested by the witnesses that it would be well, in order to prevent improper appointments, to give a veto to some superior authority.

medical.

The medical attendant is allowed to select an attendant, for whom he provides both board and lodging, at a short distance from the dispensary, while a salary is allowed to him of 6*l.* per annum out of the funds of the charity. There are no formal rules for his conduct; but the physician is at liberty to discharge him if he thinks proper.

Attendants.

Nothing beyond medicine is purchased for the use of this dispensary.

Stores.
Rules.

The rules which exist for the management of this institution are represented to be of useful tendency; they are calculated to further its ends, and the medical attendant sees no reason to suggest any alteration.

A very useful and efficient board of health could be formed in this district from the clergy and other persons of the more opulent classes. It is stated that many of them would be very willing to co-operate in any such design, and would take a part in any investigation which might be deemed necessary, in order to render the present dispensary system more extensively beneficial to the poor. The witnesses propose that the district dispensary should be the place of meeting for such an institution.

Reports.

The sources of the income of the Ballynaboy dispensary are annual subscriptions and the grand jury grant. The former have amounted to about 45*l.* in each of the last three years, and the latter has averaged 40*l.* in the same period. Very few individuals of the poorer classes are to be found among the subscribers, whose respective contributions are pretty nearly equal in amount. On the continuance of them the existence of the charity is entirely dependent, as it possesses no resources nor capital of a fixed character.

Funds and Accounts.
Receipts.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain until required.

Collection.
Custody.
Expenditure.

The principal items in the expenditure are the physician's salary, the cost of medicine, the wages of the assistant and the rent of the dispensary house; taken together they have amounted to about 90*l.* on an average of the last three years. The examination of bills due by the charity is confided to the treasurer, who is not, however, authorized to discharge them until an order for their amount has been given by the committee.

A statement of income and expenditure is made annually, of which copies are submitted to the subscribers and to the grand jury.

*Bantry Dispensary.*Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district attached to the Bantry Dispensary amounts to nearly 30,000, of whom, a portion are obliged to travel between 20 and 30 miles to partake of the aid which it affords; on one side there are no medical charities within the distance of six miles, and the district is considered to be of an extent utterly inconsistent with efficiency; and it is the opinion of the witnesses that one medical man should not be required to attend at any greater distance than three miles in any direction from the town; however, extern relief has never been refused in any instance, but very serious inconvenience has often been felt from the want of some intern hospital accommodation. The witnesses suggest, as a remedy for the deficiency, that the surrounding country should be formed into well defined medical districts, and that a dispensary should be attached to each. They would further propose, that an hospital, containing a few beds for the reception of fevers and accidents, should be attached to each union consisting of three or four such districts.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

This dispensary is carried on in a miserable cabin, in which a room on the first floor serves at the same time to receive patients and to dispense medicines. There are neither baths nor outbuildings attached to it, and it pays a rent of 6*l.* per annum to the proprietor, who is at the same time the treasurer of the institution. Fortunately, it is not held by a lease, and there is, therefore, no obstacle in the way of relinquishing it. It would be desirable that in all cases the dispensary buildings should be the property of the county. If such were the rule, at present, the establishment in question would not be of the discreditable nature which has been described, and would in all probability have been more judiciously located with reference to those for whose benefit it purposes to be designed.

Medical Officers.

The medical attendant was not present at the examination, but it was stated that he was a gentleman aged 45, who had graduated in Edinburgh, and who had been appointed to his situation in the year 1827 at a general meeting of the subscribers. He does not hold any other appointment, and resides within about 200 yards of the dispensary to which he is attached in the double capacity of physician and surgeon. Previous to his election he had been engaged in private practice in the town of Bantry; and he is permitted to attend to his private engagements. His duties are not unfrequently performed by the apothecary of the charity. At the date of this examination he had been absent for nearly four weeks, during which time his son had attended in his place. Notice, however, of his intention and of this arrangement was given on the evening before his departure to both the secretary and treasurer. The fixed periods for receiving the poor at the dispensary and supplying them with medicine are from 11 until 2 o'clock on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays. There is also an apothecary, an individual altogether unprovided with a diploma, and who, in fact, does not possess a single document of any kind which would show that he is qualified to make up medicine. The committee are represented as possessed of sufficient control to check any irregularity or inattention on the part of either of the medical officers, and it is stated that the poor would not be slow in availing themselves of the redress which they know is to be obtained by laying their just complaints before that body. Hitherto no officer has been in connection with the dispensary who did not possess their confidence and their good will.

Payment.

The physician receives a salary of 60*l.* per annum; that of the apothecary is 40*l.* Neither receive any allowance for lodging or for the support of a horse; the subscribers are quite independent of any external authority in determining the amount of the salaries which they may think proper to assign to their medical officers. The grand jury have not the power of interfering in the ultimate disposal of the money which they annually grant for the purposes of the charity; they may withhold it altogether, but they either cannot or do not accompany it with any conditions, and here is a case where an appointment with a salary has been made in favour of a man who can produce no testimonial to prove that he is adequate to the duties which he undertakes to perform.

Election.

The subscribers have the privilege of filling up the vacancies in the medical situations. There has, however, been but one election since the foundation of the dispensary, and the present officers were the only candidates. As to the testimonials which they were required to produce, the physician is said to be a graduate of Edinburgh; the apothecary was not called on for any diploma, although the laws direct that he should in all cases act as the substitute of the medical attendant when that officer should happen to be absent. It was not requisite to lay before the grand jury a statement of the qualifications of either gentleman; and all those were admitted to vote at their appointment who had paid up their annual subscription of one guinea. There is no provision in the laws of the institution for granting superannuations or retiring allowances.

Pharmacy.

The room containing the medicines had an appearance of tolerable neatness; the supply of medicine was sufficient in the ordinary articles, and seemed to be of good quality; some quinine had been provided, but, with this exception, there were none of the more delicate preparations to be observed; the whole was under the care of the housekeeper, or rather of a poor old female, who occupied the ground floor of the house. Messrs. Gosnell & Co.,

& Co., of Cork, are druggists to the dispensary, and subscribe a guinea annually to its funds. The cost of medicine during each of the last three years had been as follows:—

1831 - - - - -	48	11	8
1832 - - - - -	48	19	5
1833 - - - - -	53	5	-½

These accounts, it was admitted, had been paid by the treasurer on the certificate of the medical attendant saying that they were correct; such a mode of proceeding is, however, contrary to a bye-law, which declares that no payment shall be made except by an order of the committee, signed by all the members who may happen to be present at the time.

The sale of any part of the dispensary medicines is prohibited under any circumstances, and with this view they are kept separate from those used in the private practice of the medical officers. The apparatus for preparing decoctions is of a very indifferent description; and the only surgical instruments possessed by the charity are a stomach-pump, a scalpel, a few bistories and a razor; however, they are sufficient for the purposes of the establishment, and are never used but in its practice, in which leeches are never introduced. Vaccination is altogether neglected. The medical attendant is not required to extend it, but on the contrary, is permitted to inoculate the children of all applicants with variolous matter. In this manner he gave the disease to nearly 1,300 individuals in the course of the year 1832; during the last year he has refrained from practising inoculation at the dispensary, but it is admitted that it has been continued in private. Under these circumstances the Assistant Commissioners were not surprised to learn that the disease taken naturally had prevailed to a considerable extent. In justification of the practice which has been mentioned, it was stated by the witnesses, that the public no longer reposed any confidence in vaccination. This opinion should, however, be received with caution, as it was given by the apothecary, who has adopted a contrary mode of action, and it was not possible to obtain the sentiments of the very respectable medical attendant.

The individual called the apothecary keeps a register, in which mention is made of the nature of the disease under which each person, applying for relief, labours. The apothecary states, that in no instance has relief been refused when demanded, under proper conditions. At the date of the Assistant Commissioner's visit, the register contained the names of ten persons who were under treatment at their own homes; and of thirty more who were in the habit of attending at the institution. During three years there had not been any operation of importance performed by the medical attendant; but he had attended about 51 poor women in their confinement during that period.

No person is entitled to relief except those who have provided themselves with the recommendation of a subscriber; this rule is not deviated from except in cases of sudden accident. Each subscriber is limited to a certain number of orders, but as a single signature is considered sufficient, there cannot be much difficulty in any poor person procuring one. No subscriber is attended gratuitously by the physician, but there is some reason to believe that not a few contrive to participate in the benefits of the charity, whose circumstances do not entitle them to gratuitous relief.

In addition to the patients who receive relief at the dispensary, the sick are also visited at their own dwellings any where within a distance of four miles; this attention, it is stated, would be paid at any hour of the day or night; and on this point it was said that the medical attendant considered daily attendance as absolutely necessary in all instances of acute disorder, and only to be dispensed with when the patient labours under a chronic affection." There are not, unfortunately, any of the apparatus necessary in the treatment of cases of accident. Poor women are attended in their confinement whenever their delivery is protracted, or displays any features of difficulty; in general, however, they fall into the hands of midwives, whose ignorance is often productive of fatal consequences to both mother and child.

From the dispensary no nourishment of any kind is supplied to the sick poor, but a small fund exists, derived from weekly subscriptions of a few shillings for giving food and wine in extreme cases of destitution, accompanied with disease.

The general management of the affairs of the dispensary is vested in the body of subscribers, who amount in numbers to 47. A general meeting is appointed to be held each year, but it is rarely attended by more than 15 or 20, although all governors are equally entitled to vote, but not by proxy. Minutes of the proceedings of these meetings are always kept; neither of the medical officers is a governor, nor have they, it is stated, been allowed to take any prominent part in the principal direction.

A managing committee has never been elected, although the laws, as printed, direct the contrary. There is, however, a board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury, and two of its members have inspected the institution in the course of the present year. There is no visiting governor.

The treasurer and secretary are elected by the subscribers at large; neither of them receive any salary, but the former does not enter into the security required by the Act of Parliament: they have both held their appointments since the commencement of the charity, when they were chosen by open voting, and without reference to their religious persuasions.

A feeble old woman resides under the title of housekeeper in the Dispensary-house; she receives as wages 3*l.* 18*s.* a year, and has no perquisite, or other allowances; she was appointed by the subscribers, who can remove her at pleasure.

The rules and regulations which were originally agreed upon for the conduct of the charity, and all connected with it, are calculated to promote its utility in every respect. Unfortunately they they are little regarded, and are openly transgressed in important instances. There can be little doubt that much evil has arisen from the want of some uniform system for the general management of dispensaries.

Of late it has been customary to make half-yearly reports on the affairs of the charity, and to lay them before the grand jury in manuscript. Formerly this was done but once a year. It is conceived that much good would result from the permanent establishment of a board of health in Bantry. There are many gentlemen resident there who would cheerfully lend their assistance to conduct it, and who would take part in any investigation of the wants of the poor which it might be deemed necessary to enter into, previous to extending the aid desirable from the present dispensary system.

The income of this dispensary is derived partly from annual subscriptions, and partly from the presentment granted by the grand jury, to which is to be added the amount of fines levied at the petty sessions. The following table shows the receipts during each of the last four years.

None of the poorer classes are to be found in the list of subscriptions, which are chiefly composed of the contributions of three individuals who subscribe respectively, two 10*l.* each, and one 5*l.* annually; with the continuance of their donations the existence of the charity is closely connected; were they to be discontinued, it would be in imminent danger of falling to the ground, as it does not possess any property of a fixed nature.

The subscriptions are collected by the treasurer, at the annual meeting convened by the secretary, and all funds remain in his custody until required for current expenses.

Medicine, salaries and rent include all the ordinary items of expenditure; the examination of bills that become due is intrusted to the physician, and on his certificate of their correctness, they are paid by the treasurer, though the laws require that they should be passed in committee.

The accounts are balanced every six months, but are only submitted to the subscribers once a year.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district attached to the Blarney Dispensary amounts to 4,000. The district itself extends about four and a half miles in most directions, but some parts of it are nearly six miles from the institution. The numerous hospitals in the city of Cork are not more than 6½ miles distant, while there are dispensaries at Cumna and at Inniscarra, which places are respectively situated at six and four miles distant. It is stated that no individual has ever been refused relief at the charity under consideration; however this may be, it is an establishment which seems to the Assistant Commissioners to have been set on foot for the sole interest of its medical attendant.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The entire premises of this dispensary consist of a single room of the most miserable character, and which serves at the same time for dispensing medicine and as a waiting room. One portion of the floor is boarded, the remainder is formed of the naked earth. It contains no furniture of any kind, except one old chair; and altogether nothing can possibly be more different from what a dispensary should be. It is hired at an annual rent of 3*l.*, and fortunately may be surrendered at pleasure. No change could be for the worse; and it were much to be desired that the building destined for similar purposes were always the property of the county, which would in some degree guarantee their fitness for the objects proposed.

Medical Officers.

The present medical attendant was appointed in the year 1828, at a general meeting of the subscribers, who then originated the charity. He acts in the combined capacity of physician, surgeon, apothecary and accoucheur, and states that he was educated in all the branches of his profession at Paris. Previous to and since his appointment, he has resided in Cork, where he is engaged in private practice, at a distance of six miles and a half from the scene of his duties. He holds no other situation, and states that he is always ready to attend the poor when called upon. There is no regulation as to the circumstances under which he may perform his duties by proxy; but it is admitted that, on occasion of his illness, he procured a gentleman to act as his substitute without any previously obtained sanction of the subscribers, who indeed seem to have had no knowledge of the change at any period, so little interest do they take in the affairs of the institution, and so little control do they possess over them.

The fixed periods for seeing the poor are three days in the week, at half past ten o'clock. The

* Passed by Grand Jury, but the amount not yet known, at the period of this examination.

The duration of the medical officer's attendance on those days is considered long enough, but it is thought that he should attend more frequently. If there were a committee, it would be able to check any irregularity in the attendance. At present there is no person ever at hand in case of sudden accident, and medicine can only be obtained during the presence of the medical attendant.

The physician receives, out of the funds of the charity, an annual salary of 86*l.*, without any allowance for horse or lodging. In fact, the amount which he may be paid for his services, rests entirely at the discretion of the subscribers. Neither the grand jury nor any other authority can prevent a combination between an individual and his friends, for the purpose of forming an establishment of the present kind; and the Assistant Commissioners cannot avoid remarking that the Blarney Dispensary affords a striking proof that a medical institution may be set on foot for other ends than the advantage of the poor, whose wants it professes to supply.

The election of the medical attendant is stated to be vested in the hands of the subscribers, however, the gentleman who fills the situation at present was appointed before any subscriptions had been paid. He was the only candidate on the occasion. Were a vacancy to occur, notice of the intention to elect a successor would be given in the newspapers; but although competition might be obtained by this means, it would be inadequate to prevent the possibility of an improper appointment, inasmuch as a candidate may be selected wholly independent of the control of the grand jury. This want of some superior tribunal is much to be regretted. Some paid officer is certainly necessary in this district. The number of opulent persons residing in it are few, and there are no medical men nearer than Cork, so that, were it not for the salary, there would be no probability of gratuitous medical attention to the sick poor. Superannuations, or retiring allowances, do not enter into the scheme of this charity.

Mention has been already made of the room in which the medicines are kept and dispensed. As to the stock of medicine, nothing seemed to be in abundance but Glauber salts. There was a display of shattered bottles, but on inspection they proved in great part empty. However, in comparison to the small number of those who seek the aid of this charity, perhaps the supply may not be insufficient. It was at first stated that quinine was to be found among the drugs on the shelves, this statement turned out to be incorrect. The medicine had been purchased from Mr. Hayes, an apothecary and druggist in Cork, who subscribes to the funds of the charity to the extent of a guinea annually. His bill, payable by the treasurer, after having been submitted to the subscribers at the general meeting, had amounted during the last three years as follows, viz.

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	12	-	8
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	8	11	9
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	7	5	11½

The care of the medicine is intrusted to a servant woman, and no portion of it is, on any account, allowed to be sold. There are neither pharmaceutical apparatus nor surgical instruments (except a tooth instrument), nor are leeches ever made use of; the medical attendant is bound by the rules to vaccinate the children of the poor, whenever application is made. His opinion of the preventive efficacy of the practice is very decided, and he states, that the confidence of the public in it is on the increase. There has been very little small-pox in the district latterly; he never inoculates for that disease, but is not prevented doing so if he thought proper.

An account of the number of persons applying for relief is kept by the medical attendant, and it is customary to submit a copy of it to the grand jury, at the period of receiving the annual grant. It appears that during the last three years there has not been a single operation of any kind performed at the dispensary, and during the same period only two midwifery cases have been attended to.

None are entitled to relief but those who have obtained the recommendation of a subscriber. The adherence to this rule is not found to create any impediment to the extension of medical aid among the poor, since the signature of a single subscriber to each recommendation is sufficient, and the number which may be issued is unlimited. The servants of subscribers are at all times attended, and poor persons are allowed to pay if recommended, but there is no reason to suppose that any persons participate in the benefits of the charity except those whose circumstances really place them in need of gratuitous relief.

The patients who present themselves at the dispensary on the public days receive both medicine and advice, and this seems to constitute its chief claim to utility. For, although attendance is professed to be given to the poor at their dwellings, it would appear from one of the printed rules, that such visits must be paid for. In the opinion of the Assistant Commissioners, the poor are not in any case attended; indeed, from the distance at which the medical officer resides, it is quite out of the question, that any patient labouring under either accident or acute disease can receive that speedy or frequent attention which alone is calculated to be productive of benefit. It has been already mentioned that only two lying-in women have been visited by the medical attendant in the course of three years. This statement appeared the more strange when the clergymen who were present at the examination observed, that the ignorance of the midwives, who usually assisted the poor, was of the worst kind. It must be presumed that under such circumstances much injury must often result to both mother and child; however, the medical attendant stated, that "he knew nothing about them."

No food or nourishment is supplied to the sick poor by this or any other institution in the neighbourhood.

The general management is nominally vested in the subscribers, who do not exceed 20 in number. A general meeting is appointed to take place annually, at which business may be transacted by whatever number may attend. Votes are not taken by proxy, but all governors enjoy the same privileges, although not more than six or seven are usually present. Notwithstanding the occurrence of this general meeting, and that the name of the surgeon is not to be found on the list of governors, there are yet abundant grounds for asserting that the real management is in every thing confided to him; this is proved, also, by the entire absence of any record of the proceedings of the general meeting.

No managing committee exists. Its functions, as well as those of the board of superintendence, and of a visiting governor, are discharged by the medical officer.

A treasurer is annually appointed by open voting, who acts without any remuneration. It does not appear that religious feelings are allowed to interfere in his selection, but he does not give the security required by the Act of Parliament. A very remarkable addition to the list of subscribers took place just previous to the occasion on which he was last elected, and it would be most desirable that a veto to prevent improper appointments should be vested in some superior authority. None of the officers hitherto chosen have been either removed or suspended.

There are not any attendants.

A copy of the few rules which exist was procured; they have not been sufficient to prevent a state of things which loudly demands alteration.

Copies of the several reports which have been laid before the general meeting were procured.

The witnesses express a strong desire that a board of health were formed in this district, consisting of the gentry and middling class of farmers. All the gentlemen present declare, that they would most cheerfully participate in any exertions connected with such an establishment as might be necessary for obtaining a correct knowledge of the wants and general condition of the poor.

This dispensary possesses no property of a fixed nature; its entire resources are derived from subscriptions, and an annual grant made by the grand jury. The former are necessarily of a somewhat precarious nature, being to a considerable extent dependent on the good will of two gentlemen, who contribute 10*l.* each. Were these contributions to be discontinued, it would be difficult, if not altogether impossible, to prolong the existence of the charity. The receipts in subscriptions for the last three years have been as follows:

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	51	15	-
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	50	1	-
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	45	6	-

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands.

Payments are made by the treasurer, after the bills have been examined by the subscribers.

The expenditure, during each of the last three years, was as follows:

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	105	1	4
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	103	4	9
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	100	10	11

Once a year the accounts are made up and presented to the subscribers who attend; copies are likewise submitted to the grand jury.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population comprised in the district for which this dispensary is intended is estimated at about 13,000, spread over an extent of country of about seven miles. The nearest medical institutions are the Passage dispensary, six miles; Douglas, five miles; Ballyhassig, six miles distant. There is no other dispensary within this district, the extent of which is considered quite enough for the management of one dispensary. The medical institutions in this part of the country are considered certainly not too numerous, four miles being the greatest extent of country which should be included in one dispensary district.

No patients recommended by a subscriber have been refused relief on application at the institution; but it would be most desirable if intern accommodation were afforded for a few patients, and in every medical district it would be of the utmost importance and an advantage to the poor, if a fever hospital were attached, with a few beds for cases of accident.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The house is built of brick, stone and mortar, two stories high. The room appropriated for dispensing the medicines is very commodious. There is a waiting room for patients; but no supply of furniture. The building is in perfect repair. An excellent and commodious house has been built, at the expense of the funds of this institution, and given to the medical attendants. The situation, as regards the advantages of pure air, is very good, the site being on elevated ground; the supply of pure water is ample, and proper sewers, sewers, &c. are provided. The building contains no baths. A garden and grounds are attached, which, together with the building, occupies about two acres. The whole belongs to the institution, held under a lease for ever, at a ground rent of ten guineas per annum.

The sole medical attendant is about 38 years of age; he graduated at Edinburgh, from which University he possesses a degree, which he produced. He also studied midwifery at Edinburgh and Paris. He resides at the institution, to which he was appointed by election in 1823, previous to which period he had been two years physician to the Rihelagh dispensary. He does not attend any other institution. His appointment is as general medical attendant. In case of illness or temporary absence, he would procure a substitute, by leave of the committee; he is allowed to pursue private practice. The stipulated periods for his attendance are three times a week; Monday, Wednesday and Friday, from ten to one o'clock; but he is in fact in constant attendance. The duty is never done by proxy. In case of any neglect or irregularity on the part of the medical officer, the patients can, by means of any subscriber, have their complaints brought before the committee. The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant in person.

The medical officer's salary is 60*l.* per annum, with an allowance of 15*l.* per annum for a horse, besides his lodgings at the institution. The county can exercise no control to restrain the committee, if they choose to give salaries or allowances higher than necessary, to secure efficient medical officers; nor is there any safeguard but the care of the committee to prevent a combination among the friends of a medical person, to raise an institution at the expense of the county merely for the emolument. It is thought that the grand jury have no preventive control, and as regards this district, such control would be perfectly unnecessary.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers at large, notice being given in the newspapers when a vacancy occurs. A controlling power over the elections would be desirable. A degree from some college or university is indispensable as a testimonial to a candidate. There is no limitation as to age, either in appointing or displacing the officers. On the occasion of the last vacancy, three candidates appeared on the day of election. No notice of testimonials, qualifications, &c. are ever sent to the grand jury; but the conditions for voting at these elections are fully acted up to. There are a great number of medical gentlemen resident in Cork, all of whom are eligible for the appointment; but it is thought none would be willing to serve gratuitously. No superannuation or allowances are made on retiring, nor has any mortality as yet occurred among the medical attendants.

In case of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical attendant, complaint can be made to any subscriber by the poor patients, who are certainly not deterred from so doing from the fear of drawing on themselves the enmity of the medical attendant, or any one else; and they are perfectly well acquainted with this mode of redress. Medical officers are not appointed or retained at this institution against the known feelings of the people, on the contrary, all agree in speaking very highly of the present medical attendant.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed appeared to be very neatly kept, and the drawers, bottles, &c. in good condition; the Assistant Commissioners also found here a very good supply of the necessary medicine of good quality, and in sufficient quantity, including those of the more delicate kinds, such as quinine, morphia, &c. They are supplied by Mr. Gosnell, a druggist and apothecary of Cork, and are paid for by the treasurer out of the funds of the charity, the annual expense being generally under 15*l.*

The stock of medicines is always under the care of the medical attendant, and none are now sold. There is a very good apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c., belonging to the institution. The medical attendant practises, independently of this institution, only as a physician, consequently keeps no medicine for his private patients.

The institution is not at present possessed of any surgical instruments, but they were about being procured; leeches are not supplied to the patients.

The medical attendant keeps a register of the diseases, their terminations, &c.; a copy of which is sent to the grand jury.

When the dispensary was visited, the number of patients attended at their homes was 10, and at the institution 40. There had not been any capital operations performed within the last three years; and only six or eight midwifery cases, the medical attendant being called on only in very bad cases.

The tenants and servants of subscribers presenting a recommendation are entitled to relief, and it is thought that no persons participate in the benefits of the charity who do not require gratuitous assistance. There is a compact made with a few subscribers, who pay 10*s.* 6*d.* per annum, and who receive attendance, and the benefits of the institution for that sum, although the rules require that all persons applying must have a recommendation, yet, no person is ever refused relief, if considered a distressed object. The signature of one subscriber only is necessary to a ticket, and subscribers are not limited in the number of recommendations; it is presumed a poor person requiring a ticket, although not known to any subscriber, could still obtain one, and would not therefore be precluded from the benefits of the charity.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, but all who are unable to come are visited at their own homes, if the distance be within seven miles, and attendance is given as often as the nature of the illness requires, or in the night in any serious or sudden case. If a fracture or accident should occur, the institution possesses the requisite means; splints, bandages, &c., of rendering immediate assistance.

No medical practitioner, unconnected with the institution, is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are attended by the medical officer when sent for, but this does not occur, except in bad cases. The poor women, when lying-in, are attended by midwives, who, in the opinion of the surgeon and the clergymen examined, are most ignorant; injury, if not death, frequently arises from their want of skill, and it has often been in contemplation to raise a fund to get some one properly taught. Daily attendance on the sick is considered absolutely necessary, particularly in acute cases, and such are attended as often as requisite at their own abodes. The medical attendant considers occasional attendance, except in chronic cases, of no use whatever; he dispenses the medicine himself, and performs vaccination on any person presented for it; his opinion of its efficacy is very favourable, and he thinks it is a preventive of small-pox, or at all events, that it very considerably ameliorates that disease; small-pox is not at all frequent in the district. The confidence of the public is very much increasing, and the poor seem anxious to have their children vaccinated. There is no rule to prevent him inoculating with small-pock virus, but he does not, and would not do so.

No nourishment or any extra, such as wine, &c., is ever provided from the funds of this dispensary, nor is there any charitable institution in this neighbourhood on which the medical attendant could give an order to the sick-poor for relief in food, clothing or fuel.

About 23 persons constitute the principal direction. The medical officer is not a governor, nor has he any participation in the management ex officio, or otherwise. The regularly fixed meetings take place once a year, and there is a meeting of the committee quarterly, to which also all subscribers are summoned. These meetings are very regularly attended; the number generally present being about seven or eight; all governors are equally entitled to attend and vote, but, only ladies by proxy. Minutes of the proceedings are very regularly kept.

The committee meet quarterly as already stated, they manage all the concerns of the dispensary, and are appointed annually; minutes are kept of their proceedings. It is not known whether a board of superintendence has been appointed by the grand jury, but during the intervals of meeting, there is not any visiting governor to look after the institution. The governors never visit the patients officially.

The officers are appointed by the subscribers generally; they consist of a treasurer and secretary; they are elected annually; the bye-laws for regulating the elections are not printed; the voting is open, a mode of election which is thought beneficial, and so appeared to the Assistant Commissioners, as all the meetings are held with great regularity. No particular religious belief excludes a person from being an officer. The medical attendant is a Roman Catholic, the treasurer and secretary are Protestants. No sudden accession of governors has happened immediately previous to any election for officers. It is not thought necessary that any control should be placed over the appointments.

The medical attendant is the only paid officer. The treasurer does not give any security. No instance has occurred of the removal or dismissal of an officer.

No officer or member supplies anything to the institution; the only articles required are medicines, but these are not supplied by contract. Nothing belonging to the institution is ever lent or used by any governor or officer.

The rules of this institution are not printed, but were examined by the Assistant Commissioners, and appeared to them to be very good, and calculated to promote the utility of the charity.

A very accurate report of the affairs of the charity is made at every annual meeting to the subscribers, but it is not printed.

A board of health might be readily formed, for whose meetings the District Medical Institution would be a proper place, and a sufficient number of persons will be found in this neighbourhood qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, provided it should be hereafter thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries, and it is here considered that such an extension would be most beneficial.

The receipts derived from subscriptions were in the year

1833 - - - - -	53	16	6

A few of the poorer classes subscribe, as already stated, to entitle them to be attended and get medicine, as there is a rule on the books permitting such a practice. The highest subscription is five guineas, and there are in all about 33 subscribers. The institution depends on very insecure grounds, for, if the annual subscriptions were materially to fall off, it must cease. It possesses no capital or stock from which any income is derived.

The funds are collected by the secretary and remain in the custody of the treasurer, until wanted; there is no money left in the hands of any other officer.

The amount of expenditure on account of this institution was in under the general heads of salary to medical attendant, rent and medicine.

Previously to payment, the bills are examined by the committee, and on their order, signed by at least three of their number, the treasurer hands the amount to the secretary, and the latter makes the payments.

The accounts are made up, audited and reported once a year, and as often presented to the full meeting of the subscribers, and copies sent to the grand jury.

Patients' Regis-

THE district for which this dispensary is intended comprises the greater part of seven parishes, extending five miles in a southerly direction towards Ballycotton. The institutions within six miles are those at Killeh, Middleton and Cloyne; there is no other dispensary within the limits of the district, but one is much required at Ballymacdie, a village, the inhabitants of which are too poor to raise a subscription for the support of a dispensary. No persons have been refused relief from the want of means of accommodation. A dispensary capable of receiving a few fever patients, or a case of bad accident, is not required here, as there is a private fever hospital in the vicinity, into which any bad case of fever or accident would be admitted; there are also wards at Youghal and Middleton for the reception of surgical cases, to which any subscriber could recommend a patient.

A part of the house in which the medical attendant resides is appropriated to the dispensary; it consists of a room for compounding and dispensing the medicines and a waiting room for the patients; both are sufficient for the purposes; they are rented from year to year at the rate of 12*l*.

The sole medical officer is aged about 25 years, he is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, and a licentiate of Apothecaries' Hall in Dublin; has studied for three seasons at the University of Dublin, and taken out one certificate of lectures and dissections; he has also a diploma for six months' attendance at the Lying-in Hospital in Dublin; he was elected as general medical attendant in the year 1828, by the subscribers, on the death of his uncle, the late medical attendant, to whom he served his apprenticeship; he attends no other institution. It has not occurred that he has been absent, and such a contingency is not contemplated or provided for in the regulations. He is allowed private practice; he attends every day in the week from nine until twelve o'clock, and on Tuesday at Kilmahon or Shanagerry. There is no rule to provide for cases of inattention on his part, nothing of the kind having hitherto occurred, but it is understood that the committee would take cognizance of any such complaint, and lay it, if substantiated, before the whole body of the subscribers. The medical officer has an apprentice by whom the medicines are dispensed, and who, being constantly on the spot, would render assistance in case of sudden accident.

The salary of the medical officer is 130 l. per annum, 10*l*. having been lately added to remunerate him for his attendance at the branch establishment at Shanagerry; there is no allowance for a horse, but there is a further sum of 12*l*. a year allowed him for the occupation of part of the house in which he resides for the use of the dispensary.

The medical attendant is elected annually by the subscribers at a general meeting; notice is given in the newspapers previous to the meeting; no competition has hitherto taken place, and it was stated that the proposition for the election of the present medical attendant met with unanimous approval; testimonials are considered indispensable. There is no limitation as to age, either in appointing or displacing medical officers, and there are no superannuations or retiring allowances. Notice of appointment need not be sent to the grand jury; the conditions for voting are acted up to. The neighbourhood is scarcely sufficient to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument, nor is there another qualified medical gentleman resident in the district. The mortality among the medical officers has not been observed. It is not supposed that any medical attendant has been appointed or retained against the known feelings of the people.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed is neatly kept, and every thing appertaining to the compounding, dispensing or preparing of the medicines, which appeared in a satisfactory state. The medicines (which include the more expensive kinds) are of good quality and in sufficient abundance; they are purchased from Messrs. Leslie & Co., of Dublin, and paid for by the treasurer on the order of the committee; they are under the care of the apprentice, and none are ever sold, those kept for private practice being in a separate apartment. The apparatus for preparing decoctions was in very good order; there are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution, the medical attendant provides from his own stock all that are required. Leeches are supplied to the patients when deemed necessary.

A register of each patient's case is kept by the medical attendant, but no copy is lodged with the grand jury. The number of patients attended was, in

1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2,734

No register is kept of those refused attendance. No person who presents a ticket can be refused medicine, but the medical attendant can report to the committee, by whom he must be guided, any case he may think undeserving of recommendation; the number of patients on the books at the time of visiting, was from five to ten attended at their homes, and 33 coming to the institution. There have not been any capital operations performed at this institution within the last three years.

DISPENSARIES.

All those were difficult or dangerous cases.

A recommendation entitles the bearer to relief, and is necessary, except in urgent cases. One signature is sufficient, and two recommendations are allowed to each subscriber of a guinea; the poor are not, however, excluded on this account. The servants of subscribers are not attended. It very rarely happens that persons participate in the benefits of the charity whose circumstances do not require gratuitous relief. At the branch established at Shanagerry there are some poor subscribers whose families are attended gratuitously, in consideration of their subscriptions. It is not likely that if a poor person was unknown to or disliked by the subscribers he would be excluded from the benefit of the county subscription.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and also attended at their own dwellings, within the boundaries of the district. In urgent cases, as many as two or three visits in the day would be and have been frequently paid, and attendance in the night given. In cases of accident, the institution possesses splints, bandages, &c. requisite for affording immediate relief, but the regulations do not permit the prescriptions of any practitioner to be made up at this institution. Difficult and dangerous labour cases are attended, but lying-in women are generally attended by midwives who are for the most part very ignorant. Accidents however are not often observed, and the proportion of deaths in child-birth cannot be stated. Daily attendance on the sick is considered absolutely necessary in acute cases, and such are visited as often as may be required if the distances be not such as to prevent it.

Occasional attendance, except in chronic cases, is not thought of much use. It does not appear from the prescription book that cheap substitutes have been resorted to in place of the medicines usually recommended.

The medical officer is bound to supply vaccine matter gratis as far as he can, and he does so ; his opinion of vaccination is that it modifies and mitigates but does not prevent small-pox ; he is not prevented by any rule from inoculating with small-pock virus, but he would not do so. The confidence of the public in vaccination is very great, and not diminishing. Small-pox has not been frequent of late years.

Nourishment.

This charity does not afford to the sick poor any extra, such as wine, &c. from its funds; neither is there an institution in the neighbourhood on which the medical officer can give an order for food, clothes, or fuel.

Managing Committee.

There is a managing committee elected annually by the subscribers at a general meeting; they meet only when summoned, which generally occurs five or six times in the year. Minutes of their proceedings are kept. There is also a board of superintendence, one of the members of which visited the dispensary early in the month of July.

Officers not
medical.

The offices of treasurer and secretary are united, and are gratuitous. The election to them is annually decided by open voting, but no printed bye-laws exist by which to regulate the appointment. No particular religious belief excludes a person from filling the office. The treasurer gives no security. No instance has occurred of an officer being suspended or removed.

Rules.

The Assistant Commissioners were furnished with a copy of the rules, which appear to be judiciously drawn up and calculated rather to promote than restrict the utility of the institution.

No alterations in the general management have ever been suggested by local authorities or persons resident in the district and unconnected with the charity.

Reports.

Reports of admissions, discharges, cures, relieved, deaths, &c. have never been required until within the last two years. Such are now sent in January and July to the board of superintendence, grand jury room, Cork, but are not printed. The clergy, medical men, gentry and middle class of farmers might be formed into a board of health, and meet at the dispensary for the purpose. This district affords a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor should it be thought expedient to extend the present system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The particular items of the treasurer's accounts could not be ascertained, but the expenditure appeared to have been equal to the income.

Amount of subscription for the year 1833, 110*l.* 7*s.*

None of the poorer classes subscribe except at the branch dispensary at Shanagerry, where alone any stipulation is made by the subscribers for medical advice or relief.

A principal proprietor subscribes 74*l.* per annum, and is the main support of the charity; and should this subscription fall off, the institution would undoubtedly cease to exist, as it possesses no capital stock in houses or lands from which an income is derived.

Collection.
Custody.

The funds are collected by the treasurer or paid to him at the general meeting, and lie in his hands until required.

Expenditure.

The expenditure amounts to about 200*l.* a year, the principal items of which are salary to medical attendant, medicine, dispensary rent, and stationery. In the year 1833 the medicines cost 67*l.* 17*s.* 5½*d.*; this large outlay was caused by the change of the mode of supply effected in that year under the direction of the committee appointed by the grand jury of the county of Cork, which made it necessary to lay in a separate stock for the use of the dispensary, dispensary instead of providing it as heretofore from the establishment of the medical attendant. The bills must be submitted to the committee and signed by two members, appointed to audit them, before they are paid by the treasurer.

The Medical Attendant.

THE Castletown Roche dispensary is the only medical charity within the limits of the district attached to it, and which extends about five miles in every direction, and contains a population of nearly twelve thousand souls. It is considered that a single dispensary could not adequately supply the wants of any greater extent of country. This institution is, however, judiciously situated in the centre of its sphere of action, and there has never been occasion to refuse assistance to any who have applied for it. The total absence of intern accommodation is a want which is often severely felt, the more so as the district is seldom free from fever, for the treatment of which there is at present no hospital provision. It would be most desirable that to this and one or two of the surrounding medical districts, a small hospital should be attached capable of receiving a few fever patients, and of affording assistance to accidents and other surgical cases demanding immediate attention.

Population and
Extent of Country.

A small room connected with the residence of the medical attendant and a narrow passage leading to it, which latter serves as a waiting-room, constitute the space appropriated to the purposes of this dispensary. Both are very ill adapted for the design intended, and yet it would appear that 20*l.* per annum is allowed for their hire. It is, at the same time, right to add, that the present medical attendant has held his situation no longer than about three months, and he has hitherto been unable to procure any other house than the one which he now occupies, and in which the dispensary arrangements are so very incomplete. He has, however, at his own expense, furnished the place with fittings and with a cabinet of shelves and drawers, and he states that it is his intention to move to a more commodious residence as soon as he can meet with it. At present there is no mode of giving baths.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The medical attendant resides at the institution and acts as surgeon, physician, accoucheur and apothecary. He was appointed in June last by the subscribers at large, but the Assistant Commissioners have learned that the vacancy to which he succeeded was the result of a pecuniary compact with his predecessor. He is a graduate of the Edinburgh University, and acquired a diploma to practise midwifery, in Dublin. He holds no other appointment, but is engaged in private practice. He states that he has not hitherto had recourse to a substitute for the performance of his duties, which require his presence at the dispensary on the Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Any irregularity in his attendance would be effectually checked by the committee, who constitute a tribunal to which the poor can, with a certainty of redress, appeal, if they have reason to complain of any inattention. The physician has not any assistant, and dispenses the medicines in person.

Medical Officer

The medical attendant receives a salary of 95*l.* per annum, in addition to which he is allowed 20*l.* towards providing himself with a residence and a place for the dispensary. The amount of his payment rests entirely with the subscribers, who have it in their power to authorize any salary or emolument which they may think proper. The grand jury have no other means of controlling them in this branch of expenditure, than by withholding their usual grant, a proceeding which would entail the cessation of the charity.

Payment.

Persons who subscribe 1*l.* 1*s.* a year have alone the privilege of voting at the election of physician. On the occurrence of the last vacancy, notices inviting candidates were inserted in the newspapers, and it was added, that the possession of a degree from some university or college would be deemed necessary in all. But two candidates however appeared, and there is reason to believe that the matter had been arranged previously to the resignation of the last medical attendant. The grand jury were not acquainted with the proceedings in any stage, nor with the qualifications of the successful candidate. It is thought that there would not be any medical practitioner in this district were it not for the emolument derived from the dispensary. There are very few individuals of wealth residing in it, and certainly not a number sufficient to maintain a medical man by their demand for his services.

Election.

Nothing can be more filthy and disreputable than the condition of the room in which the medicines are kept, these latter, however, appear to be of good quality and in sufficient quantity, including a tolerable supply of quinine, morphia and some other of the more delicate and expensive preparations. The druggists to the institution are the Messrs. Gosnell, of Cork. During the last three years there has been paid to these gentlemen an average of between 60*l.* and 80*l.* a year. They seem to be allowed to receive whatever sum they think proper to charge for their drugs; castor oil is set down in their account at 1*l.* 16*s.* per dozen, the ordinary price of that article being only 1*l.* 4*s.* Every thing else is in the same proportion, and it may be safely stated that the entire supply of medicines required for the purposes of the charity could, under other management, be procured for one-half the sum which they cost at present. Under certain regulations it is permitted that portions of the medicine may be sold to subscribers, and the money thus obtained be brought to the account of the institution. Since the appointment of the present medical attendant, under whose care the medicines always remain, about 5*l.* has been in this manner received. There are neither surgical instruments nor any pharmaceutical apparatus. Leeches are never made use of in the practice of this dispensary, on account, it is said, of their high cost. The medical attendant is bound to supply vaccine matter gratuitously to the poor, when he has it in his power. He speaks favourably of the security against small-pox, which he has observed to be conferred by vaccination, and states, that the confidence of the people in its efficacy is gradually increasing. He expresses the strongest disapprobation of the practice of inoculating with small-pock. He has never done so, although not forbidden by the rules of the charity.

The recent appointment of the physician will explain the limited contents of the register which he is bound to keep of the circumstances under which all applications for relief are made to him, and of which a copy is annually lodged with the grand jury. He was, however, enabled to state, that no refusal of assistance had ever taken place, and that at the period of the examination he was in the habit of attending about six persons every day at their own homes, while not less than 40 came for advice and medicine to the institution. He had not had occasion to perform any important operation since his appointment.

No poor person is entitled to relief (except in cases of accident) unless he has obtained the recommendation of a subscriber. This condition does not impede the extension of the aid of the institution, inasmuch as each subscriber may issue an indefinite number of orders, and his single signature is considered sufficient. The servants of subscribers are always considered legitimate objects for both advice and medicine. This practice cannot be viewed otherwise than in the light of an abuse, as the individuals in question procure medicine to a large amount, and cause great drain upon the funds of the charity.

In addition to his attendance on the public days already mentioned, it forms part of the duty of the physician to visit the sick poor at their dwellings, any where within a distance of five miles. That gentleman states, that if the nature of the illness required it, he would feel himself bound to visit two or three times during the day, and also at night. He observes, that occasional attendance is only of use in chronic disorders. When it is of an acute nature, the patient must be seen every day at least, and in some instances oftener. The dispensary is unprovided with splints or bandages, or the other means for affording proper assistance in case of accidents. Lying-in women are only attended when their condition is accompanied by circumstances of difficulty. In general they intrust themselves to the care of midwives, whose ignorance is represented as extreme, so much so, that fatal consequences not unfrequently result to both the mother and the child who have fallen into their hands.

The dispensary does not supply nourishment of any kind to the sick poor, nor is there any institution in the neighbourhood to do so.

The principal direction resides in the subscribers, who amount to about thirty-nine, and who are accustomed to assemble in general meeting every six months. At these meetings, business may be commenced by any number of members, however small, and in general not more than six or eight persons attend them. Those who are absent are permitted to give in their votes by proxy, and minutes are kept of the proceedings, which do not seem to have been in any degree influenced by the medical attendant.

A managing committee to direct the details of the establishment is elected each year, and are directed to meet every month. Their proceedings are also registered. There exists, further, a board of superintendence acting under the authority of the grand jury; but there are not any visiting governors.

The subscribers annually appoint a treasurer by open voting; but it is understood that the election is limited to individuals of the Protestant persuasion. He receives no salary, neither does he give the security required by the Act of Parliament; and as there are no bye-laws to regulate his appointment, it would undoubtedly be well that some other body than his present electors should have the veto on his election.

Reports of the affairs of the charity are prepared at stated periods, and laid before the grand jury, though not in general printed. They are represented as showing, in a summary manner, every thing connected with the persons who have applied for relief, such as the date of their first attendance, the nature of their disease, and the mode of its termination.

The medical attendant is of opinion, that a permanent board of health should be established in the district, and that the members of it should consist of the gentry, clergy and middling class of farmers.

The income of this charity is derived entirely from annual subscriptions, and from the grant which is allowed every year by the grand jury. It possesses no property of a fixed nature; and as the grant is contingent on the amount of the subscription, the continuance of the institution, in great measure, depends on the latter source, which is the more precarious, since a large portion of it is received from four individuals, who contribute respectively 15*l.*, 10*l.*, 5*l.* and 5*l.* Were they to withdraw their bounty, the dispensary must cease to exist. None of the poorer classes subscribe to it; but formerly many subscriptions were accompanied with a stipulation, that the persons paying should receive medical advice and medicine gratuitously.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands alone they remain.

The expenditure, during each of the last three years, has been as follows:

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	169	9	5 ¹ / ₂
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	168	-	-
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	170	-	-

All bills are examined by the committee previous to their being discharged. They give an order on the treasurer, who pays the amount.

A statement of the accounts is presented to the subscribers at the termination of every half year, and a copy is also submitted to the grand jury.

Persons who attended the Examination.

JONATHAN BRUCE, esq.—DANIEL CLANCHY, esq.—The Apothecary.

THE population of the town of Charleville is about 5,000, and that of the rest of the district (which is very extensive) to which this institution is intended to afford relief, about the same.

There is no other institution within the bounds of this district, nor is there any place where a small fever hospital, with a few beds for the reception of surgical cases is more required than here. It was stated by the apothecary, that he was then in attendance on a wretched creature labouring under a severe attack of fever, who had no resting-place nor shelter but what was afforded by a hole against a mud wall, covered over with straw and rushes. His daughter, a child of about eleven years old, was the only person with him.

The dispensary is held in a small house hired temporarily, in consequence of the defalcation of the late treasurer. There are no baths, gardens or outbuildings attached to it. It is hired from year to year, at a trifling rent. It would certainly be better if the dispensary building were the property of the county.

The principal medical officers are a physician and surgeon. They both reside in the town of Charleville, and were appointed by the subscribers at large as general medical attendants. They are allowed private practice. Before their appointments, they were practising in the town of Charleville. In case of the illness or temporary absence of either, the other would attend for him; but otherwise, the duty is never done by proxy. They attend at the dispensary every day in the week except Sunday.

There is an apothecary, who attends every day in the week, to give out the medicines ordered by the physician. He is always on the spot to afford relief in case of sudden accident, and by him the medicines are dispensed. If he were irregular in attendance, the controlling power lies with the committee.

The salary of the physician is 50*l.* per annum, of the surgeon, 20*l.*, and of the apothecary, 21*l.* per annum; all paid from the funds. No allowances are given for a horse, board or lodging.

If the committee or subscribers authorized salaries higher than sufficient to obtain efficient medical officers the grand jury have no other control than to stop the grant, and they have no power whatever to prevent a medical man combining with a few friends to raise an institution for the sake of the medical appointment, and returning the subscriptions while he retains the county grant.

The medical officers are elected by the subscribers at large; when a vacancy occurs the greatest possible competition is ensured by advertisement. It is thought that it would be in all instances desirable to have a controlling power over the elections to prevent improper appointments.

It is necessary for the candidate for the office of apothecary to be a licentiate apothecary. There is no limitation as to the age of officers, either in appointing or displacing them. There are no superannuations or retiring allowances; no mortality has taken place among the medical officers.

Neither notice of appointment or certificates of qualification are sent to the grand jury. The payment of his subscription entitles a person to vote, and this condition had been complied with. There are persons capable of paying for advice and medicine in this neighbourhood sufficient in number to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary emolument, but no medical man would perform the dispensary duties gratuitously. If the medical officers were guilty of harshness or neglect towards the patients, they can complain to the committee, a mode of redress with which they are perfectly aware. It is thought that no medical officer has been appointed or retained at this establishment against the known feelings of the people.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed is kept with tolerable neatness, and the medicines are of good quality, the stock of them being sufficient, though small. Quinine was the only expensive description of medicine included in the dispensary stock. All are supplied by Messrs. Gosnell of Cork, at an average expense, for the last three years, of nearly 90*l.*, but latterly they have cost not quite so much; they are always under the care of the apothecary, and none are ever permitted to be sold; those belonging to the institution are kept quite distinct from any intended for private practice. The apparatus for preparing decoctions is very good. The institution possesses no surgical instruments whatever. Leeches are never supplied.

A register is kept by the medical attendants, particularizing the disease of each patient and the termination; a copy of this document is lodged with the grand jury. No register is ever kept of those refused admittance. The number of patients on the books at the time of visiting was, "Four attended at home," and about "40 going to the institution." No capital operations have been performed within the last three years, but about 60 midwifery cases have been attended within that period.

All persons are attended, including servants, who produce the recommendation of a subscriber, and this is necessary, and not difficult to obtain, the signature of one subscriber being sufficient, and there being no limit to the number which each subscriber may issue.

It is not to be supposed that if a poor person were unknown to or disliked by the subscriber, he would therefore lose the benefit of county subscription. It rarely happens that persons participate in the benefits of the charity whose circumstances do not require gratuitous relief; but no contract has ever been made with poor subscribers to give them medicine and advice gratuitously, in order to swell the subscription list, and thus obtain large grants from the county.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and sick-poor attended at their own dwellings, within the town and surrounding suburbs. If two or three visits in the day were necessary they would be paid, and attendance in the night would be, and often has been, given. In case of an accident, such as a fractured limb, the institution does not possess the necessary splints, bandages, &c., but attendance would be afforded; the prescriptions of authorized practitioners are not made up at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are visited when recommended; such are usually attended by midwives, who are grossly ignorant. Daily attendance on the sick is considered absolutely necessary in acute cases, and such are attended at their homes, as often as the cases may require. Occasional attendance, except in chronic cases, is considered of no use whatever. Vaccination is performed gratuitously by the apothecary whenever any one is presented for that purpose. The medical officers are bound to supply vaccine matter to the neighbourhood gratis as far as they can; their opinion of vaccination is, that it is preventive, and the confidence of the public is increasing very considerably; small-pox has not been frequent of late years. The medical attendants are not prevented by any bye-law, but do not inoculate with small-pox matter.

No wine or other extra is supplied to the sick from the funds of the charity, but there is a meal and broth fund, raised by private subscription, upon which the physician can give an order.

There are 47 subscribers; the fixed meetings are annual and are regularly attended; as many as come constitute a meeting, and seven or eight usually attend; all subscribers are equally entitled to attend and vote, but not by proxy; minutes of their proceedings are kept. Medical or salaried officers are not governors, nor allowed any material participation in the general management. The institution has not been essentially under the management of the surgeon, nor is any person, ex officio, in the principal direction of its affairs.

There is a managing committee who meet twice a year; minutes of their proceedings are kept. There is also a board of superintendence, appointed by the grand jury; during the intervals of the meetings of the committee no visiting governors act, nor do the governors ever visit the patients officially.

The treasurer and secretary are appointed by the subscribers annually. There are no printed bye-laws regulating these elections. The voting is open, and the manner of election (except in the case of the treasurer) has been found beneficial. No particular religious belief excludes a person from being an officer. The treasurer and secretary are unpaid officers. The treasurer does not give the security required by Act of Parliament, and this not being done, cost the institution a large sum (nearly 300 l.), as the late treasurer died considerably in its debt, and the sum has not been, nor will it be, recovered. No instance has occurred of an officer having been suspended or removed.

The subscriptions for the year 1832 amounted to 100 l., the county grant to 100 l.; for 1834, subscriptions, 115 l. 6s. 6d.; county grant, 115 l. In May 1833, the late treasurer died in debt about 300 l. to the charity; he had returned to the committee, as paid, the druggist's bill, the salaries of apothecary and surgeon and other items, which all remained due at the time of his death. None of the poorer classes subscribe to the funds of this charity, the continuance of which mainly depends on the bounty of two or three principal subscribers, amongst whom is a nobleman, who annually contributes the sum of 20 l. Subscriptions are never attended by any stipulation in favour of the subscribers, or any one of his family. The charity possesses no capital stock in houses or lands from which an income is derivable.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and lie in his hands till wanted.

Since the defalcation of the late treasurer, the system adopted of accounts appears to be good, but it has only been in operation for a short time.

Cloyne Dispensary.

Rev. D. FREEMAN.—Rev. J. RUSSELL, P. P.—Rev. W. WELLAND, Curate.—JOHN LOYD WILKINSON, esq.—Rev. Dr. WINGSTON.—The Medical Attendant.

Population and Extent of Country.

THIS dispensary is intended for the medical aid of the parish of Cloyne, including the village of Ballycotton, for the parish of Churchtown, and for part of five adjoining parishes, which, taken together, contain a population of 11,000 souls. There are similar charities at Middleton, Aghada and Castlemartyr, places all less than 10 miles distant, but no other institution of the kind within its own proper districts, which extends, in some directions, as far as five miles. It has, however, been always found to answer the purposes for which it was established. The witnesses speak of the advantages that would result from the formation of judiciously arranged medical districts possessed of intern accommodation for a few fever patients and for accidents. They refer to the establishment of the kind already existing here in connexion with the dispensary, but which hardly deserves the name of hospital, being nothing more than a dismal and dirty upper story, or loft, adjoining the dispensary, which has been furnished with a few bedsteads.

Building, Furniture and Grounds.

A single room is all that is appropriated to the uses of this institution. Although it be on the ground floor, and in very bad repair, quite unprovided with the necessary fittings, a rent of 10 l. a year is paid for it to the trustees of a charity, consisting of a donation made by the Bishop of Cloyne, from whom it is held, without lease, from year to year. A small garden of of a quarter of an acre is attached to it, and both are occupied by the paid assistant of the attending surgeon.

The present medical attendant, who was appointed by the subscribers at a general meeting held at the origin of the institution, acts in all the branches of his profession, and resides close to the dispensary, where he is bound to attend every day, except Sunday, from ten until twelve o'clock. He is about 55 years of age, and had been a surgeon in the navy, to which he was admitted after having passed an examination at the College of Surgeons. For midwifery he was educated at the Westminster lying-in hospital. He is engaged in private practice; but whenever his temporary absence becomes necessary, his duties are performed by a gentleman who is always on the spot, an assistant surgeon in the navy, who is paid, and has received the sanction of the committee to act as his substitute. Medicine is always dispensed by one or the other of these gentlemen, of whom the former alone is paid from the funds of the institution. His salary is nominally 80*l.* a year; but from the low state of the funds he has seldom been paid in full, and in the year 1832 it only amounted to 70*l.* He has no allowance for a horse or for lodgings. It is admitted that the subscribers have it in their power to pay whatever salaries they please.

The grand jury can no otherwise control them than by withholding their grant altogether.

The medical officer is appointed by the subscribers, and all candidates for the situation are required to produce testimonials of their qualifications, which are weighed, without any reference to age. At the last election there were two candidates. The neighbourhood possesses sufficient persons of property to maintain a medical man, independent of a public situation, and there are two practitioners residing in it, unconnected with any institution; but neither of them would be willing to serve gratuitously. When any cause of complaint exists against the medical officer, redress is easily obtained by a statement laid before the committee by the subscribers, to whose knowledge the inattention or irregularity had come. The poor are represented to be aware of this, and in such cases the committee would be called together. In no existence has an officer been retained who had lost the confidence or good-will of the people.

The stock of medicines is very scanty, and appears to be of very inferior quality. There was neither morphia nor quinine, nor indeed any of the more delicate preparations, and the dispensary room showed but little neatness in its arrangement. The annual expense of medicine for each of the last three years, as paid for by the treasurer, had amounted to from 45*l.* to 50*l.* It had been purchased from Harrington & Co., druggists, in Cork. It remains under the care of the assistant, and no part of it is permitted to be sold under any circumstances, being kept, at all times, separate from the medicine which the physician makes use of in his private practice. The only surgical instrument is the stomach pump, and leeches are not supplied to the poor. Vaccination is not regularly attended to, although the physician states both that "his own opinion is in favour of its utility, and the confidence of the public in it is daily increasing." He is not allowed to inoculate with small-pox.

The assistant keeps a very full register of the number of applications made for relief, distinguishing the circumstances under which each patient applies; 7,000 persons have been relieved from the funds of the charity within the last three years, and none have been refused. During that period there had not been any necessity for the performance of a capital operation. At the time that this examination was held, there were on the books the names of six persons as being treated at home, and of 20 as in the habit of coming to the dispensary.

By the rules of the establishment, those persons only are entitled to receive relief from it who have obtained the recommendation of a subscriber. This condition is, however, in urgent cases frequently dispensed with, and at all times an order can be procured, even by a stranger, from the treasurer, who resides close to the dispensary, and who describes his house as being continually beset with applicants. A single signature is sufficient for each recommendation, and a subscriber is entitled for every guinea subscribed to have two patients on the books. None of the poorer subscribers receive assistance gratuitously; but it is believed that many other persons derive relief from the dispensary whose circumstances should place them above the receipt of charity.

Extern patients are seen at the institution at the time already mentioned, and in addition those poor persons residing in the district, whose sickness confines them within doors, are visited at their homes, both by day and night, as often as their cases require such attention. The medical attendant remarks, that "he finds it absolutely necessary to see all cases of acute disorder at least once a day; less frequent visits are of no service, and only answer where a patient labours under disease in a chronic form." Prompt assistance is always to be had when accidents occur, and the institution has always ready a sufficient supply of splints and bandages, &c. necessary in such cases. The generality of the midwives in this district are represented to be ignorant in the extreme. Only one woman is spoken of as possessed of even ordinary skill. Fortunately, when circumstances of difficulty arise, the poor have it in their power to call in the services of the dispensary surgeon.

The funds of this charity are not sufficiently ample to permit of any thing besides medicine and advice being supplied to the sick poor. There is, however, another institution for the relief of the "indigent sick," which is intended to afford wine, fuel and clothing when necessary, and on which the medical attendant has the power of giving orders.

The general management is controlled by an annual meeting of the subscribers, which takes place in March, at the summons of the secretary, for the purpose of auditing the treasurer's accounts, and receiving the subscriptions for the ensuing year; about six persons generally attend this meeting, and the proceedings and resolutions are always recorded.

A list exists of the members of a managing committee, who are instructed to meet on the first Monday in each month; but this duty has not been performed for a considerable time.

There is, however, a board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury, and they have visited the institution on two occasions during the last twelve months.
There is only one non-medical officer, namely, the treasurer, whose appointment has no reference to the religious belief he may profess. The present treasurer, who is also the secretary, receives no emolument for services, but is not required to give any security.
Every half-year a report is made of the state of disease in the district, of the number of persons who have received relief, and of the general affairs and prospects of this charity. This document is laid before the grand jury, who require to be most minutely informed in every particular.
The income of this charity is derived from two sources, viz. from annual subscription and from the county grant. The receipts under these heads for the last three years were as follow :

Expenditure.

The subscribers are nearly confined to the richer classes, and three individuals contribute considerably more than one half of the gross amount of subscriptions. On the continuance of the bounty of these persons the existence of the charity altogether depends. If it were withdrawn, it must fall to the ground.
Subscriptions as are not paid at the annual meeting, are collected afterwards by the treasurer.
The funds lie in the hands of the treasurer ; but from the manner in which one portion of them is paid, he can never hold, at any one time, more than one-half of the entire annual income. This arises from the circumstance that the subscriptions are paid at the commencement of the year ; but the county's grant not until six months afterwards.

THE dispensary of Doneraile is the only medical charity in the district attached to it, which contains a population of nearly 12,000 souls, and extends in some directions to a distance of ten miles. There are, however, institutions of a similar character at Buttrvant, Mallow, Kildorrery and Castledown Roche, each of which places is only six miles off ; but, as has been observed, none of these towns are within the limits of the district under consideration. Owing to the situation of these dispensaries, the general country about Doneraile is considered to be adequately provided with the means of medical relief, if exception be made of that portion of its own district which is most remote, and which it is thought exceeds by nearly five miles the utmost limits thought to be assigned to the care of one medical attendant. It is stated by the witnesses, that there has never been occasion to refuse assistance to any person who has made application for it at this charity ; but they complain much of the inconvenience and evil consequences which result from its being entirely unprovided with any intern accommodation. When any accident or disease of a serious nature occurs, it is necessary to send them to the County Infirmary at Mallow. This serious want, it is suggested, could be remedied by the formation of new or the reconstruction of the present dispensary districts. Each district might still be provided with a dispensary ; but the improvement would consist in placing a small hospital, containing a few beds for medical and surgical cases, in such a position with respect to every three or four districts, as would present the most advantages to the surrounding population.
A house in the town, which is hired at an annual rent of 16 l., is occupied by the medical attendant as a residence ; a single room in it, of very small dimensions, and affording no accommodation to the patients, is appropriated to the purposes of the dispensary. There are no outbuildings or grounds, but a small slipper bath has been provided. Establishments of this kind should always be held on lease, and should be the property of the county.
The duties of this dispensary are performed by a gentleman who resides at the institution ; the public days being Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday in each week. On the resignation of Dr. Norcott, he was appointed to the situation, to which he is attached in the capacity of general medical attendant ; he is also engaged in private practice ; he is a graduate of the Edinburgh University, and is at present about 30 years of age ; he has never had occasion to perform his duties by proxy, but there exists no regulation on this point. The medicine is dispensed by the medical attendant in person, whose residence on the spot ensures immediate attention to any demand for his services.

A salary of 50*l.* per annum is paid to the attending physician from the general funds of the charity; he has also the advantage of a residence rent-free, but receives no assistance towards the maintenance of a horse. The Assistant Commissioners endeavoured to ascertain whether there existed any sufficient authority to prevent the payment of higher salaries than might be necessary to procure efficient officers; they were informed that there was none, and that the control of the grand jury was by no means adequate to the point, as they had no other means of checking extravagance than by withholding the sum which they are accustomed to grant every year. The witnesses, however, declare that nothing of the kind can be expected to occur here, although they are ready to admit that the abuse may exist elsewhere.

The election of the physician resides in the subscribers of a guinea a year; when a vacancy occurs, notice of the day on which it is intended to fill it is always given by advertisement in the newspapers, stating also, that the candidates will be expected to produce a degree from some university or college. There is no limitation as to age; and on occasion of the last vacancy there were three candidates. There has not been any mortality among the medical officers, neither would any allowance or pension be granted in case of resignation; it is not considered necessary to inform the grand jury of any appointment that takes place. The subscribers retain in their hands the power of calling the attending physician to account for any irregularity or inattention in the discharge of his duties. The poor are represented to be aware of this mode of obtaining redress, and are not likely to hesitate in availing themselves of it. Although there are a considerable number of wealthy residents in this neighbourhood, quite sufficient to maintain a medical man, without his being connected with any public establishment, yet it is said that no gratuitous attendance could be procured at the dispensary. A very respectable physician (Dr. Norcott), who was present at the examination observed, that neither he nor the other practitioner who resided in the district, either could or would serve without remuneration.

There was an appearance of much neatness in the room in which medicine is dispensed. There was a very abundant supply of drugs of a good quality, including quinine, morphia, and some other of the more delicate preparations. The cost of the medicine (which remain under the immediate care of the medical attendant, who is not permitted to sell any part), had amounted to about 16*l.* for each of the last three years, and they had been procured from a person unconnected with the establishment. The supply of pharmaceutical apparatus was good, but there were not any surgical instruments; and it was stated that leeches were found too expensive to be employed in dispensary practice. Each leech costs a shilling in the town.

No provision is made for the diffusion of vaccination, although the opinion of the medical attendant is favourable to the utility of the practice. Small-pox has lately prevailed to a considerable extent. Above 200 children in the district, and as many as 25 cases in the town itself, have died from the disease within the last year. All these individuals had been inoculated with variolous matter by an apothecary of the town; and the subsidence of the disorder is rendered nearly impossible, by the existence of a class of men who travel about the country, and procure a livelihood by disseminating it through the means of inoculation. The rules of the dispensary do not preclude the medical officer from adopting the same custom, but he states his unwillingness to have recourse to it.

A register is kept by the medical attendant, which distinguishes the name and residence of each patient applying for relief, as well as of the individual who recommends him. It also specifies the disease under which the applicant labours. A copy of this register is annually submitted to the grand jury. At the date of the Assistant Commissioners' visit, the book in question contained the names of six persons who were under treatment at their own dwellings, and of between twenty and thirty others, who were in the habit of coming to the dispensary for advice and medicine. There had been no operations of importance performed for a period of three years; but during that time the physician had been called to see about 150 cases of lying-in women.

All persons (including the servants of subscribers) are entitled to receive relief from this dispensary, on producing the recommendation of a subscriber. As there is no limit to the number of such orders, which each subscriber is privileged to issue, and as his single signature is sufficient, there can be no reason to suppose that any one, even a stranger, finds difficulty in availing himself of the aid of the physician. On the other hand, there are grounds for believing that, although there is no stipulation that any of the poorer subscribers shall receive advice and medicine in return for his contribution, yet a good many persons participate in the benefits of the charity, whose circumstances by no means place them in need of gratuitous relief.

In addition to the patients who are relieved at the institution on the days of public attendance, as has been already mentioned, the surgeon is bound to visit, at their own dwellings, such persons as may be unable to seek assistance in Doneraile. These visits may be called for in any part of the district, which extends, in one direction, to a distance of ten miles. Speaking of this portion of his duty, the medical attendant observes, "that he is ready to attend at all hours, both day and night; and should the case require it, and the distance admit, to the extent of two or three visits in the twenty-four hours." He adds, that occasional attendance is of little, if of any, use, except in cases of chronic disease. Where a patient labours under an affection of an acute nature, it becomes indispensably necessary that he should be seen by his physician every day. Lying-in women are at all times entitled to call for the assistance of the medical attendant. In general, however, the females of the poorer classes are attended by midwives who are represented to be very unfit for their business, and by whose ignorance and unskilfulness much injury, it is said, is caused to both mother and child. It is the custom, in this institution, to compound the prescriptions which may be sent in by one of the neighbouring physicians, who was the predecessor of the present medical attendant at this dispensary.

The Doneraile Dispensary does not supply nourishment of any kind to the sick poor; neither is there any charity in the neighbourhood, from which any thing of the kind can be procured, if deemed necessary by the attending physician.

The general management resides in the subscribers at large, who are in number about 21. The rules direct that they shall hold a meeting every year; this is, however, not observed with much regularity, as seldom more than four or five are present at it, although all governors are equally privileged to attend and vote, but not by proxy. Minutes are not kept of the proceedings of these meetings, but it would appear that business may be transacted by any number, however small, of subscribers. There is no reason to suppose that the surgeon has been allowed to exercise any undue share in the direction of the institution.

A managing committee has been nominated, but there exists (if they have ever met) no account of the measures which it has from time to time adopted. The grand jury have not appointed a board of superintendence, nor have the subscribers elected any visiting governor to act in the intervals of the assembling of the committee.

The only non-medical officer is the treasurer, who receives no payment for his services, and is not required to give any security, although such is pointed out by the Act of Parliament. This functionary is elected by open voting, a mode which has been found very beneficial. It is stated that religious prejudices have never been allowed to interfere in the appointment of officers, nor has there ever been any sudden creation of governors, with a view to carry an election; still it is thought that it would be right to vest in some superior authority a veto to prevent improper appointments. No officer has ever been suspended.

Once in each year a report is prepared relating to the number of persons who have obtained relief, and to the other affairs of the institution. It is not usual to print these documents, but copies of them are always submitted to the subscribers and to the grand jury. In this district there are abundant means for an accurate investigation of the wants of the poor. It is stated by the witnesses that there are a large number of persons who are both qualified and willing to take part in any inquiry which might be deemed necessary, with reference to the condition of the labouring classes. It is further observed, that the establishment of a permanent board of health would be productive of great advantage, and might be conveniently conducted in the district dispensary.

This institution possesses no property of a fixed nature. It is solely supported by annual subscriptions, and by grants allowed by the county. Among the subscribers are to be found no individuals of the poorer classes, and there is a very great inequality in the amount of the respective contributions, a nobleman of the neighbourhood giving annually a sum of 20 guineas. One of the consequences of this disproportion is, that as the donation in question forms a large part of the total income, the existence of the charity becomes mainly dependent on the bounty of one individual, and that if he were to withdraw his support, it could hardly continue in operation.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands alone they are allowed to remain.

The details of expenditure are controlled solely by the treasurer. By him alone are all bills examined, and he pays them on his own responsibility.

Rev. Mr. BEGLY, R.C.C.—The Medical Attendant.

THE dispensary of Dunbollogue and Whitechurch united, supplies the medical wants of a population of about 12,000. It is judiciously situated very nearly in the centre of its district, which is about eight miles long by 11 broad, so that the medical attendant has not, in any direction, to go a greater distance than between four and five miles. There are five institutions of a similar character within six miles of this one, viz. at Middleton, Cork, Blarney, Glanmire and Glenville, but none of these are included in its proper district. Though in most points sufficient for the ends designed, it is nevertheless thought by the witnesses, that it embraces rather too great a range of country. This objection made itself peculiarly felt when the cholera prevailed; at that time many cases of the disease manifested themselves at a place called Bottle-hill, but as it was nearly five miles off, though included in the district, it was almost impossible to bestow on the patients that degree of constant attention which their situation so urgently required. The total want of intern accommodation is less felt, because the proximity of the city of Cork affords opportunity of obtaining admission into its hospitals for ordinary cases. A ward for the reception of accidents would, however, be greatly desired.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

A very neat and commodious house is appropriated to the use of the medical attendant of this charity, as a residence. He expresses himself as quite satisfied with it in every particular, except that the walls are somewhat damp, and the thatch rather out of repair. The furniture which it contains is his own. A portion of the house (to which there is a separate entrance from an adjoining lane) consisting of two rooms, one to contain medicine, the other a waiting room, is appropriated to the purposes of the dispensary. Both rooms are small. The floor of the waiting room is of clay, and liable to damp, but otherwise, every thing is in good order. A stable and coach-house, both occupied by the medical attendant, are attached to the house, which also possesses a small garden. The entire premises are held from year to year, at an annual rent of 8*l.* 8*s.*

The

The sole medical attendant is a gentleman, 29 years of age, who holds the situation since the month of July 1833, when he was appointed by the committee in the united capacity of surgeon, physician, accoucheur and apothecary. He is not connected with any other medical charity; but is at all times permitted to attend to the calls of his private practice. He possesses the degree of M. D. and is a member of the College of Surgeons in Edinburgh, where, as well as at Dublin, he obtained his education in midwifery. In the interval between the termination of his studies and his coming here, he was settled as practitioner in Cork. He now resides entirely at the dispensary, and seldom has occasion to discharge his duties by proxy. When, however, illness or other causes require his temporary absence, he is accustomed to provide a substitute, who must previously obtain the approbation of the committee. With respect to the relief of cases of sudden accident, it is stated, that he is always on the spot, except when professionally engaged elsewhere. He alone dispenses medicine. The committee is represented as a tribunal to which the poor can appeal with a certainty of redress, in case they should have reason to complain of any inattention on the part of the medical officer.

The medical attendant receives no allowance for a horse or other conveyance. He is provided with a residence, as has been already mentioned. The control exercised by the grand jury over the expenditure of the funds of the dispensary is but of a limited nature. If an improper application of them were made, as in the giving unnecessarily profuse salaries, it is stated that the grand jury could withhold their presentment altogether, but could not attach any conditions to the disposal of it, if granted.

The appointment of the medical officer is made by subscribers of 1*l.* 1*s.* annually and upwards, all of whom are equally entitled to vote at the election. When a vacancy occurs, notice of the intention of filling it, is usually given in the newspapers, for the purpose of obtaining as much competition as possible. On the last occasion of this kind, 12 or 14 candidates presented themselves, who were all required to produce testimonials of their having obtained a degree in some recognized university. No limitation was made as to their age, nor were they obliged to submit their testimonials to the consideration of the grand jury. The circumstances of the persons who inhabit this district are not, the witnesses state, of such a nature as would be likely to maintain a medical practitioner, independently of the remuneration afforded by the dispensary, and they further add, that there could not be found any physician who would undertake the attendance on the poor gratuitously. None of the medical men hitherto attached to the dispensary have died while in connexion with it. Neither superannuations nor retiring allowances enter into the plan of the charity.

The room in which the medicines were kept had an aspect of considerable neatness. There was the usual and necessary stock of bottles and drawers, and all appeared in good keeping, and to contain an adequate supply of medicine of a very good quality. The Assistant Commissioners also noticed the presence of the more delicate and expensive preparations, such as quinine, morphia, &c. and they were informed that all had been purchased from Mr. Dargaville, a druggist in Cork. This gentleman is not a governor or subscriber. His account is annually discharged by the treasurer, on the order of the committee, and it has not exceeded during any of the last three years the sum of 20*l.* The stock of medicine is under the care of the surgeon, who always keeps it under lock and key, and is not permitted to sell any of them, under any circumstances, or to dispose of them, otherwise than for the purposes of the charity. He keeps no medicine for his private patients, nor has he been supplied with any surgical or other instruments for his dispensary practice. This charity does not supply leeches for the poor. Vaccination, however, forms one of its objects, and the medical attendant is bound to vaccinate gratuitously the children of the poorer classes. The rules of the establishment do not absolutely forbid the use of small-pox matter, but the physician observes, that "he is, on every account, averse to inoculation, and that he has never, in any instance, practised it."

A very ample and accurate register is kept by the medical officer, in which are detailed the name of the subscriber who recommends the patient, together with the name, residence, and the nature of the disease of the latter, as also the date of the commencement of his treatment, and his age. An extract of this register is annually sent to the grand jury. From the last extract, referring to the year 1832, it appeared that the total number of applications for relief during the year had amounted to 1,696, of which, ten were cases of persons labouring under cholera. At the period of the examination, there were on the books the names of three persons whom the surgeon was attending at their homes, and of 26 other patients who were in the habit of coming to the dispensary for relief. The medical attendant stated that he had not had occasion to perform any operation of importance, and that he had not attended more than eight cases of midwifery, since his appointment. He is expected to attend to every person who brings with him the recommendation of a governor, but he is at liberty to exercise his discretion in certain cases, and to refuse his assistance to individuals, whom he considers as unfit objects for the benefits of the charity. In taking this step, he is, however, bound to mention the circumstance to the committee, together with his reasons.

It has been just stated that any one provided with a recommendation from a subscriber is entitled to demand the assistance of the medical attendant of this dispensary. He is also liable to be called on by the domestic servants of all the subscribers, and by a numerous class of persons whose circumstances do not in any way require that they should be provided with relief in such a manner.* Strictly speaking the surgeon is not bound to attend to any applicant applicant that cannot produce the recommendation of a governor, one signature, however, to the recommendation gives it full force, and there is no limit to the number which any one subscriber is entitled to issue. It is added that there is no risk that any one should be excluded from the aid of the charity, merely from the circumstance of his being a stranger or unknown.

Those patients who present themselves at the dispensary are supplied with advice and medicine by the medical attendant, who is also in the habit of visiting at their own dwellings those persons who may be unable to meet him elsewhere, provided they be situated within the limits of the district; and this attention, it is stated, would be rendered to the extent of two or three visits in the day, if required. In cases of accident, however, the charity is altogether deficient in the splints, bandages, &c. which are so necessary for giving perfect assistance. The only prescriptions which are compounded at this dispensary are those of its medical attendant; who, however, is not accustomed to enter them in any book. Having already observed that he is in the habit of attending the poor at their own dwellings, the surgeon further observes that he considers daily attendance absolutely indispensable in cases of acute disorder. He states he is also accustomed to visit poor women in their confinement, and that nothing can possibly exceed the ignorance of the midwives to whom the poor have in general recourse. The fatal injury to the mother does not arise to any great extent, yet numerous instances occur where the life of the child is sacrificed to their unskilfulness.

There are not any institutions in the neighbourhood to supply the sick poor with either food or other necessary comforts.

The general management of this charity resides in the subscribers at large, who should, by their own regulations, assemble in half-yearly meetings, but who, it is stated, have hitherto done so but once a year. At this meeting not more than five or six governors usually are present, but the votes of all those who do not attend are received by proxy. The medical attendant is not a governor, nor does he take any prominent part in the affairs of the institution.

A managing committee is annually appointed, with the intention that it should assemble every month, but this rule has been so little observed, that the last entry of their meeting in the proceedings books, bears the date of January 1834, (eight months previous to the date of this examination). There is not a visiting governor, but, it is stated, that the charity was inspected by a member of the grand jury, last May.

The only non-medical officer is the treasurer, who neither receives a salary, nor is required to give the security demanded by the Act of Parliament. There are not any printed bye-laws for regulating his appointment, neither are there any grounds for supposing that it is all influenced by religious feelings. The present treasurer is a Protestant gentleman, and indeed the only Protestant in the parish. It has never been found necessary to cancel the appointment of any officer.

Twice a year a report of the affairs of the dispensary is laid before the grand jury, but it is not printed for distribution. The witnesses were asked whether if a more extended system of dispensary relief were deemed expedient, they were of opinion that a sufficient number of individuals existed in the neighbourhood to attend to and control it? They stated, in reply, that a considerable number of persons could at all times be found, who would give every attention to such a system, and who would willingly take a part in any more minute investigation into the wants of the poor.

On an average of the last three years the annual receipts under the head of subscriptions have amounted to about 65 l. A very large proportion of this, viz. 23 guineas, is received from one gentleman and his family. Of the remainder much consists of small sums paid by individuals of the poorer classes, who, to a great extent, as has been already detailed, accompany their contribution with an express stipulation that they shall receive medical relief in return.

The custody of all the funds rests with the treasurer.

About 120 l. has been expended by this charity during each of the last three years, the principal heads of outlay having been the salary of the medical attendant, the rent of his house, and medicine. The treasurer discharges the bills that become due, but not until they have been previously examined by the committee, upon whose order alone money is paid.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district of this dispensary, of which the most remote point is about 12 miles distant, includes a population of nearly 18,000 souls. There are, however, similar institutions at sary recommendation is completely precluded by the low rate of subscription. Any person who contributes 2 s. 6 d. annually to the charity is entitled to relief on making application for it in person. If he increase his subscription to 5 s., his family, however large, become possessed of the same privilege; and for 10 s. a year they must be visited at their own dwellings. These regulations press with peculiar severity on the medical attendant, who is thus, for a trifling salary, made the drudge of a large and impoverished dispensary district. The individual in question, in the present instance, is a well-informed and intelligent gentleman. His testimonials are most creditable to him, and his medical certificates are of the highest order.

Newmarket and at Kanturk, distant respectively six and seven miles. The witnesses are of opinion, that a dispensary district should never exceed 10 miles in diameter, and they observe that the present one would be altogether too extensive, were it not that a branch dispensary has been opened at Kilbolane, where the poor are received and relieved by the medical attendant of Freemount. The funds of the Freemount establishment have hitherto been sufficient to allow of extern aid being afforded to all applicants, but much and serious inconvenience has often arisen, from the entire absence of any internal accommodation. The witnesses would be most anxious to see the establishment of judicious medical districts, to each of which a dispensary, of this actual kind, might be attached, but they would propose, that to a certain number of such districts, varying according to circumstances, there should be added an hospital, capable at least of receiving a few fever patients and cases of bad accidents, together with a limited number of persons labouring under surgical and medical disorders.

A small building which had been once a barrack, is now appropriated to the purposes of the dispensary, and answers its object very well. It is in tolerable repair, but does not contain any apparatus for the administering of baths. There are not any outbuildings attached.

The sole medical attendant is a licentiate of the Edinburgh University, aged 32, who was appointed as a general practitioner by the subscribers at large, about three years ago. He produced his diploma from the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, showing that he was properly qualified to practise midwifery. Previous to entering upon his present situation, he had resided as physician in Charleville. He now resides entirely at the dispensary, and is still engaged in private practice, in addition to attending at the branch dispensary which has been already referred to, and is distant from Freemount about five miles. It is stated that he has rarely, if ever, occasion to absent himself from his post, but in contemplation of his being sometimes engaged elsewhere; there exists a resolution of the subscribers, empowering him to appoint a substitute.

The periods of the physician's attendance at the dispensary are on Mondays and Thursdays from ten until two o'clock; at these hours he prescribes and gives medicine to the poor of the district who present themselves at Freemount; and on Saturdays from eleven until three he attends for the same purpose at Kilbolane. On the score of regularity in these duties, the subscribers possess every necessary control over him, and there is just reason to suppose that they would speedily redress any complaint of inattention made by the poor. At the same time it would seem, that sufficient care is not taken to have some qualified person always at hand in cases requiring immediate assistance. Medicine is never dispensed but by the medical attendant in person.

The salary of the physician is fixed at 100*l.* per annum; no allowance is made to him for either board or lodging, or for the maintenance of his horse. The subscribers have it in their power to determine, as they please, the amount of payment to the medical officer; and even if they should raise it to a sum beyond that necessary to secure a well-educated officer, the grand jury can in no other way check them than by withholding altogether their annual grant. It is, observe the witnesses, quite possible, that an unprincipled man should combine with his friends to raise a dispensary, with the sole end of being appointed to it, and that he should covenant to return them their subscriptions when that end had been obtained.

Vacancies in the situation of medical attendant are filled up by the subscribers, and previous to the election it is customary to insert, in the newspapers, an advertisement, in order to insure as extensive a competition as possible. It is required that all candidates shall have taken his degree of M. D. in some university, but the witnesses are of opinion that some power of controlling the appointment should exist, foreign to the body of subscribers, who become qualified to vote solely in right of their annual guinea. At the last election there was but the one candidate, although there was no limitation as to age. There is no obligation to apprise the grand jury of an intended appointment, nor is it necessary that they should be furnished with a copy of the successful candidate's qualifications. There are not many individuals of wealth residing in the vicinity of Freemount; certainly not sufficient to maintain by their patronage any medical man independent of a public situation; the consequence is, that the attendant of the dispensary is the sole practitioner in the district. There has not as yet occurred any death among the medical men, who have been attached to the dispensary; and neither retiring allowances nor superannuations enter into its design. To what has been already mentioned of the readiness of the committee to redress any complaint of inattention on the part of the physician, the witnesses now add, "that no officer has ever been retained in the service of this charity after it had been learned that he ceased to possess the confidence of the people."

The Assistant Commissioners had reason to be satisfied with the general appearance and condition of the room in which the stock of medicine was kept. They found a good supply of medicine, of excellent quality and in proper preservation. They had, however, to remark, that no provision had been made of morphia, quinine, or of other more delicate remedies. They were informed that all had been purchased from Messrs. Harrington, druggists, of Cork, and that the cost in each of the two preceding years had amounted to 30*l.*, having been but 22*l.* in the year previous; as to the care taken of them, they are kept under lock, but the key was generally left in the hands of the servant.

From the remote and mountainous nature of the country in which this dispensary is situated, it has been deemed necessary to adopt the practice of allowing the sale of its medicines to individuals in the neighbourhood. This has not, however, taken place to any great extent; and the proceeds have always been brought to the account of the institution.

The usual apparatus for preparing decoctions and for other necessary purposes is attached to the pharmacy; but there are no surgical instruments whatsoever provided, neither do the funds of the charity enable the physician to make use of leeches in his practice among the poor. It is part of his duty to supply vaccine matter gratuitously as far as he is able. He states, that "his experience leads him to form an opinion very favourable to its preventive efficacy, or at least to its powers in moderating any attack of small-pox which may happen to follow it; the confidence of the public in it is also rather on the increase; inoculation with small-pox he is decidedly adverse to, although the rules of the dispensary do not expressly forbid it." The latter disease has recently prevailed to a great extent in the district, and several cases of it have terminated fatally, not less than 30 in the last six months.

The physician keeps a register of all the applications for relief which are made to him in connexion with the charity; in it are particularized the nature and the termination of the disease under which each person labours; it appeared from it that there never had been occasion to refuse relief to any applicant; and that at the time of the Assistant Commissioner's visit, about 22 individuals were under treatment. The physician stated, that, during the previous three years, he had performed but one capital operation, which turned out successfully; in the same period he had attended to upwards of 150 lying-in women. A copy of the register is annually submitted to the grand jury.

The recommendation of a governor alone entitles a poor person to relief, which is also extended on all occasions to the domestic servants of subscribers. These latter are not considered to be improper objects of gratuitous relief; formerly it is stated, that the medical attendant was expected to visit, free of charge, many of the poorer subscribers, but this practice no longer exists. It has been mentioned that a recommendation was absolutely necessary for any one seeking the aid of this charity, but, it should be added, that as but one signature to it is required, and as the number of such recommendations which each subscriber can issue is unlimited, the facility of obtaining orders is abundantly great, and there is no danger of any one, even a stranger, being debarred from participating in its benefits.

A majority of those who are relieved present themselves at the institution, but those sick poor who may be unable to attend there, are visited at their own dwellings by the medical officer, to the extent of two or three times in the day when their cases require it; he is also liable to be called on in the night, and is at all times ready to afford assistance in cases of accident, although, unfortunately, the dispensary does not furnish him the necessary splints and bandages. "Daily attendance," the physician remarks, "is absolutely necessary in cases of acute disorder, and can only be dispensed with when the disease is of a chronic character." The only prescriptions made up are those of the physician, who is liable to be called on in cases of lying-in women whenever they are recommended.

The midwives by whom the poor are usually attended are represented as grossly ignorant of their business, and, it is stated, serious injury to both mother and child is the frequent result of their want of skill.

The funds of this charity do not admit of its supplying the sick poor with any thing beyond advice and medicine, and there is not in the neighbourhood any society to afford them wine or other nourishment which is so much required at the period of convalescence.

The principal direction is constituted by the subscribers who are about 40 in number; no one who derives any salary from the charity is to be found amongst them, and they do not, in any degree, appear to have delegated their duties to the surgeon. General meetings are appointed to take place once every year, at which all governors are alike entitled to be present, and to vote; and, although no resolution to the effect exists, yet the practice is to admit those who do not attend to deliver their votes by proxy. About 12 persons usually attend at each meeting, but any smaller number would be deemed sufficient to transact business, which is nearly limited to passing the accounts previous to their being submitted to the inspection of the grand jury; of any other proceedings there are no minutes kept.

A managing committee is annually appointed, with instructions to meet quarterly for the purpose of arranging the details of the institution. Their proceedings, however, are not recorded. There is neither board of superintendence nor visiting governor.

The election of the treasurer, the only non-medical officer, is renewed annually by the subscribers, who give their votes openly—a mode of election which is deemed productive of good results—and appear to be quite uninfluenced by religious prejudices in their choice; neither has there been any remarkable accession to the number of electors, at such a time as to show any tendency to control the appointment. The treasurer does not receive any salary, and the security demanded by the Act of Parliament is not required from him. In no instance has any officer connected with this charity been superseded.

Once a year a report is drawn up of the affairs of the establishment, to be laid before the subscribers and the grand jury. The witnesses speak of the facility with which the gentry and farmers, together with the clergy, could be combined in the formation of permanent boards of health, and they suggest that a district medical institution such as has been before alluded to, would be the most proper place for the transaction of their business. They state that in this neighbourhood there exists a large number of individuals every way qualified to assist in a minute investigation of the wants of the poor, should ever an extension of the dispensary system of relief be deemed desirable.

The receipts of the charity under the head of subscriptions have not exceeded 75*l.* during each of the last three years, some part of which sum has always consisted of donations of 10*s.* received from individuals of the poorer classes. From a list of the names of subscribers which was furnished to the Assistant Commissioners, it would appear that the existence of the institution rests on tolerably secure grounds, as it does not in any degree depend on the large large subscriptions of a few persons. It is not, however, possessed of any capital stock in houses or lands.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands until wanted.

The principal items in the expenditure of the dispensary are the salary of the surgeon, medicines, and house rent. Taken together, they do not exceed 120*l.* a year. All payments are made through the treasurer after the bills to be discharged have been examined by the committee.

The accounts are made up half-yearly, and are submitted to the subscribers and to the grand jury at the termination of the year.

Glanmire
Dispensary.

THE Glanmire dispensary affords relief to the sick poor of a population of nearly six thousand souls. The district extends to about five miles towards the east, but not more than three in other directions. It includes four entire parishes, namely, Rathconry, Caherby, Little Island and Brooklodge, together with the greater part of the two Templesurges and Carrigtohill. There are no other medical charities within the limits of the district, but a dispensary has been established at Strand road, on the road to Cork, distant about three miles and the numerous hospitals of the city of Cork are not above four miles off. With respect to the sufficiency of this and of the other charities in the surrounding country for their proposed objects, the witnesses were of opinion that they were too few; that at all events the assistance of a second physician would be most desirable, as the present medical attendant has on some occasions been obliged to travel thirty miles in one day, in the discharge of his dispensary duties. It is thought that the district intrusted to a single physician should not exceed in diameter four miles. Extern relief has never been refused to any applicant, but no measures are provided for affording intern accommodation to patients, a want which fortunately is not productive of the inconvenience which might be expected, in consequence of the facilities for relief afforded by the medical charities in the city of Cork. The witnesses would, however, be most anxious to see the establishment of a small hospital containing beds for a few fever patients, and for persons suffering under accidents, which required immediate aid.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The medical attendant resides in a very comfortable house, which is his own property, and for the use of which he is allowed twenty guineas a year. The dispensary is held within a door or two of his residence, and consists merely of one room with an earthen floor, in which the patients are received and prescribed for, and medicine dispensed to them; across a portion of the room near the window a counter has been placed, behind which shelves have been erected for the reception of medicines, &c. The entire place was neatly kept and in good order, and seemed well fitted for its purpose.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

A gentleman, 45 years of age, who had been a surgeon in the navy, is attached to the dispensary as general medical attendant. He was examined by the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and was educated for midwifery at the Dublin Lying-in Hospital. He holds no other appointment, but is engaged in business as a private practitioner. Since the period of his election to the situation, (which took place in the year 1818), it is stated that he has never been absent from his post for a greater space of time than 36 consecutive hours; but it is added, that were occasion to arise for his absence, permission might be obtained through an application to the committee, who at all times possess the power of controlling or checking any irregularity or inattention on the part of their medical officer. To the committee also, the poor are accustomed to address any complaints which they may think proper to prefer respecting his conduct. This has been done on one occasion, through the means of the subscriber who had recommended the individual seeking redress, but the accusation proved groundless, on investigation. In fact, the present medical attendant, as well as his predecessor, appear to have enjoyed the general confidence and good opinion of the poor. The surgeon is not allowed to retain any assistant or pupil to act as his substitute; he dispenses and administers the medicines himself.

Medical Officer.

The salary of the surgeon is 80 guineas per annum, in addition to 20 guineas for the use of his house, which is the only allowance received by him. He is paid out of the general fund of the charity arising from annual subscriptions and the county grant. The amount of remuneration given to the medical officer depends entirely on the discretion of the committee. The grand jury have no other mode of regulating their proceedings on this point than by diminishing or withdrawing their annual presentment, and should the latter body even take such a step, they have not the power to prevent the repetition of the act of which they had expressed their disapprobation.

Payment.

The election of the medical officer to this institution is intrusted by the subscribers to the committee, and whenever a vacancy occurs in the situation, the rule is to give notice in the newspapers of the intention to proceed to a new election, and to invite candidates to come forward. At the last election there were 10 candidates, all of whom were required to possess testimonials of their qualifications, and to have passed the age of 30 years. It is not necessary that the grand jury should be made acquainted with the qualifications of the successful candidate, and the witnesses are of opinion that any control over the judgment of the present electing authority is not wanted. The neighbourhood of Glanmire contains many residents of independent circumstances, and their patronage would be quite sufficient to maintain a medical man, independent of a salary derived from a dispensary. But it is not thought that any one would gratuitously undertake the duties of the charity. Neither retiring allowances nor superannuations are granted, and there has not been any mortality among the physicians attached to the establishment.

The Assistant Commissioners found much order and neatness in the room wherein the medicines were kept. The necessary shelves and bottles existed, and were in good condition. The stock of medicine on hand (which included quinine) was small, but this was explained in stating that the custom was to replenish the supply every month, when only so much was procured as was absolutely necessary. Messrs. Harrington, of Cork, are druggists to the dispensary, and their bills during each of the last three years had amounted to about 28*l*. They had been discharged by the treasurer, after having been inspected by the committee. All medical articles, including the ordinary apparatus for forming preparations, remain under the care of the medical attendant. Some of these things are occasionally borrowed, but it is stated that they have been always punctually returned. There are not any surgical instruments belonging to the dispensary; when they are required the surgeon makes use of his own. Leeches are only occasionally applied. The physician does not keep any medicine for private practice. Vaccination is performed on all those who apply for it. The medical attendant is disposed to think highly of its preventive efficacy, and he states that a general impression exists in favour of it. He adds that the rules of the dispensary do not forbid the inoculating with small-pox matter, but that he is averse to the practice. The district has been tolerably free from the disease of late; but one case is mentioned of a woman who took it for the second time from a sucking child. She was, at the period of receiving the infection, deeply marked with the scars of a previous attack.

A register, full in every particular (except as regards the instances in which relief has been refused, of which no mention is made) has been kept by the attending physician for the last 15 years. A copy of the portion relating to each year has been regularly laid before the grand jury by the subscribers. The following extract will show the manner in which the register is kept, together with the extent to which aid has been afforded by the dispensary.

		Cured.	Died.	Relieved.	Curable.	Remaining.	Vaccinated.	Total.
1831	-	3,187	82	51	27	58	193	3,598
1832	-	3,114	79	47	21	62	229	3,552
1833	-	3,181	54	47	17	51	193	3,537

During the period included in the above extract, the surgeon had no occasion to perform any operations of importance; but he has been called on in nearly 100 cases of midwifery each year.

No one is entitled to relief from this institution if he have not provided himself with the recommendation of a subscriber. This condition is, however, easily complied with, as the number of such orders which may be issued is unlimited, and a single signature is considered sufficient to each. The witnesses assert the extreme improbability of even a stranger being unable to procure one. The servants of subscribers are at all times attended, and it appears that there is another class of persons who receive relief from the charity, who would commonly be deemed of a condition beyond that in which gratuitous assistance should be sought. This observation refers to the occupants of small farms and to small tradesmen, who, by a regulation enacted about four years ago, acquire, by subscribing from 5*s*. to 10*s*., the privilege of calling for the attendance of the physician whenever it may be needed by themselves or any member of their family. Previously to the date just mentioned, individuals of this condition would have been relieved without any contribution, on presenting the order of a subscriber.

Every day, from ten to half-past eleven o'clock, the sick poor are seen at the dispensary, and the medical attendant is further bound to visit, at their own dwellings, all patients who may be unable to present themselves at the institution. His services may be called for in this manner in any part of the district, and he states himself, that if necessary, he would pay two or three visits in the 24 hours, and also at night. He observes, occasional attendance, although productive of some benefit in cases of chronic disorder, is positively useless where the affection partakes of an acute character. Provision is also made for a supply of splints and bandages in cases of accidents. No prescription book is kept; but it is said that no other prescriptions are compounded than those of the attending physician.

No kind of nourishment is afforded to the sick poor from this or any other charity in the district.

The general management of the institution, in which the medical officer, not being a governor, has not any share, is vested in the entire body of subscribers, who amount to about 75, and of whom a general meeting should take place in the month of July, anterior to the summer assizes. These annual meetings are attended with tolerable regularity, about six or seven members being usually present. Votes are not taken by proxy; but business may be transacted by any number of subscribers that attend. The witnesses state that the proceedings of the meeting are always committed to writing; however, the Assistant Commissioners were unable to obtain sight of the book in which this had been done. It was asserted, in explanation, nation, that it was in the hands of the treasurer, who had gone into the country just previous to their visit, of which he had not been apprized.

The appointment of a managing committee is the principal business of the annual meeting. To this committee is left the entire management of the affairs of the establishment; however, the members have no fixed periods of meeting, assembling only when specially summoned, and of their proceedings the Assistant Commissioners could obtain no statement. A board of superintendence also exists, appointed by the grand jury, and the institution has undergone its inspection every six months during the last two years. There have not been any visiting governors selected.

The committee appoint a treasurer and a collector; the latter receives an allowance of 3*d.* in the pound on all the subscriptions he receives, while the former acts without any remuneration; but neither gives the security required by the Act of Parliament. There are some written rules (which, from the absence of the proceeding book, the Assistant Commissioners did not see) for regulating the election of these officers; they have, however, been elected but once, and it is stated, without any reference to their religious persuasions. Both the treasurer and collector are Protestants. The system of open voting is the one adopted, and the gentlemen present at the examination express themselves satisfied with the appointments which have hitherto taken place, and consider that the creation of any controlling authority out of the body of the subscribers would be quite unnecessary. There has never been occasion to remove or suspend any officer connected with the charity.

There is a servant woman who receives 5*l.* a year as wages, without any further allowance for either lodging or board. She is appointed by the committee, who have also the power to discharge her; and she draws her payment from the treasurer; any small articles that may be required are purchased by the medical attendant. They consist chiefly of calico for bandages, brown sugar, paper, &c., and do not on the average amount to more than 5*l.* per annum.

There are not any printed rules, but the witnesses describe themselves, as satisfied with the results of the few which exist. They do not propose any alterations in them, although it may be observed, that great remissness is to be attributed to the management, as to the regularity of their meetings.

It is stated by the witnesses, that reports were made each year to the grand jury; however, the Assistant Commissioners were unable to procure more than one copy. The opinion of the witnesses was very favourable to the formation of district boards of health. It was said, gentry, clergy and farmers would willingly co-operate in the carrying on of such institutions. In the Glanmire district there could be no difficulty in obtaining the services of a number of intelligent individuals, every way qualified to assist in a minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

The income of the dispensary is derived partly from subscriptions, and partly from the county. There is no very great disproportion between the majority of contributions, but still the existence of the charity is very precarious. It has been already mentioned that several of the poorer classes were to be found among the subscribers, but from the absence of the treasurer it was not possible to learn the amount to which they contributed. The dispensary does not possess any fixed property.

The funds are collected by the officer appointed for the purpose, and are by him lodged in the bank to the credit of the treasurer. No money is ever left in the hands of any other person.

The annual expenses amount to about 124*l.* The disbursements are made through the medical attendant by orders on the bank, drawn in his own name by the treasurer, to whom alone all bills due are submitted for examination.

Once a year accounts are made up, and copies laid before the grand jury, and presented to the subscribers.

Persons who attended the Examination.

The Rev. Mr. BEECHER.—Mr. THOMAS BOLSTER.—The Rev. Mr. KEARNEY, R.C.C.—The Rev. Dr. LOMBARD, Rector of the parish;—and the Medical Attendant.

THIS dispensary is intended for a district, the most distant point of which is about four miles removed, and for a population of upwards of 8,000. It is about five miles and a quarter from the town of Mallow, in which is situate the county hospital, and a fever hospital;—at Ballyclough about five miles in another direction is a dispensary.

There is no other medical institution within the bounds of the district, but it is conceived that the benefits of the institution might be extended to a radius of one mile greater length. The want of intern accommodation for patients is frequently felt, but no patient has ever been refused the advice of the physician and medicine. It were much to be desired that medical districts should be formed, in each of which should be a dispensary, and that to a certain number of such districts, varying according to circumstances, there should be attached a common fever hospital.

A small cabin is appropriated to this institution, containing, besides a waiting room, a very commodious apartment for the dispensing of medicines. The furniture, consisting of a few chairs, tables and forms, is in a pretty good state of repair. There are no baths. The entire house is devoted to the purpose of the dispensary; has no ground attached to it, and is held from year to year at an annual rent of 4*l.*; no inconvenience is felt from this mode of tenure, though it would be more desirable that it were the property of the county.

The only medical officer is a graduate in medicine of the University of Edinburgh, a member of the London College of Surgeons, and a licentiate of the Apothecaries' Hall, Dublin. His age is about 30. He was appointed by the subscribers in 1826, at which period he practised his profession in Mallow, in which place, about five miles and a quarter distant, he continues to reside. He attends gratuitously the fever hospital in Mallow, and in this institution acts as general medical attendant. In case of absence he provides a substitute, subject to the approbation of the committee, but no bye-law exists upon this point. The duty never has been done by proxy. The medical attendant received his education in midwifery in Edinburgh, and is permitted to pursue private practice. He attends at the dispensary on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, and if in any manner irregular, would be accountable to the subscribers at large. He has abundant time in the three hours during which he attends, viz. from ten till one, for giving the requisite care to all the poor who apply. He dispenses the medicine in person, and has no assistant.

The medical attendant receives a salary of 80*l.* per annum, without any allowances, and is the only paid officer; any inclination on the part of the committee to pay too large a salary to the medical officer would be effectually checked by the power of the grand jury to stop their presentment, but should any medical man pay the subscriptions of any number of persons, for the purpose of enabling them to vote in his interest, it is thought that the grand jury would not be able to control him.

When a vacancy occurs due notice is given in the newspapers; each candidate must possess a degree from some university. There is no restriction as to age, and it is not the practice for the grand jury to interfere in the appointment. There were only two candidates at the last election, at which those only were entitled to vote who had paid up their subscription. The only medical men resident in the neighbourhood are those at Mallow, none of whom would undertake the charge of this dispensary without salary, nor are there residing in the immediate district such a number of individuals capable of paying for advice as would induce a physician to settle here unconnected with the dispensary. No retiring allowances are given. The present medical officer possesses the general confidence of the poor; but in case any of that class should have any just cause of complaint against him, they know perfectly well that they would find redress from the subscriber who recommended them; and it has occurred, that they have not hesitated to prefer such complaints, which have met with the necessary attention.

The room in which the medicines are kept appears neat in every particular. The more delicate and expensive medicines are procured when requisite; and no fault can be found with any, either as to quantity or quality. The father of the medical attendant, who is an apothecary in Mallow, supplies the medicines at wholesale prices. His account discharged by the treasurer has amounted for the last three years respectively in 1831 to 24*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.*; 1832, 15*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*; 1834, 15*l.* 15*s.* During the absence of the medical attendant the medicines are under the charge of a servant woman, who also sees that every thing connected with the establishment be kept in a state of cleanliness. The physician is not in private practice as an apothecary, nor is he permitted on any account to sell the medicine belonging to the establishment. There is a very good apparatus for preparing infusions, decoctions, &c., but no surgical instruments whatever belonging to the institution. The funds would not permit the extensive use of leeches. The rules of the dispensary do not prevent inoculating with small-pox, but it has never been done by the physician, on the contrary, he is always ready to supply vaccine matter gratuitously.

There is a register kept, in which the physician enters the various diseases treated, together with their terminations on the days on which each patient attends, together with the names of those persons who, from their known ability to pay for advice, have been refused gratuitous assistance. A copy of this register is lodged with the grand jury; at the time that the institution was visited there were on the books four patients who were attended at their own homes, and about twenty who sought relief at the dispensary. In consequence of the want of internal accommodation, there have not been any capital operations. About fifteen midwifery cases have required attendance during the last three years.

A recommendation from a subscriber always entitles the bearer to relief, but it is much to be regretted that these accommodations are given to a class of persons for whom such institutions are not in general supposed to be established, viz. the servants, such as butlers, housekeepers, &c. of subscribers. These persons, and many others in comparatively easy circumstances, are in the constant habit of participating in that charity which should only be extended to the destitute. There are moreover many instances where subscriptions have been paid for the purpose of justifying an increased demand upon the charity, and where the persons paying such subscriptions have considered themselves entitled to gratuitous attendance in return. The subscribers are not limited in the number of their recommendations, and thus it never occurs that any person really deserving of relief is refused.

Extern patients are prescribed for at the dispensary. The physician never refuses to visit at their own homes any poor person residing within the limits of the parish who requires such attention, nor even to repeat his visit more than once during the same day if found necessary. The institution is not provided with bandages, splints, &c. to meet cases of accidents, but assistance is always readily afforded at whatever hour it may be demanded. No prescriptions but those of the attending physician are permitted to be made at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are attended on recommendation. The midwives of the district are considered to be exceedingly ignorant, and frequent instances occur where both mother and child suffer under their hands, but no just estimate could be formed of the number of deaths which occur in child-bed. Patients labouring under acute diseases are visited at their houses as often as necessary, necessary, and it is considered that occasional attendance would be time thrown away, except in chronic cases. Vaccination is performed gratuitously at the institution, and also at the houses of subscribers. The opinion of the medical attendant is decidedly in favour of the preventive efficacy of cow-pox, and has never met with an instance of small-pox succeeding it. The consequence of which is, that the public confidence in it is on the increase, and that the latter disease is very rarely met with of late years.

Wine is given when considered necessary by the medical attendant.

The management is vested in about 24 subscribers, from whose number all salaried officers are excluded, as also from all material influence over the general direction of the establishment. The meetings which are appointed to take place quarterly are very irregularly attended by from six to fifteen governors, who are all entitled to attend and vote, and who are further permitted to vote by proxy. Minutes are not kept of their proceedings.

The affairs of the institution are further subject to the immediate control of a managing committee, who rarely meet, and of whose meetings no account is to be met with; a board of superintendence, appointed by the grand jury, is also empowered to inquire into the state of the dispensary, which does not appear to be possessed of sufficient interest to any of the governing body as to induce them to inspect it during the interval of the meetings, or to inquire into its working amongst the poor.

Officers, not medical, are not paid; they are all annually elected at the meeting of the subscribers at large by open voting, a system which is found to be productive of good results; it has never occurred that a sudden accession of subscribers, immediately previous to the election, has ever given to the transaction a character of unfairness. The treasurer does not give the security required by the Act of Parliament. No instance has ever occurred of an officer being discharged.

The only attendant is the servant-woman before alluded to, appointed by the subscribers, who have the power of discharging her; she does not reside in the house, nor has she perquisites, but receives from the treasurer 3*l.* per annum, wages.

The rules of the institution, which are printed, do not appear in any way to interfere with the utility of the institution, and consequently no alterations therein have either been made or suggested.

A written report is regularly furnished to the grand jury, containing an account of the affairs of the establishment. There are a number of respectable people residing in this district every way qualified to form a board of health. The gentlemen present were anxious for its formation, and from the charitable disposition of some individuals, who, at present, give the physician the means of distributing their gifts of flannel, food, &c., there can be no doubt of its beneficial effects on the state of the poor inhabitants.

The institution is entirely dependent for its support on the annual subscriptions, for as the sum given by the grand jury is dependent on them, if the former were to fail, the institution must necessarily cease. Few of the poorer classes are to be found on the list of subscribers, the amount of whose respective subscriptions is pretty nearly equal. But some individuals who subscribe only 10*s.* 6*d.* a year, secure to themselves and all their family every requisite medical assistance and medicine, although in circumstances to pay for both.

The treasurer collects these annual funds, in whose hands they lie until required for use. The amount which he received from subscribers was in

Glenville
Dispensary.

THE Glenville Dispensary is situated about nine miles from Fermoy, in which town its medical attendant resides; there are two other medical charities of a similar nature in its immediate neighbourhood; viz., Watergrasshill and Rathcormac, the latter establishment being on the line of road which the Glenville physician must pass on his way to the place of his duties; under these circumstances the Assistant Commissioners felt it would be quite superfluous to inquire into the working of the institution whose name is prefixed, being convinced that it could not possibly, on account of its remoteness from the residence of its medical attendant, be of that service to its district which ought to be expected from it. As to the physician himself, he is a gentleman of the highest attainments, and is one of the medical attendants of the Fermoy Fever Hospital; it may be confidently added, that the two dispensaries, which have been above mentioned as situated in the proximity, are amply adequate to afford all the assistance which the inhabitants of the entire district can require.

Rev. JAMES GOLLOCK, Curate.—The Medical Attendant of the Institution.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district for which this dispensary is intended could not be stated, but both the witnesses were of opinion, that although it be the only institution of the kind in the district, yet it was abundantly sufficient for the wants of the poor, who have to look to it for relief; they state that it is advantageously situated very nearly in the centre of its sphere of action, some parts of which are distant nearly seven miles. There are dispensaries at Blarney and at The Ovens, each about four miles off. The want of intern accommodation is sometimes severely felt, and the attachment of a small hospital, with a few beds, to a certain number of dispensary districts, none of which, it was suggested, should be of a greater diameter than five miles, would be considered as of the greatest advantage to the poor.

Building, &c.

The dispensary is situated at the rere of the residence of the medical attendant. It is commodious, and is neatly kept, as is also a reception room for patients while waiting for advice. The house, which is the property of one of the subscribers, is held from him by the year, at a rent of 5*l.* 5*s.*

Medical Officer.

The medical officer is a gentleman of 29 years of age; he is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, where he received his education in midwifery; he was appointed as general medical attendant of this dispensary, at a meeting of subscribers, in the year 1828, immediately after having completed his studies. Residing on the spot, and having no other duties to attend to, he is in the habit of seeing the poor every morning before ten o'clock, in addition to the days of public attendance in each week, which are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. During his own occasional absence his apprentice always remains at home, and should illness oblige him to relinquish his duties for awhile, he states that a medical friend, with a regular degree, would attend at the dispensary for him, and visit any case requiring such attention. He is permitted to engage in private practice. If he were to any extent irregular in his attendance, a complaint duly laid by a subscriber before the committee would meet with every attention. The Assistant Commissioners have to remark, that although they would ever have the ears of the subscribers open to the complaints of the poor, they cannot but deprecate the practice which obtains here, of preferring such complaints upon the slightest pretence, and without instituting any previous inquiry.

Payment.

The surgeon receives 68*l.* a year, and except the five guineas which is paid for the dispensary house in which he resides, has no further emolument.

Election.

Public notice was given in two of the Cork papers on the occasion of the last vacancy. Three candidates presented themselves, who were required to produce a degree either in medicine or surgery. The persons resident in this neighbourhood, capable of paying for medical advice, are very few, and by no means sufficient to induce a physician to settle here who would be willing to give his unpaid exertions to the charity.

The pharmacy here is well arranged and well kept; the stock of medicines is ample, and the drugs themselves, which include quinine and some other of the more expensive preparations, are of a very good description; they are usually purchased from Gosnell & Co., of Cork, druggists, who subscribe to the funds of the institution. The annual expense, during the last three years, has been about 40*l.*, and the articles are paid for by the treasurer, and constantly kept under lock and key. It is not permitted to sell any of them on any pretext; cases, however, have occurred requiring immediate assistance, where they have been made use of for private patients; but they have been replaced as soon as possible. The dispensary possesses no surgical instruments, and leeches are very seldom resorted to in its practice. Vaccination is performed gratuitously, with matter procured, when necessary, from Cork. There is no rule against inoculation with small-pox; but the medical attendant states that he is averse to the practice. The medicines are dispensed either by the last named witness or by his apprentice.

A register is kept by the medical officer of all those who apply for relief, distinguishing the nature of the illness under which each applicant suffers. The following abstract shows the number who obtained medical assistance during each of the last three years:—

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	1,800
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2,410

At the time of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, about 20 were in the course of cure at the institution, on public days, and about five were receiving attendance at their own dwellings. Three operations for strangulated hernia had been performed during the last three years, two of which were successful, as well as an amputation of the fingers. It is stated, that on an average about 40 midwifery cases are attended annually.

A recommendation, with the signature of a single subscriber, which there is not much difficulty in procuring, as the number of such recommendations is not limited, entitles the bearer to the aid of the dispensary, which is also extended to the servants of subscribers. There is, however, a class of persons whose means should place them above applying to a charity for relief, viz. a few farmers of independent circumstances, who on payment of 10*s.* 6*d.* per annum, are not only attended to, they and their families, but also the families of their tenants. This is felt to be a great abuse.

Extern patients are prescribed for at the institution, and when their cases require it, they are visited at their own houses any where within the district, and as often as may be necessary, and also at night, should the circumstances of their disorder be urgent. The establishment possesses none of the splints or bandages which are necessary for the treatment of fracture or other serious injuries. Lying-in women are attended when their cases present any unusual difficulty; but it is very gratifying to be enabled to state that the midwives of the district may be depended upon, and that they are generally pretty well acquainted with the business they undertake. It has been already stated that vaccination is practised here; it only remains to add, that the opinion of the medical attendant is very favourable as to its protecting influence against small-pox, which has been of rare occurrence here, and that the public are gradually coming round to the same way of thinking.

Unfortunately there are not any charitable institutions in this neighbourhood to second the medical treatment of the physician, by the supply to the sick of nutritious diet or of clothing.

The general management of this charity is quite free from the interference of the surgeon, who is the only salaried officer. Seven or eight governors generally attend the general meeting of the subscribers, which takes place annually; those who do not attend are permitted to vote by proxy, and minutes are kept of the proceedings.

A managing committee has been appointed, but its members have never assembled; this is the more to be regretted, because, although a board of superintendence exists, deriving its authority from the grand jury, no individual governor takes sufficient interest in the affairs of the establishment to induce him to give a personal attention to them.

The only officer besides the medical attendant is the Curate of the parish, who discharges the duties of secretary and treasurer without receiving any remuneration; but neither is he required to give any security. He is annually elected by the subscribers at large, who give their votes openly, a system which has been found to answer well, and it is not thought that any religious belief would operate against a candidate for this office. Although no sudden accession of subscribers immediately before the election gives rise to a suspicion of combination, yet it would certainly be desirable that some superior authority should have a veto on the appointment of all officers. No instance has, however, occurred where it has been judged necessary to remove any of them.

The rules, of which the Assistant Commissioners obtained a copy, were not considered by the witnesses to interfere in any way with the utility of the institution.

A written report is made to the grand jury every half year, detailing the affairs of the charity. The suggestion of the formation of a permanent board of health, to consist of the clergy, medical men and middling farmers of the district, was approved of, and it was stated that there was quite a sufficient number of such persons in the parish, both qualified and willing, to enter into any plan having for its object the becoming acquainted with and relieving the wants of the poor.

The receipts consist solely of annual subscriptions and of the grand jury grant. The amount of each, for the last three years, was as follows :—

The existence of the institution mainly depends on the continuance of the subscriptions of two individuals of wealth, one of whom annually contributes to the amount of 14*l.* 14*s.*, and the other 10*l.* If these sums were to be withheld, the charity would, of necessity, fall to the ground. It is one of the abuses of this dispensary, that the small subscriptions of those who are designated as farmers are in truth nothing but a contract price paid for an unlimited amount of attendance, and medicine given to themselves and families. The charity has no fixed property of any kind.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands alone they remain. Accounts are made up every half-year, and copies of them are laid before the grand jury, and presented to the body of subscribers.

Person who attended the Examination.

The Medical Attendant.

THE population for which this dispensary is intended is supposed to amount to very nearly fifteen thousand, none of whom live at a greater distance than five miles, and though the Bandon dispensary is not more than three miles distant, the witnesses concurred in saying, that the medical relief afforded was not sufficient; they conceived that a dispensary district should not extend, on any account, to more than five miles, and that hospital accommodation (of which they at present much feel the want) should be provided, if not for every such district, at least for every three or four contiguous ones; external relief, however, consisting of advice and medicine, has never been refused.

A small detached stable, in a lane off the main street of the town, is the locality where this charity is carried on, and is so miserably defective in every particular as to offer no details for description; it is almost superfluous to add that it possesses neither baths nor grounds.

There is but one medical attendant, a gentleman aged 35, of this charity; he obtained his license to practise in Dublin, and also studied midwifery in London; he was appointed to his present situation as physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary, in the year 1823, by the subscribers at large, and is not connected with any other public establishment; previous to his election he practised in the city of Cork, and is still allowed to have private patients; he is bound to attend at the dispensary on three days in the week, and if unable to attend he would, under the sanction of the committee, be permitted to provide a substitute; if he were irregular in his attendance the committee would be fully able to bring him to account; there is, however, no person capable of filling his place during his unavoidable daily absence, and although he generally dispenses the medicine in person, it was admitted that he has on some occasions delegated his duty to an old man, altogether uneducated and unfit to be intrusted with the task.

The attending physician is the only paid officer, and in addition to his salary, which he draws from the general funds of the institution, he is allowed 10*l.* a year towards the maintenance of a horse; should the committee feel inclined to pay him a higher salary than that which he at present receives, or to increase it to an unjustifiable amount, the grand jury have it in their power to check such a proceeding, by withholding their fiat to the annual grant; but no guarantee is known to exist likely to prevent the combination of a medical man with others to form an institution of this kind for the purpose of securing an appointment in a district possessing perhaps already sufficient sources of assistance to the poor.

The power of voting at the election of medical officer is strictly limited to subscribers of 1*l.* 1*s.* annually. When a vacancy occurs, though the grand jury be not officially informed of the circumstance, sufficient public notice is given of it by advertisement in the newspapers. On the last occasion of the kind there were seven candidates, who without any limitation as to age, were expected all to be in possession of a degree from some university. There are not in the immediate neighbourhood of Innishannon a sufficient number of persons capable of paying for medical advice to support a medical man independent of the emolument derived from the dispensary, and there is not any professional person who would attend gratuitously to that charity; no retiring allowances would be made, and there has not been any mortality among the medical attendants who have been attached to the institution. Should the physician treat any of the patients with harshness or neglect, there exists in the committee a tribunal where they could with facility obtain redress, and to which it is stated that they have shown no disinclination to appeal. No physician would here long be retained against the known feelings of the poor.

The room in which the medicines are kept is in a state very much the reverse of neatness; however the medicines (which are procured from the Messrs. Harrington of Cork) appear to be be tolerable both in quantity and quality; there was, however, no supply of quinine, morphia or of any other of the more delicate preparations; the medicines are paid for by the treasurer, and are left in the care of the old man mentioned above; under certain restrictions, it is permitted occasionally to make sale of them, but they are, at the same time, quite distinct from those which the attending physician keeps for his private patients. Leeches are never made use of in the practice of this dispensary; inoculation with small-pock virus is forbidden by the rules of the institution, which supplies vaccine matter gratuitously to all applying for it.

A register is very carefully kept of all cases by the medical attendant; a copy of it is annually lodged with the grand jury. During the three years previous to the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, there had not been any operations of importance performed, and during that period no application for assistance had been refused.

The recommendation of a single subscriber entitles the bearer to relief; and though the number of tickets is limited, the benefits of the charity are not practically restricted, on the contrary, there is the greatest facility in procuring the necessary order. The printed rules of the charity require that the servants of the subscribers shall be considered as fit objects for relief. But the number of other persons not in circumstances requiring gratuitous aid, and who, nevertheless, formerly persisted in endeavours to obtain it, was so great, that about five years ago the committee deemed it advisable to pass a resolution defining for whom the dispensary was intended.

Extern patients are relieved at the institution on the days above indicated. If the nature of their ailment require it, they would, it is stated, be visited at their dwellings as often as might be necessary, even during the night. The medical attendant observes, that "in acute disorders it becomes absolutely necessary that the patient should be seen at least once a day; occasional attendance would be productive of little benefit, and is only of use when the disease partakes of a slow or chronic nature." No means of assistance are possessed by the establishment for the effectual treatment of fractures and other accidents by splints and bandages. Lying-in women are only attended when their cases present any feature of unusual difficulty. Unfortunately, the midwives in whose hands they usually place themselves, are in every way ignorant of what they undertake, and cause much mischief by their incapacity. A prescription book is not kept, but it was stated that no other prescriptions are ever compounded but those given by the attending physician. Vaccination is frequently performed here, and the physician has found it productive of the best effects as preventive of the small-pox. The public confidence in its efficacy is very manifestly on the increase, and the disease which it is intended to guard against has been a rare visitant of late years.

There is no institution in this district capable of affording any relief in either food or clothing to the sick poor. The want of such a charity is severely felt; many instances occur where the physician fails in his efforts, because he cannot accompany his treatment by wholesome food and warm clothing. It is suggested that much good might be done if articles of the latter kind were distributed during the period of sickness and convalescence.

The principal direction resides with the body of subscribers, who meet annually to the number of about 13. Minutes are kept of their proceedings, and only those who may be present are entitled to vote. The surgeon has never been allowed to take any share in the meetings of the governors, but the general management has been much under his direction.

There is in addition a managing committee, which meets usually every six weeks, and keeps an account of their own proceedings. A board of superintendence is appointed by the grand jury, and checks the arrangements of both. There are not any acting visiting governors.

The only non-medical officer is the gentleman who discharges the duties of both secretary and treasurer. He acts without any remuneration, and has never been called on to give the security which is required by the Act of Parliament. He vacates his office at the termination of each year, but is re-elected by a system of open voting. It is stated that religious prejudices are not allowed to interfere in the appointment.

The old man, to whose care it had been mentioned that the medicines are intrusted, is the only attendant. He is provided with lodging at the institution, and receives 10*l.* per annum from the treasurer.

Medicine being the only article under the head of stores, and this being purchased without contract from Messrs. Harrington, it is apparent that no person connected with the institution is interested in any of its supplies.

The very limited scale on which the charity is carried on is in no way injuriously affected by its printed rules, of which a copy was submitted to the Assistant Commissioners.

Reports are made at fixed periods to the grand jury, but they are not usually printed. Amongst the gentry, medical men and middling farmers of this neighbourhood, there are many persons quite qualified to form an efficient board of health, and who would most cheerfully attend to any system which might be introduced for the more effectual relief of the wants of the poor.

This institution is mainly dependent on the continuance of its present number of supporters. It would certainly cease to exist were the subscriptions materially to fall off, as there is no principal subscriber on whose bounty it could calculate. None of the poorer classes subscribe, but the rules show that the families of one class of contributors are privileged to draw very decided advantages from the institution. It possesses no capital stock nor any fixed property, either in houses or lands.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and lie in his hands until wanted. No money is ever placed in the hands of any other person.

Kanturk
Dispensary.

Rev. Mr. ORPEN.—Rev. Mr. RYAN, P.P.—JAMES SHERRY, esq.—The Medical Attendant and the Apothecary.

THE Kanturk dispensary is judiciously situated, with reference to the convenience of all portions of its attached district, which extends about five miles in most directions, and includes a population of nearly 7,000 souls. The witnesses are of opinion, that the sphere of a dispensary should never exceed a radius of five miles. They observe, that relief has never been refused to any applicant at the Kanturk dispensary, at least not from want of means, and that the country surrounding the town is well supplied with sources of medical assistance, there being three dispensaries within a distance of six miles from it, one at Newmarket, four miles, Freemount, six miles, and Ballyclough, four miles. The want of intern accommodation is, however, frequently and severely felt; and it is suggested that the inconvenience might be remedied by forming medical districts, to each of which a dispensary could be attached, while to a greater or less number of these, according to local circumstances, a small hospital could be added, capable of receiving accidents and fevers at all times, and also provided with a few beds for the treatment of surgical diseases.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

A house in which it is proposed to establish the dispensary is in progress of erection; at present, the business is carried on in the market-house of the town, for the use of which a rent of 7*l.* 7*s.* per annum is paid. There is no apparatus for administering baths. It would be productive of much good, if the building appropriated to the purposes of the present charity were in all cases the property of the country.

Medical Officer.

The medical attendant is a graduate in medicine of the Edinburgh University, and is also a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London. In his present situation, to which he was elected in the year 1832, at a general meeting of the subscribers, he discharges the duties of physician, surgeon and accoucheur, and is obliged to attend at the dispensary on three days in each week. He is about 29 years of age; he holds no other appointment, and resides close to the institution, previous to his connexion with which, he had been engaged in the prosecution of his studies in Dublin, London, Paris and Edinburgh, in the latter of which cities he received his education in midwifery. He is at all times permitted to acquire private practice, but any inconvenience which might otherwise arise from his occasional absence is provided against, having it in his power to delegate his duties to the apothecary. In case, however, of a protracted absence, it is stated, that a fully qualified practitioner would, under the sanction of the committee, be procured to act in his place.

Other Medical Officers.

The apothecary, who has been just mentioned, is attached to the charity for the purpose of compounding the medicines prescribed by the attending physician; his days of attendance at the dispensary coincide with those of the latter officer; he is also in the habit of attending to some of the slighter cases which present themselves in the town or its immediate neighbourhood. His qualification consists in the diploma of a licentiate of the Apothecaries Hall in Dublin, and the medicines ordered are always dispensed by him. The authority of the subscribers effectually provides for the regular and attentive discharge of their respective duties by both these medical officers, and it is stated that the poor have it in their power to procure redress of any neglect shown towards them, by complaining to the individual through whose recommendation they had become entitled to demand relief. Hitherto there has been no ground for supposing that the medical officers have not been in possession of the good will and of the confidence of the people.

Payment.

The salary of the physician is 40*l.* per annum, that of the apothecary is 20*l.*; neither receives any other emolument or any allowance for board, lodging, or for the maintenance of a horse. The amount of payment awarded to these officers rests entirely at the discretion of the members of the committee. They can, if they think proper, raise their salaries to an unnecessary sum, and this without the chance of being checked by the county, whose sole control consists in the power of withholding their annual grants. It is also admitted, that in the present state of things there is nothing to prevent an individual from combining with his friends to raise such a subscription towards the foundation of a dispensary, as shall entitle them to a grant from the grand jury, and this with no other view than that of securing to one of the party a medical appointment, where perhaps there was no want of professional assistance.

Election.

The electors of the medical officers are the subscribers to the charity, who have paid up their annual subscription of one guinea. On the occasion of the last vacancy, notice of the intention to proceed to a new election was given by advertisement in the newspapers, and it was announced that all candidates should be provided with a degree from some university, if seeking the situation of surgeon, and with the diploma of a master apothecary, if desirous to be appointed apothecary. On the day of election three candidates appeared. It was not deemed necessary to submit the qualifications of the successful one to the grand jury, but it is thought that it would in all cases be of advantage to make appointments conditional, on the veto of some superior authority. There is no limitation as to age, either in appointing or displacing officers, nor is there any provision in the constitution of the charity, for for granting either superannuations or retiring allowances. The last physician died while in connexion with the institution. His disease was an affection of some internal organ. It is stated by the witnesses that medical assistance for the poor could not be procured otherwise than through the salaried officer of a dispensary. The number of resident individuals in the neighbourhood capable of remunerating a medical man for his services are very few, and in point of fact, there is but one qualified practitioner in the district besides the dispensary surgeon, and he would not be willing to act gratuitously.

The circumstances of the present pharmacy are not favourable to its purposes, but it is merely temporary. The supply of medicine is good, and of the best quality, including quinine, morphia, and others of the more expensive drugs. They had been purchased from the Messrs. Harrington, druggists, in Cork, whose account for each of the last three years had, according to the treasurer's receipts, amounted on an average to 23*l*. The medicines were under the care of the apothecary, who is not permitted to sell any of them, and who keeps them separate from those which he makes use of in his private practice. There is a very good collection of the implements and apparatus requisite in the compounding and preparing remedies, but there are no surgical instruments, and the expensiveness of the supply forbids the use of leeches altogether. One of the objects of the charity is to diffuse the advantages of vaccination. The surgeon is therefore bound to supply vaccine matter gratuitously to all who apply for it. That gentleman states, that "his own experience leads him to consider vaccination as very decidedly preventive of small-pox, and the opinion of the people is becoming daily more favourable to the utility of the practice." Small-pox has latterly shown itself to a considerable extent in the district. Inoculation with variolous matter is not forbidden by the relief of the dispensary, but the medical attendant has never adopted it.

The physician and the apothecary assist in keeping a register of all applications made for the assistance of the charity, and it is stated that no instance has occurred of such applications being refused; a copy of the register is annually lodged with the secretary of the grand jury. At the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, there were on the books the names of about 10 poor persons who were under course of treatment at the institution, and it was stated that 36 cases of midwifery had been attended to during the last three years.

Any person seeking relief from this dispensary must have obtained a recommendation from a subscriber; this condition is indispensable, but at the same time it is easily complied with, since the number of orders is unlimited, and the signature of a single subscriber to each is sufficient; it is even stated that although none of the subscribers receive attendance or medicine gratuitously, yet there are not a few persons who contrive from time to time to participate in the benefits of the charity, although their circumstances by no means place them in need of gratuitous assistance.

It has been already mentioned that the physician attends at the dispensary on three days in each week; on these days he prescribes for and gives medicine to all persons who present themselves under the above conditions; he is also bound to visit the poor at their own dwellings (when the nature of their malady requires such attention) any where within the limits of the dispensary district, which extends to nearly five miles on all sides; this is done both by day and night, and as often as may be necessary. The physician observes, that "he considers daily attendance as quite indispensable in cases of acute disorders, and it is only in diseases of a chronic character that advantage can be expected to result from occasional visits." The institution affords no splints or bandages for the treatment of fractures or accidents, but the aid of the medical attendant may always be called for; his services may also be procured by lying-in women whenever their cases present any features of unusual difficulty. The women, however, of the poorer class are in general attended by midwives, who have the character of being extremely unqualified for their task; it is also said, that both mother and child frequently suffer serious injury from their ignorance. In addition to the prescriptions of the attending physician, those of other practitioners are occasionally compounded at the dispensary.

Nothing besides medicine and advice is supplied to the sick poor from this charity. It does not provide nourishment of any kind, nor does any other institution in the neighbourhood.

The general management resides in the subscribers, who amount to about 30, and who are all alike privileged to attend at the fixed general meeting, which takes place twice in the year. At the meetings the surgeon is not allowed to take any part, in as much as he is not a governor of the institution. Votes are only taken by proxy when the election of an officer is going forward, on other business voting is restricted to the 10 or 11 members who form the ordinary attendance, and of whose proceedings minutes are always made; business may be transacted by any number, however small, of subscribers.

There is a list of members appointed to form a managing committee, but no fixed periods have been pointed out for their meetings; whenever they do assemble their resolutions are always registered.

The subscribers elect a treasurer who acts without any remuneration, but is not required to give the security which the Act of Parliament demands; he is elected by open voting, and it is stated that the selection has never had reference to religious or sectarian differences. There has never been occasion to dismiss or remove an officer.

None of the articles required for the use of the charity are procured from either governor or member of the committee.

The rules have never been printed.

Reports are made half yearly, and laid before the subscribers and the grand jury. The witnesses concur in urging the advantages which would result from the formation of permanent boards of health in every district; they suggest that the members of such boards should consist of the gentry, clergy, middling class of farmers, and, it is added, that a very considerable number of properly qualified individuals would be found who would cheerfully lend their aid towards any investigation of the wants of the poor, which it might be deemed judicious to enter upon before extending the present system of dispensary relief.

The income of the Kanturk dispensary is composed entirely of annual subscriptions and of annual grants from the grand jury. None of the poorer classes are to be found among the subscribers, and a large portion of the receipts is formed by the contributions of three noblemen, who subscribe respectively, 9*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, 5*l.* 5*s.* and 3*l.* 3*s.* It is stated that all subscriptions are given without any accompanying stipulation or contract for medical assistance or medicine in return.

Expenditure.

The subscriptions are paid in the hands of the treasurer, in whose hands exclusively all monies remain.

The Assistant Commissioners procured from the treasurer the following account of the expenditure of the establishment during the years 1832 and 1833; the accounts for 1834 not being at the time made up.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district for which the Kildorrery dispensary is intended embraces three parishes, and contains a population of about 4,000 souls. Its average diameter is estimated at six miles, but in some directions there are points nearly eight miles from the residence of the medical attendant. The surrounding country is considered to be in every sense very adequately supplied with sources of medical relief, so much so that at the preceding assizes it was recommended by the grand jury, that the Glanworth dispensary should be united to the one under consideration at Kildorrery. There are also dispensaries at Doneraile, Mitchelstown and Castletown-roche, all situated within six miles of Kildorrery. Intern accommodation is, however, totally wanting, and the absence of it is productive of much inconvenience; some time ago an unsuccessful attempt was made to raise a subscription for the purpose of remedying the deficiency. The witnesses express much anxiety to see the establishment of small hospitals in connexion with every dispensary district wherein fevers and cases of accident could always meet with the immediate attention, which is so important to the poor.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary is situated in the house of the resident medical attendant, who is allowed 12*l.* a year for the amount of accommodation which he affords to it. The space allotted is, however, barely sufficient for the purpose, and the arrangements, owing to the want of sufficient cient room, are not as commodious as could be wished. The same character applies to the Glanworth dispensary, where there is no other waiting-room for the patients than that which is inhabited by the woman who takes care of the establishment. It is merely partitioned off by boards; and in both institutions it is the custom of the medical attendant to prescribe for patients, in ordinary cases, through a small door.

The gentleman who discharges the duties of the Kildorrery dispensary is likewise the medical attendant of that at Glanworth. He resides at the former place, and attends at the institution and prescribes for the poor between the hours of ten and two on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays. It is stated, that he seldom if ever neglects to perform his duties in person. But in order to provide for his occasional absence (as he is engaged in private practice), an assistant, who served his time to the apothecary of the Limerick dispensary, resides in his house, and besides aiding at all times in the dispensary of medicines, ensures that no delay shall ever arise in affording assistance to accidents and other cases to which immediate attention is indispensable.

The medical attendant, previous to his being appointed to his present situation, which took place in the year 1817 at a meeting of the subscribers, was a practitioner in the town of Bantry. He now acts in the united capacity of physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary. He is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, and received his qualifications for the practice of midwifery in the Westminster Lying-in Hospital. Regularity in the performance of their functions on the part of both the medical officers is insured by the authority which is vested in the committee of calling them to account for any inattention. It is also stated, that any poor person who has to complain of neglect can easily obtain redress by making application to the same tribunal through one of the subscribers. For this purpose, however, it would be necessary to issue special summonses, as the members of the committee are not accustomed to assemble except when called upon.

The salary of the physician is 90 l. a year. He also enjoys the use of the house which belongs to the dispensary, but does not receive any allowance towards the maintenance of a horse. The amount of payment given to the medical attendant depends entirely on the discretion of the subscribers or committee. The grand jury can in no other way control any expenditure under this head than by signifying their intention of withholding their customary grant altogether. Their authority is also quite inadequate to prevent private combinations for the purpose of establishing dispensaries where they may not be required, and when the only object may be to create a situation for some individual concerned.

The medical officers are elected by the subscribers at large. On occasion of the last vacancy, a notice was inserted in the newspapers inviting candidates to present themselves. The advertisement mentioned, that all competitors should be possessed of a degree from some university, but no limitation was made as to their age. Five or six candidates appeared, and all the necessary conditions were observed with reference to the subscribers who were allowed to vote, but it was not deemed necessary to acquaint the grand jury with the appointment of the successful candidate, or with the qualifications which he had brought forward. No allowances or superannuations are made by the charity on the retirement of its officers. There has been no death among the medical men attached to this dispensary. The country around Kildorrery contains very few residents of wealth. It is the same with the district of Glanworth. Neither contains any medical man, except the attendant of the Kildorrery dispensary, and it is thought by the witnesses, that, as there is but little chance of emolument from private practice, the district would be altogether without professional assistance, were it not for the salary which secures a resident surgeon.

The room in which the medicines are kept presents an appearance of tolerable neatness. The medicines were, however, hardly sufficient in quantity, and were not of the best kind. There was no quinine or morphia, but perhaps such preparations may not be altogether necessary in the ordinary course of dispensary practice. Messrs. Gosnell & Company, of Cork, are the druggists of the institution, to whose funds they contribute one guinea annually. Their bill during each of the last three years (as paid by the treasurer on the order of the committee) had amounted to nearly 50 l. There is a rule of the institution which permits the sale of its medicines for the accommodation of the inhabitants of the village, in which there is no apothecary's or druggist's shop. Not one, however, has hitherto taken advantage of the permission. The physician does not keep any medicines for his private patients. There is a tolerably good supply of the apparatus required in preparing decoctions, infusions, &c., but the few surgical instruments which the charity possesses fall very short of what its design would require. They are merely a few catheters, some bougies and a cupping apparatus, all of which the medical attendant is allowed to make use of in his private business, on account of the great expense. Leeches are occasionally, but very rarely, made use of in the practice of the dispensary. Vaccine matter is supplied gratuitously to all persons who desire to make use of it. The opinion of the medical attendant is very decidedly in favour of its preventive efficacy, and he states that the practice of vaccination is gradually diffusing itself among the poor, who have been much terrified by the great mortality latterly consequent on inoculation with small-pock. That disease has been very prevalent, but although there are not any rules in the present institution against inoculating for it, the physician has never done so, not at all approving of it.

The medical attendant keeps a register of all applications made to him for relief. He specifies the name and the nature of the disease under which each applicant labours, together with the name of the subscriber whose recommendation he presents: at a subsequent period he adds a note of the mode of termination of the patient's disorder. Whenever he has occasion or deems himself justified in refusing assistance to any person, it is his custom to acquaint the individual recommending with the reasons on which he grounds his refusal. The number of sick poor who have been relieved by the charity has varied considerably of late. The average number for the last three years has been between two and three thousand. At the date of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, there were on the books as receiving attendance at home three, and as in the habit of coming to the institution for assistance upwards of 40. Within the period mentioned, about ten cases of lying-in women are annually visited ; within the last three years there has been no operation of moment performed at the dispensary.

One of the rules of the charity declares, that no applicant shall be considered entitled to relief, unless he has obtained a ticket of recommendation from a subscriber. This condition is only dispensed with, where the medical attendant has reason to believe that the person seeking his aid is really in a state of destitution. It is stated that no difficulty exists in the way of procuring a ticket, and that even a stranger may easily provide himself with one if he stand in need of it, as the number of orders which each subscriber may issue is unlimited, and his own single signature gives it the required validity. The domestic servants of subscribers are not admitted to participate in the benefits of the charity, which those persons alone are allowed to avail themselves of, whose circumstances call for gratuitous relief.

On three days in each week patients are received at the dispensary and provided with advice and medicine. But at all times those persons who are confined by the nature of their disorder to their dwellings, are there visited by the physician, and this attention is given in all parts of the district, and repeated as often as may be necessary. The medical attendant observes, that "acute diseases require to be seen every day, and it is only when the disorder is of a chronic character that occasional attendance is of any use. The charity possesses all the usual bandages and splints which are demanded in the treatment of accidents of all kinds, and such cases always meet with immediate attention. Females of the poorer classes in this district generally intrust themselves during their confinement to country midwives, who are, in most instances, very ill qualified for their business, and it is stated that their ignorance is often productive of very serious injury to those who confide in them. It is only when parturition is attended by features of universal difficulty, that the aid of the dispensary physician can be demanded. The apothecary may be called upon to compound for a poor person any prescription given to him by an authorized practitioner.

There is no other general management than that resulting from a meeting of the subscribers once a year.

There has been but one election of a managing committee since the establishment of the dispensary. The members of it do not assemble, except when called together by summons on some particular business, and as vacancies occur among them from time to time, they are filled up singly. In their proceedings book, there is no entry of their having held a meeting during the present year (1834.)

The treasurer is the only non-medical officer in connexion with the charity. He is appointed by open voting, and without reference to the form of religion which he may happen to possess. He receives no salary for his services, and does not give the security which the Act of Parliament requires. He resides at Castletown Roche.

Reports relative to the general affairs of the institution are made twice in the course of the year. This is done in conformity with a recent resolution of the grand jury. This district contains, according to the statements of the witnesses, a very considerable number of persons qualified and willing to take an active part in any investigation having for its object the elucidation of the condition of the poor.

The following table shows the income of the Kildorrery dispensary during each of the last three years, and its sources.

It will be perceived, that it has been annually on the increase. But this fact by no means indicates that the institution rests on a sure foundation. The larger portion of the gross amount of subscriptions is contributed by six individuals, who annually give sums varying from 20*l.* to 5*l.* If their bounty were withheld, the dispensary could not continue to exist. The lowest subscription received is 10*s., and nothing is contributed from the poorer classes. All subscriptions are given unconditionally. No instances exist of any stipulation or contract made for advice or medicine in return. A bequest of twenty guineas has lately been received from a charitable individual.

The subscriptions are paid to the treasurer at the annual general meetings, or else whenever he makes application for them, and all money remains in his hands.

THIS dispensary is the only institution of the kind within the limits of the six parishes for which it has been established. It affords relief to a population of upwards of about nine thousand people, some of whom live at a distance of seven miles.

The Castlemartyr dispensary is about six miles distant. Although the present charity is under the circumstances favourably situated, the witnesses were disposed to think the extent of its district is too great, and would be very anxious to see the formation of hospitals or divisional infirmaries so arranged as to supply that intern accommodation, the want of which they have such frequent reason to complain of. The county infirmary situated at Mallow is totally inadequate to the wants of the county, and is at the same time too far removed from Castlemartyr to permit of its being an efficient source of medical relief for the inhabitants of that town and neighbourhood.

The dispensary is situated at the rear of the house, in which the medical attendant resides. There is a convenient entrance from the lane, a waiting room for patients, and a neat though small room for the preservation and dispensing of medicines.

The premises are held from year to year from the medical attendant, without any inconvenience resulting from the nature of the tenure.

The attending physician is about twenty-six years of age. He is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and possesses a diploma from the lying-in hospital in Dublin. He was unanimously elected by the subscribers in the year 1832, and is bound to attend at Killeagh on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays, and on Thursdays at Mount Uniacke. He is allowed to acquire private practice, but does not hold any other appointment. On one occasion when he was unavoidably absent for a short time, the committee were authorized to pay out of his salary another medical gentleman whose services they received. Notwithstanding his generally correct conduct, complaints have occasionally been made against him by the poor. These have been preferred through the means of a subscriber who had recommended the individual complaining, but they have in all cases proved, on investigation, to have been groundless. He has no assistant, and dispenses the medicines in person.

His salary is one hundred pounds per annum, and he derives no other emolument or advantage from the charity.

The gentlemen present, when questioned as to the power possessed by the county of checking the possible payment of too high salaries to the attendants of dispensaries, stated that instances have occurred where the grand jury have negatived the presentment containing such items. But no effectual guarantee it was admitted is in existence against the combination of a number of individuals to establish a dispensary where it might not be wanted. The witnesses were acquainted with cases of such an abuse.

At the first election, the public notice which had been given in the newspapers procured the application of eighteen candidates, at the last vacancy there were but two; they were required to possess the usual testimonials as to their professional capacity, but their eligibility was not restricted by their age. None were permitted to vote at the appointment except those who had paid up their subscriptions. There is but one other physician, and as he does not practise midwifery, his services, even if offered gratuitously, could not answer the objects of this institution. The residents of the district are not sufficiently wealthy to maintain a practitioner independent of the salary derived from the dispensary. It is stated that the present medical attendant possesses the general good will and confidence of the poor.

The room in which the medicines were kept, together with the necessary drawers, bottles, &c. was in a state of very good order. The medicines, which were of a good description, and of sufficient quantity, had been procured from Messrs. Harrington and Co. druggists in Cork, and the amount annually remitted to them shows that there is no improper economy on this head. Quinine and some other of the more expensive medicines, were observed to occur in the list of drugs supplied. The treasurer is accustomed to discharge the druggist's bills pursuant to an order of the committee. He paid the first year only seventeen pounds. None of the medicines belonging to the charity are ever sold, and those intended for the private vate practice of the physician are kept in a separate apartment. He is not in the habit of using leeches, but if he should judge them indispensable, he would be enabled to procure them. The charity has not any surgical instruments whatever. One of the duties of the medical attendant is to vaccinate gratuitously the children of the poor. He is strictly forbidden to inoculate with small-pock matter, and if he were not, he states that his own judgment would prevent his ever recurring to that practice.

The medical attendant keeps a register of all applicants; and though the charity has not been established more than three years, upwards of two thousand patients have received advice and medicine during that time. It frequently occurs that relief is refused to individuals in consequence of improper conduct and infractions of the rules of the charity; an account of such refusals is always kept. At the time of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, about three persons were in course of treatment at their homes, and about sixteen were in the habit of seeking advice at the dispensary. No capital operations have been ever performed, but during the last three years, the physician has attended eight midwifery cases.

Each subscriber is entitled to recommend one new patient on each public day, and for every guinea that he subscribes he is entitled to issue three tickets in the year requiring a visit from the surgeon. Notwithstanding these restrictions, and that every body except paupers must be provided with a recommendation, the design of the charity is not found to be impeded, and, unless we count domestic servants of subscribers as such, all persons not really requiring gratuitous relief are effectually prevented from participating in its benefits; the indigent find every facility in obtaining relief.

Extern patients are prescribed for at the institution, and, under the above restrictions, are visited at their own dwellings as often as may be necessary during the day and night; and should any acute disease require extraordinary attention, the patient would be visited as often as two or three times in the 24 hours, at any distance within the bounds of the district. During the three years of the existence of the charity there has been no demand for assistance in a case of accident; it is however stated, that immediate aid would be given in such cases. The only prescriptions made up are those of the attending physician, who is only bound to attend lying-in women, when their cases are combined with any unusual difficulty; unfortunately the poor are accustomed to place themselves in the hands of midwives, whose ignorance is in general very gross, and not unfrequently productive of much injury to both mother and child. Vaccination is performed at the dispensary whenever required, but the prejudices of the country people rather lead them to prefer inoculation with the matter of small-pox; nevertheless that disease has existed but to a very moderate extent of late years. The medical attendant mentions a case where total blindness was the result of the insertion of variolous matter; and a clergyman who was present at the examination, stated that he was acquainted with a gentleman, who, though he had been vaccinated, yet suffered severely afterwards from an attack of confluent small-pox. It may be said that the richer classes are acquainted with the beneficial effects resulting from vaccination.

There are no charitable institutions whatever in this neighbourhood having for their design the supply to the sick poor of wholesome and nutritious food.

The general management resides in the annual meeting, which takes place in the month of January, for the purpose of electing officers, &c.; those of the subscribers who do not attend this meeting are permitted to vote by proxy. The surgeon has never taken any part in the general management.

There is a managing committee, whose fixed meetings are appointed to be held on the first Mondays in the months of February, May, August and November. A board of superintendence also exists, which derives its authority from the grand jury; one of its members had visited the dispensary about six weeks previous to the examination held by the Assistant Commissioners.

The same gentleman discharges the duties of both secretary and treasurer, he acts in both capacities without remuneration, but does not give the security which the Act of Parliament requires. There is no reason to suppose that religious prejudices have had any share in the election of any officer of the charity.

There are not any printed rules.

A written report is presented twice in the year to the grand jury, in which every thing relating to the dispensary is detailed. The witnesses stated that there could easily be found in this district a sufficient number of individuals qualified by their circumstances and education to undertake the management of any extended system of relief which may hereafter be introduced; and it was added, that their co-operation would be most willingly given.

The amount received from subscribers during the first year was 125*l.* 19*s.*, during the second it only reached the sum of 69*l.*; this falling off is not unusual in the history of dispensaries immediately after their establishment. The grand jury presentment has been of the same amount, viz. 50*l.* during each of the years alluded to. There is but one subscriber of any large sum, namely, a nobleman who annually contributes 10*l.* The institution is conceived to rest on tolerably secure grounds, as there is no reason to dread any material falling off in the subscriptions, which, it is stated, are given unconditionally and without any stipulation or contract for relief or advice in return.

All funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain exclusively.

The expenditure, consisting of the surgeon's salary, rent, paper, stamps and postage, exceeded the receipts of the first year by 18*l.*, and of the second by 12*l.*; the committee examine all bills before they are discharged by the treasurer.

Twice in the year the accounts are made up, and the Assistant Commissioners had an opportunity of inspecting them for the three years previous to their visit.

The Assistant Medical Attendant.

THE dispensary at Kilworth is the only institution of the kind within the limits of the district for whose benefit it is intended, and if it were properly conducted, it would constitute a very adequate and sufficient service of relief to the inhabitants, who amount to nearly 10,000, forming the entire population of the parishes of Kilworth, Macromey, Kilcumper and Leitrim. The district extends in some directions to a distance of nine miles; however, there are dispensaries at Mitchelstown and at Fermoy, the former of which places is six miles off, the latter only three. The county infirmary at Mallow is nearly 15 miles distant, and contributes but very little to remedy the inconvenience which is felt in this town and neighbourhood to a great extent from the want of some kind of accommodation for the reception of patients. At one time a nobleman of the vicinity expended 300*l.* in the erection of a fever hospital, but his design was never completed, nor the structure applied to its original purpose, in consequence of his being totally unable to procure any co-operation from the other gentlemen of the country. This failure is the more to be regretted, as a fever hospital and a ward for the accommodation of a few surgical cases, is the kind of accommodation most peculiarly desirable for a population such as that of the Kilworth district; the miserable and dirty cabin at present applied to this purpose, and which is inhabited by an old and infirm female pensioner, does not deserve to be taken into any account.

The dispensary is situated in the main street of the town. It affords all the necessary convenience and is very well kept, but it appears to be held at rather too high a rate, the annual rent being 10*l.*

The regular medical attendant of the dispensary is a graduate in medicine of the University of Edinburgh, in which city he studied midwifery under the directions of Dr. Hamilton. Previous to his appointment to his present situation, he was engaged as a private practitioner in the town of Kilworth, and is so still. He has obtained the sanction of the committee to a selection which he has made of an assistant in the person of another medical gentleman, who is in the habit of acting with him in the performance of his dispensary duties; both these individuals reside close to the institution, and give attendance at a fixed hour every day; cases of accident and others requiring immediate aid, obtain it very readily, as one or the other of the gentlemen is always on the spot, and ready to dispense medicine or give whatever relief may be required. The control of the committee extends equally to the medical attendant and to his assistant, and is fully equal to check any irregularity or inattention on the part of either. It is also stated that a poor person who had any just reason to complain of neglect, would experience every facility in obtaining redress from the general meeting. Their mode is to prefer their complaint to the next ensuing general meeting. It is then incumbent on the medical attendant to show either that there is no just cause of complaint, or else that he was justifiably prevented from attending at the time.

But one of the medical officers is paid. He receives a salary of 60*l.* a year, and pays one-half over to his assistant. Neither is allowed for either lodging or for any kind of conveyance. The payment cannot be considered as too high.

The large proportion of opulent individuals who inhabit the neighbourhood of Kilworth, gives reason to believe that the district would not be deprived of a resident medical man, maintained by their patronage, even if there were no emolument derivable from a dispensary. At present, however, there are only two practitioners in the district, and neither would, it is stated, consider themselves bound to give either their time or advice to the poor without being remunerated.

The pharmacy is held in a very neat and commodious room, containing the usual assortment of drawers and bottles, all in tolerable condition. The stock of medicine was also good, but did not contain any of the more recently introduced preparations, except quinine. The annual cost of the supply was given as about 30*l.*, and the articles had been procured by the committee from a druggist in Cork. The medicines remain always under lock and key, and it is never permitted to sell any portions of them. There was a great want of the necessary surgical instruments. The very few that had been procured, were altogether insufficient for the purposes of the charity. Leeches are very seldom made use of in the practice of this dispensary. Vaccination is gratuitously performed when application is made for it, and between two and three hundred persons have been vaccinated during the last three months. Still a great unwillingness to resort to the practice prevails among a considerable portion of the population. The medical attendant is, however, disposed to think that the prejudice has begun to give way, and that a tendency to prefer vaccination to inoculation with variolous matter may be already perceived. His own opinion is very decidedly in favour of the preventive efficacy of vaccination.

A register is kept of applications made for relief. Particulars are given of the disease under which each applicant labours, likewise of the treatment which has been adopted, and of the result as far as it can be ascertained; the name and residence of the patient are also entered. When the Assistant Commissioners were at Kilworth, they were informed that the number of persons attended at their dwellings was about three or four, while those who came to the dispensary for assistance usually amounted to more than 30. No operation of any importance had been performed for a period of three years; but it was stated that from 20 to 30 lying-in women were annually attended.

Relief.

The subscribers are authorized to issue a certain number of orders entitling the bearers to relief; however, when a stranger or an individual in evident distress solicits aid, the medical attendant is empowered to use his discretion, and give them the necessary medicine. He is in all instances allowed to render his services when an urgent case presents itself. The servants of subscribers are always provided with advice and medicine from the charity, and as the upper class of domestics is included among those who make application, there is little doubt that many persons are assisted at it, who are by no means fit objects for its design. With respect to persons of this class, the common notion among them is that their employers subscribe more on their account than on that of the poor. There is no instance in this establishment of any subscriptions being attended with a stipulation for relief in return, but the Assistant Commissioners cannot avoid remarking on the frequency with which other persons besides those above-mentioned and whose circumstances by no means entitle them to gratuitous relief, do not hesitate to avail themselves of the benefits of the charity. One of the medical gentlemen stated that "he was no later than last week called to visit a so called dispensary patient at a distance of nine miles. The man proved to have a comfortable farm of forty acres or more at an annual rent. He was well able to pay for advice." On another occasion he was summoned to visit a respectable tenant residing on the estate of one of the governors of the institution at a distance of about seven miles. He repeated his visit, and his colleague saw him three times, without any remuneration, as he had a dispensary recommendation from his landlord. The following circumstance affords a still more flagrant proof of the abuse in question. The medical attendant was called to see the wife of the shepherd of a neighbouring nobleman, who is a subscriber to the charity. His wife was in labour of her first child. The physician was in attendance on her for the greater part of two days, and paid her at least a dozen visits. It should be mentioned that her husband received between forty and fifty pounds a year in wages, yet he offered no remuneration, and when it was applied for he refused, on the ground that, if he had asked for a ticket, he would have immediately obtained it either from the secretary or from another gentleman residing in the neighbourhood. This incident occurred about five months ago. This dispensary in particular, as well as many others, Castletown Roche for instance, where the system appears to be carried on to a far greater extent than at Kilworth, is by no means established with a view to affording medicine and medical relief to the sick poor, so much as for securing assistance and professional attendance for the domestic servants, tenants, and dependants of all kinds, of the gentlemen who contribute to its support; who must be considered solely in the light of contributors to their own convenience. Ostensibly the institution exists for public ends, but its supporters in truth serve their own ends under the cloak of serving the public. Greater destitution and want, or more abject poverty, cannot any where be seen than among the wretched inhabitants of this place, and it is but too apparent that they receive but little commiseration or kindly regard from those from whom they might naturally expect both. True it is that the poor have access to the dispensary, but the most liberal supply of medicine will not answer as a substitute for food. A dispensary would perhaps be unnecessary if they had an adequate supply of wholesome nutriment and of proper clothing, at the same time it is equally true that others assert their claims to the assistance of the dispensary who are any thing but proper objects for the receipt of it. These persons threaten their landlord's displeasure and the withdrawal of their subscription if their applications be not attended to; such a system, too, besides being a gross abuse in itself, presses hardly and most unfairly upon the medical men. They are made the "drudges" of the place, and debarred at the same time from acquiring any private practice, and for what? for the mere pittance of thirty pounds each as a return for all the troublesome and thankless duties which they have to perform; any system which is necessarily accompanied by such a state of things is far more calculated to do harm than good. It deserves further to be remarked that the contributions of the actual subscribers do not by any means bear that proportion to their respective means and resources which might justly and in fairness be expected. Men possessing some thousands a year from property in the district subscribe but an annual guinea to the dispensary, others do not subscribe at all. The former very naturally say, "Why should we give more than a guinea, as that sum entitles us to as many tickets as we want for our dependants?" The latter argue on the needlessness of giving any contribution, when their dependants can easily procure tickets in some other quarter.

Extern Patients.

On three days in the week extern patients are received at the institution and are prescribed for. The sick poor are also visited at their own houses, whenever the nature of their complaint requires that they should receive such attention; sometimes the visit is repeated twice in the day. The medical gentlemen have made a division of the labour of this part of their duties. One visits the poor of the town, the other attends throughout the rural portion of the district, and is not unfrequently obliged to ride to a distance of six or eight miles. The institution possesses all the bandages and splints necessary in the treatment of fractures and other accidents. It also extends its aid to poor women when in their confinement, but only when their case is attended with some unusual feature. The midwives, who in general possess this branch of practice, are unfortunately extremely ignorant, being women who have never received any professional instruction.

General Management.

In the absence of the medical attendant in chief, as well as of the gentleman who discharged the duties of treasurer to the institution, the Assistant Commissioners had no means of obtaining any information as to the mode of managing the affairs of the dispensary, or as to the duties of its non-medical officers.

The income of the charity, derived partly from annual subscriptions and partly from the county by an annual grant, does not usually exceed 100*l.* per annum. The subscriptions scriptions are altogether received from individuals of the wealthier class. One nobleman contributes thirty pounds a year.

Kinnataloon
Dispensary.

THE district to which the Kinnataloon dispensary is intended is of considerable extent, including the entire barony of the same name, together with part of two adjoining ones, and containing a population of 10,000 souls. Some points of its limits are at a distance of 12 or 14 miles from the institution, and were it not that the latter has been judiciously placed, and that the number of inhabitants is not proportionate to the extent of country, the efficacy of the charity would be materially lessened by its diffusion over too large a space. It is thought that a dispensary district should not under ordinary circumstances possess a greater diameter than four or five miles. There is no intern accommodation in Kinnataloon, but the want of it does not constitute an evil of any magnitude, as the poor are always attended at their own dwellings, and are, besides, averse to becoming inmates of hospitals, to which their friends do not permit them to be taken. Nevertheless, the medical attendant thinks that good might come of the establishment of a small infirmary, with about half a dozen beds for the reception of accidents and patients labouring under infectious fevers. This could not fail to be useful in a district so secluded and so far removed from any important town. Kinnataloon dispensary is situated half way between Fermoy and Tullow, and is the only medical charity in the district.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The dispensary is held in one of the thatched houses of the village. It is not in very good repair, and there is but little neatness to be observed about it. It consists of one room on the ground-floor divided by a partition of boards into two compartments, namely, a passage in which the patients wait, and a part applied to the pharmaceutical arrangements. In this were a desk, a counter, a few drawers and bottles, &c. and all wore an old and rather shabby appearance. The premises are given rent free by a gentleman who is the principal landowner in the village.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

There is but one medical officer, a gentleman of about 50 years of age, who is a graduate of the Edinburgh University, and possesses from the Dublin Lying-in Hospital a diploma which entitles him to practise midwifery. He was appointed as general medical attendant to the institution in the year 1805 at a general meeting of the subscribers, with whose permission he still is engaged in private practice. Before his appointment he resided at Youghal; he now resides a short way outside the village, and is unconnected with any other public medical establishment. It is understood that in case of his illness or of any cause requiring his unavoidable absence, he would be permitted to avail himself of the services of a regularly educated medical practitioner as his substitute. Regularity in the performance of his duties is ensured by the control which the committee possess over his conduct, and it is stated, that the poor also have it in their power to prevent any negligence or inattention on his part, by lodging a complaint in the hands of the subscriber through whose recommendation they had obtained a right to demand his services. It is understood that a medical officer who had ceased to possess the confidence and good will of the people would not be retained in connexion with this dispensary. Under ordinary circumstances the physician has not any assistant or pupil to act on emergency during his occasional absence, he is, therefore, under the necessity of at all times dispensing the medicines in person.

Medical Officer.

The salary of the medical attendant is 105*l.* per annum, and is unaccompanied with any allowance for a horse, or for a residence. The amount of payment under this head is, it is admitted, nearly altogether dependent on the discretion of the subscribers. The grand jury have it in their power to withhold their annual grant, but they have not hitherto attempted to interfere in its application; another abuse which, from the entire absence of any superior control in these matters, is not only likely to happen, but which it is stated has occurred in other places, is, that it is in the power of any medical man, who may be sufficiently dishonest for the purpose, to combine with a few friends to erect, by means of a list of apparent subscriptions, a dispensary, which thereby becomes entitled to a proportionate grant from the county. This may be done where the existence of a dispensary is either not at all wanted, or where, through the pre-existence of similar charities, it has been rendered altogether superfluous. In other counties measures have been taken to

Payment.

* The Assistant Commissioners did not give notice of their intention to visit this charity, the medical attendant was therefore the only person examined; but much information was also procured from several individuals residing in the village.

to prevent the occurrence of jobs of the kind in question. In the county Roscommon the grand jury have limited the annual salary of a dispensary surgeon to 50*l*.

Whenever a vacancy occurs in the situation of medical attendant, notice of the intention of the subscribers to proceed to a new election is given by advertisement in the newspapers, and a statement is added that all candidates will be expected to produce a degree or diploma from some recognized university. In making the new appointment there is no limitation as to the age of the candidates, nor is it necessary that the grand jury should be consulted on, or advised of any part of the proceeding. At the last election there was no competition, and the present gentleman was chosen unanimously. The votes consisted only of those who had in all things complied with the regulations of the Act of Parliament. Although there are a considerable number of opulent individuals residing in the vicinity of Kinnataloon, yet they are barely sufficient to maintain a medical man by their patronage, independent of a salary from a public establishment. The gentleman who attends the dispensary is, in fact, the only resident practitioner. Retiring allowances or superannuations would not be allowed by this charity. There has not occurred any death among the officers who have been attached to it.

The Assistant Commissioners found the arrangements of the pharmacy in a state of tolerable neatness; the medicines were of a good quality, but perhaps not sufficient in quantity; they did not observe any quinine or morphia, but it may be doubted whether those preparations are absolutely necessary in dispensary practice. The medicines had been purchased from Mr. Dargaville, an apothecary and chemist in Cork, and had been paid for by the treasurer at the order of the committee, they had cost annually during the last three years something under 45*l*. Every article is preserved under lock and key, and it is never permitted to sell any one of them, being kept quite distinct from those intended for the private patients of the medical attendant. There were not any surgical instruments worth mentioning, certainly not a sufficiency for the most ordinary purposes; leeches also, it was stated, were very seldom resorted to, on account of their high cost and the difficulty of keeping them without loss. The performance of vaccination is not imposed on the surgeon as a duty by the rules of the charity, but he is in the habit of inserting the cow-pox gratuitously to some extent, and he speaks very favourably of its powers in producing an immunity from small-pox; that disease prevails occasionally in the district, and the germs of it are always kept alive by the common custom to which the poorer classes adhere, by having their children inoculated with the virus of it.

The recommendatory tickets of all patients who apply for relief are filed; the date of their application, their name, age and residence, together with the nature of their disease and the mode of treatment adopted in it, are all entered in a register which is kept by the medical attendant; no mention, however, is made of the instances in which the aid of the charity is refused. At the date of the present examination the physician was in attendance on three poor persons at their own dwellings, and he stated, that usually about 30 new tickets were presented each public day in addition to those on which relief had been already given. Within the last three years there had been but one operation of any importance, namely, an amputation; but during that time between 30 and 40 poor women had been attended in their confinement.

Each subscriber is entitled to issue an unlimited number of orders (to which his own signature is sufficient) entitling the bearer to the aid of the dispensary; without one of these orders (except in cases of an urgent and distressing kind) the surgeon cannot be called on for his gratuitous services to any one. The household servants of subscribers are always attended, and a few instances have also occurred where individuals have imposed on governors, and have through them contrived to participate in the benefits of the charity, although by no means in circumstances which would render them fit objects for gratuitous relief. On the other hand it is stated, that some of the subscribers have withheld their usual contributions solely on the ground that advice and medicine had been refused to their tenants at the dispensary, they being persons who it was well known could very conveniently afford to pay for themselves. It would appear that some of the poorer subscribers obtain a very adequate return for the amount of their contributions; there are two of them who for a subscription of 10*s*. each acquire a right to gratuitous attendance for themselves and family.

In addition to the advice and medicine which is given to the extern patients who apply on public days at the dispensary, the sick poor are also attended at their own dwellings in all parts of the barony of Kinnataloon. It is stated that should the nature of the patient's illness require such attention, two or even more visits would be paid him in the course of the day, and that if the case were one of very great emergency attendance would not be refused at night. The institution is very poorly provided with the splints and bandages which are indispensable for the efficacious treatment of fractures and other accidents. In difficult or dangerous circumstances lying-in women are authorized to demand the assistance of the medical attendant. In ordinary cases they are usually attended by midwives, whose want of skill renders them very unfit for the duty which they undertake; numerous instances of very serious mischief are attributed to their ignorance. The medical attendant does not compound any prescriptions but his own.

No wine or other article of diet is furnished to the poor by the Kinnataloon dispensary, nor is there any institution that does so in any part of the district.

The general management of all the affairs of the dispensary rests with the subscribers at large, who are annually summoned to attend a general meeting, not more, however, than eight or ten members ordinarily obey the call, but that number is sufficient to constitute a meeting.

There

There is also a managing committee, who, according to the rules, should meet at least once every quarter; this has not been done since last May. Immediately before the assizes the establishment is inspected by the members of a board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury, but at no other time is the working of it controlled by any person in authority, as none of the governors ever visit it officially.

There is but one non-medical officer, a gentleman who discharges the duties of both secretary and treasurer; for neither office does he receive any payment, but in the latter he does not give the security which is required by one of the clauses in the Act of Parliament. There are not any bye-laws for regulating the appointments made to these honorary offices, but it is stated that they have always been free from any interference of sectarian feeling.

The attendant is retained to take care of the dispensary; he receives 2*l.* a year, and has no other allowance.

Once a year reports relative to the several concerns of the charity are laid before the members of the grand jury. The Assistant Commissioners directed their attention to the opinions of the inhabitants, as to the utility of the formation of a permanent board of health or sanatory authority in the district; the general idea was that such an establishment was in no degree necessary. It was at the same time ascertained, that there were a very considerable number of persons who would be every way qualified and willing to take a part in any investigation which would be likely to lead to a bettering of the condition of the poor.

Annual subscriptions and the grant of the grand jury compose the entire income of the dispensary; both together amount on an average of late years to about 150*l.* per annum. A nobleman who possesses considerable property in the district contributes 20*l.* a year; another individual gives 5*l.* These are the only large subscriptions, and they do not by any means form the chief dependance of the charity, which would, however, suffer very materially if they were to be discontinued.

The funds remain at all times in the hands of the treasurer.

The principal expenses of the dispensary are—

Physician's salary	105	—	—
Medicine (about)	40	—	—
Carriage	2	—	—
Attendant	2	—	—
	£. 149	—	—

Before any bill can be paid, it must have been previously examined by the committee; an order is then given by the treasurer for its amount.

No person attended at this dispensary at the period at which the Assistant Commissioners had given notice that they would hold an inquiry. The medical attendant, at a subsequent period, stated that he had not received the letter of summons, though put into the office four days before.

This dispensary is well situated for the affording medical relief to a very numerous population, who inhabit a wild and mountainous tract of country, whose nearest point is about fifteen miles distant from the city of Cork. The absence of the medical attendant, as well as of any other witness, rendered it impossible for the Assistant Commissioners to procure any information as to the general management or capabilities of the institution.

The building itself is of brick and mortar, one story in height, containing a very good room for prescribing and dispensing medicines, and a small waiting room inside. The furniture is limited to a few new chairs. The portion of the dispensary, on a rising ground, is excellent with regard to wholesome and good air, and at the same time enjoys a supply of pure water. It possesses no baths. Owing to the causes above mentioned, the nature of the tenure whereby the premises were held could not be ascertained.

The medical attendant of this dispensary is also attached to another similar institution in the neighbourhood. In the one at present under consideration, he acts as surgeon, physician, apothecary and accoucheur; but does not reside at it. In his absence, the Assistant Commissioners directed some questions to his apprentice, whom they found in the act of prescribing and distributing medicines to the assembled patients, acting in every thing as his master's substitute, the duties of which he admitted he was in the habit of frequently performing.

He was asked whether a certain medicine existed among those which were displayed on the shelves? He replied, no; although the article was present in considerable quantity. He also stated that he possessed abundance of another drug, but when desired to produce it, he pointed out one of a totally different description. When he was questioned with respect to his knowledge of disease, he said he had studied it from books. He had never attended any place to learn it, neither shop, surgery nor hospital. He was pressed upon one or two points in the treatment of ordinary disorders; but having made some answers which betrayed the grossest ignorance, he suddenly stopped and refused to submit to any further interrogatories, desiring to be informed whether he was bound to answer or not. He was told that there was no power to compel him, on which he declined holding any further communication with the Assistant Commissioners. It was, however, ascertained, that he not only received patients at the dispensary, but that he was permitted to visit the sick at their own abodes. The Assistant Commissioners regret to be obliged to add, that his manners and language left on their minds an impression of excessive ignorance.

The pharmacy is held in a room presenting tolerable convenience for the purpose. It contained a display of bottles and pill boxes, which had much the appearance of having been recently procured, and seemed to have been set forth under an expectation of an approaching investigation into the affairs of the establishment. The supply of medicine was, however, of a good quality; but there was neither quinine nor morphia, nor indeed any but the most ordinary preparations. It was entirely under the control of the above-mentioned apprentice; and it appeared from his admission, as well as from the testimony of some letters, that it was quite usual to sell portions of the drugs to certain classes of patients. There were neither pharmaceutical apparatus nor surgical instruments; and it was stated that leeches were never adopted in the practice of the dispensary.

Patients are relieved at the dispensary on three days in each week; and those whose sickness confines them to their dwellings are visited at home, but the charity does not possess any of the splints or bandages requisite for the proper treatment of fractures and other accidents.

Thus far, with respect to the topics of investigation enjoined in their instructions, the Assistant Commissioners were enabled to supply the deficiency of direct evidence by having recourse to observation. On the points of the general management of the institution, its finances and its expenditure, they had no means of obtaining any information whatever. They cannot, however, conclude, without again soliciting the attention of the board to the facts which have been already detailed, and which they conceive are abundantly sufficient to establish the necessity that exists for the creation of some control or medical surveillance over all charities destined for the same purposes as the one at present under consideration professes to be. From what they have already seen of dispensaries in the east riding of the county of Cork, they feel justified in putting forward the opinion that a legislative measure is called for, in order to place them all on a footing, different from that which they have hitherto occupied. Dispensaries are usually originated with the pretext of supplying the wants of the poor, but, constituted as a large proportion of them are at present, it is impossible that they can effect such a purpose, and if any of them may be supposed to resemble that of Magourney, it may be safely stated that all such are more likely to shorten the lives of those who apply to it, than to prolong them.

Oysterhaven
Dispensary.

THE Assistant Commissioners visited this dispensary without having given any previous intimation of their intention. On making inquiry in the town of Kinsale, of the apothecary who supplied the establishment with medicine, they were informed that they would not find the medical attendant at home until after four o'clock, as he was daily engaged up to that hour in visiting the poor of his district. The Assistant Commissioners, however, arrived at his house about two o'clock, and found that he was still in bed, and had not been out of it during that day. After they had waited for nearly an hour, the person in question descended, having the appearance of one who had been most inopportunistically disturbed in his repose, half dressed, and still bearing traces of excess in drinking. He admitted, without any hesitation, that he did not possess any degree or qualification whatsoever, entitling him to practise either as surgeon, physician, accoucheur or apothecary, under which circumstances it was deemed unnecessary to procure any detailed answers to the series of questions. On proceeding to the place where patients were usually received, it was found to be an out-house, without medicine of any kind, and unprovided with any thing which would denote the end for which the sick, who were intrusted to the care of a practitioner of such equivocal claims were admitted; fortunately the number of those who sought his aid were few. A boatman to whom some questions on the subject were addressed, stated that "the doctor would not give medicine to any one who applied for it, unless it was paid for, and that few applied for it, as they could get it better and cheaper elsewhere." The habits, manners and education of the medical attendant are such as forbid the supposition that he is in the smallest degree qualified for the trust which has been reposed in him. The Assistant Commissioners quitted the place disgusted with what they had seen, and they feel it to be quite unnecessary to add any further account of this disgraceful establishment. What has been already stated, establishes a case which loudly calls for the interference of the Legislature to protect the lives of the poor, and to prevent the fraud which is practised in the county, by the shameful misapplication of the funds which are granted by the grand jury for the maintenance of such a flagrant abuse.

The prolonged existence of this institution was in some measure explained, on a subsequent day, by the rector of the parish, who solicited a repetition of the examination. He concurred in the accuracy of the statement of facts as given in the preceding lines, and of the opinions deduced from them; but he stated in extenuation, that the medical attendant was of a respectable family in the neighbourhood, and that as his habits incapacitated him for any thing else, he was permitted to retain his present situation through charitable motives, although the subscribers were well aware of his character. The reverend gentleman was asked, "Whether it would not be better to form a subscription for the express support of the unfortunate man, than to inflict perhaps irreparable injury on the poor of the district, by throwing them into his hands?" He agreed at once that such a step would be the most correct, and said that "the matter had not presented itself to him in that light."

Expenditure.
Accounts.

There are neither attendants nor stores of any kind.

A written report is annually made to the grand jury, and is also laid before the full body of the subscribers.

The income of the dispensary is derived partly from annual subscribers and partly from the county. From the former source, the receipts average yearly about 50*l.*, and generally as much more from the latter. With the exception of two individuals, who, by subscribing 10*s.* a year, become entitled to relief for themselves and family, all the contributors are pretty nearly equal as to the amount of their donations.

The treasurer is accustomed to make personal application for all the portions of the annual income which remain in his hands, until required to meet the expenditure, which consists of 12*l.* house rent, and the remainder paid over to the medical attendant on account of salary and medicines supplied by him for the purposes of the dispensary in what manner he likes best. At present bills are examined by the committee previous to payment, and are then discharged by the treasurer.

Accounts are made up twice in the year.

Rathcormac
Dispensary.

THE district attached to the Rathcormac dispensary (which extends at the farthest to about six miles, and contains a population of about 12,000 souls) includes within its limits not less than three other medical charities of a similar character, viz. the dispensaries at Watergrass-hill, Fermoy and Glenville.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The two former places are each about four miles distant, the latter about five. The witnesses do not hesitate to say that there is too great a number of these institutions. They are of opinion that the sphere of a dispensary should never exceed a radius of five miles. The present charity has never had occasion to refuse external aid to any one seeking it under the proper conditions; but it is stated that in several instances very serious inconvenience has arisen from its being unprovided with the means of affording internal accommodation to the sick poor. To remedy this, it would not be necessary that every dispensary district should possess an hospital for its own population exclusively. All objects might be effectually attained, if a small infirmary capable of receiving a few fever patients, and possessing also some beds for an occasional accident or case of surgical disease, were attached to a certain number of contiguous districts, each separately provided with the means of external relief.

A small hospital has been recently erected two stories in height, and affording accommodation for twelve patients. However it is not yet in a fit state for opening. The dispensary is held at an annual rent of 12*l.*, and contains a very convenient waiting-room. The charity does not possess baths, nor are there any grounds or out-buildings attached to the premises which it occupies. A branch of this dispensary has been established at Castlelyons, where 2*l.* 10*s.* a year is paid for the apartment which is appropriated to it.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The medical attendant, aged 32, is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, and a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London. In the first named city and in Paris he obtained qualifications which entitled him to practise midwifery. He was appointed to his present situation by the subscribers in the year 1827, and residing within a short distance of the institution. He acts in the combined capacity of surgeon, physician, accoucheur and apothecary. He holds no second appointment, but is permitted to engage in private practice. On three days in each week he is obliged to give attendance at Rathcormac, and on two at the Castlelyons branch, in both places from ten until twelve o'clock. During his daily absence from home, he has it not in his power to leave any pupil or assistant in his place, as he is only allowed an old hospital serjeant who assists him in dispensing medicine. When, however, he has occasion to leave his residence for any longer period, he is permitted (subject to the sanction of the committee) to procure an efficient substitute. He was at one time absent for three weeks, and during that time his duties were performed by a medical friend. He is subject at all times to the control of the committee, who have it in their power to check any irregularity on his part. The poor are represented to be aware of this mode of obtaining redress for any neglect manifested towards them; and it is stated that they have availed themselves of it through the means of the subscriber whose recommendation they had presented. There is, however, no reason for supposing that the physician is not in possession of the general confidence of the people.

Medical Attendant.

The salary of the medical attendant is fixed at 120*l.* a year; but the state of the funds does not always admit of his being paid in full. In 1832, he received only 104*l.*; in 1833, only 110*l.* He has no allowance for a horse. The committee have it in their power to authorize whatever amount of payment they may think proper. The means at the disposal of the grand jury to check any improper expenditure under this head are limited to refusing the county grant, and are quite inadequate to prevent the existence of any abuse in the formation or management of charitable dispensaries.

Payment.

It has been already mentioned, that the election of the medical officer is vested in the annual subscribers, who, on the occurrence of the last vacancy, held a general meeting, and appointed the present physician unanimously. No notice had been previously inserted in the the newspapers, and accordingly the successful candidate alone presented himself. He was chosen without any inquiry as to his age, and was only required to be possessed of a degree from some recognized university.

The grand jury were not apprized of the transaction in any of its stages, nor were they made acquainted with the qualifications of the person chosen. There is no second medical man in the district, which does not possess a sufficient number of wealthy individuals to maintain a practitioner, independently of the salary derived from the dispensary. Retiring allowances are not granted by this institution, and no physician has died while in connexion with it.

The pharmacy is conducted with much neatness, and contains a very fair supply of good medicine (including quinine and morphia), procured from the Messrs. Harrington, druggists in Cork, whose yearly account, as discharged by the treasurer, has latterly averaged about 35*l*. Formerly the necessary medicines were procured by contract from the medical attendant, but that is the case no longer, and those articles which he requires for his private practice are kept separate from those intended for the purposes of the dispensary, and which remain under the care of an old man, who is accustomed occasionally to compound prescriptions, and even to draw teeth and perform venesection. In urgent and pressing cases, the medical attendant is permitted to sell the medicines of the charity to those who apply for them, but the money thus obtained is always brought to the credit of the dispensary, as appeared from the accounts presented to the Assistant Commissioners. There is a very good collection of the usual apparatus for preparing decoctions and infusions, but there are not any surgical instruments, and, it is stated, that leeches are only resorted to on rare occasions. Vaccination is, according to the rules, performed gratuitously almost every day. The attending physician states, that he holds the practice to be very generally preventive of small-pox, and that the confidence of the public in its efficacy is very much on the increase. Variola has ceased to be a frequent disease in the district, and inoculation with it, though not expressly forbidden at the dispensary, is never practised.

A register is kept by the medical attendant of the circumstances relating to each application for relief. He does not, however, particularize those instances where he thinks himself justified in refusing gratuitous aid, that is to say, when the individual is able to pay. A copy of the register is annually laid before the grand jury, and it would appear from it, about 30 cases of lying-in women were attended during the last three years. No operation of any importance has taken place during the last three years.

Patients seeking relief from this institution are required to have provided themselves with a recommendation. This condition is not, however, very strictly enforced, and the utmost facility is afforded to all of obtaining aid, by the rule which permits each subscriber to issue an unlimited number of orders in his own name. The servants of subscribers are at all times entitled to the aid of the charity. None of the poorer contributors receive assistance in return for their subscription, and it is stated, that none are allowed to participate in the advantages of the institution, except those whose circumstances justly entitle them to do so gratuitously.

Besides the extern patients who receive advice and medicine at the dispensary on the days of public attendance, the sick poor who are confined by illness to their dwellings are visited by the physician at all places within the district, both by day and night. These visits, observes that gentleman, "to be of any service, must, in acute cases, be paid not only every day, but sometimes oftener. Occasional attendance is of little or no use, except where a patient labours under a chronic disorder." Due provision has been made for having a supply of bandages and splints, for the proper treatment of fractures and other accidents, to which immediate attention is always given. The women of the labouring class in this district are in ordinary cases attended during their confinement by midwives, who are, unfortunately, wholly uneducated, and the cause of much mischief; the poor are entitled to claim the assistance of the medical attendant of the dispensary, when parturition is unusually protracted or complicated.

The subscribers, who are in number about 35, constitute the principal direction, in which the medical officer has never been allowed to participate. A general meeting takes place once in every year, which is seldom attended by more than six or seven persons, although all governors are equally privileged to be present and to vote, but not by proxy. The proceedings of these meetings have not been minuted with much regularity, and it is stated that business may be transacted, without reference to the smallness of the number of members present.

There is no managing committee, nor do any of the governors ever visit the institution officially, except at the period of the general meeting. There is, however, a board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury, which occasionally inspects the establishment.

The treasurer, who is the only non-medical officer, was elected by the subscribers at large several years ago, and he has retained the appointment since that period; he acts without any salary, and does not give any security, but accounts every year with the grand jury. The Assistant Commissioners had every reason to believe that the election of the treasurer took place without the influence of any exclusive feeling, or of any irregular accession to the number of subscribers or voters.

An old hospital serjeant has been appointed by the subscribers as an attendant to the physician, at whose discretion he retains his situation. His wages are 12*l*. a year, paid by the treasurer, and he is provided with lodgings.

Nothing intended for the use of the charity is ever purchased from any one in connexion with it, whether as governor or officer.

THE district attached to the Passage and Monkstown dispensary is considered by the witnesses as rather too large. It extends about four miles and a half in all directions, and contains a population of nearly 6,000 souls, who are entirely dependent on it for medical relief. It is stated at the same time, that there has never been occasion to refuse extern aid in advice and medicine to any one applying under the proper conditions. The want of intern accommodation is the inconvenience which is most severely felt, and which it would be most desirable to remedy; with this view, it is proposed by the gentlemen present at this examination, that medical districts of a definite extent should be formed, and that to each of these districts a dispensary for granting extern aid should be attached, and that with a certain number of them, greater or less according to local circumstances, a small hospital should be connected, capable of containing a few fever patients and some spare beds for cases of accident and surgical disease. The only medical charity in the country surrounding Passage is the dispensary at Douglass, at a distance of about four miles and a half.

The dispensary is held on the first floor of a house, which is hired for its purposes at a rent of 12*l.* a year, from a gentleman who is a member of the managing committee. Although it is only held from year to year, yet no inconvenience has hitherto arisen from this precarious mode of tenure. It were, however, to be wished, that all similar buildings were the permanent property of the county. The ground floor is occupied as a druggist's shop by the medical assistant. There is no garden nor any out-buildings.

The medical attendant had been a practitioner in the city of Cork. He now resides within about a quarter of a mile of the institution, to which he was appointed in the conjoined capacities of physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary in the year 1828. He is a graduate of the Edinburgh University, and possesses a certificate of having studied midwifery in that city. His age at present is 31. He is still engaged in private practice, but holds no second appointment, and is bound to attend at the dispensary for the relief of the poor every morning from ten until eleven o'clock. When absent on unavoidable business, he is permitted to provide a substitute, subject to the approbation of the committee. This has been done on some occasions, but he is at all times subject to the control of the managing committee, who have full power to check any irregularity or inattention in the discharge of his duties; a power with which, it is stated, the poor are perfectly well acquainted, and of which they have in several instances shown their readiness to avail themselves, by the frequent complaints which have proceeded from them through different subscribers. The daily hours of attendance are considered to be amply sufficient for the due performance of all the ordinary services that are required from the physician, and as he possesses an assistant, there is always some one on the spot ready to afford aid in cases which admit of no delay. Medicine is dispensed both by the medical attendant and by his assistant.

The salary of the physician is guaranteed to be not under fifty pounds per annum, and it is understood that he is to receive any surplus which may exist at the termination of the year. He is also provided with a house, but not with any mode of conveyance. As to the amount of remuneration which may be awarded to a medical man in return for his professional services, it rests entirely at the discretion of the subscribers. The grand jury can no otherwise regulate it than by the power which they possess of stopping their usual yearly grant. In the present instance there are some grounds for supposing that an institution has been unnecessarily set on foot more for the purpose of obtaining an appointment for an individual than for the benefit of the poor.

The subscribers of a guinea annually are alone entitled to vote at the election of a medical attendant. The grand jury are not made acquainted with any portion of the proceedings, nor are they consulted as to the qualifications and fitness of the successful candidate. When last a vacancy occurred, an advertisement was inserted in the public journals intimating that on a certain day a new election would take place, and that all candidates (without any limitation as to age) would be expected to possess the degree of M. D. from some recognized university; there was no notice that any qualification as apothecary would be required. The present attendant does not, in fact, possess any. Four candidates presented themselves. The vicinity of Passage and Monkstown abounds in residents of easy circumstances so far as regards numbers, they are fully adequate to maintain a medical man among them, but it happens that there does not reside one of that class in the district, with the exception of the attendant of the dispensary, and it is stated that his services would not be given to the poor, unless he was remunerated for his time and trouble.

The apartment in which the medicine is dispensed to the poor in connexion with this charity can hardly be considered as part of the institution. It is in every sense of the word an apothecary's shop, the apothecary being the medical attendant who contracts to supply to the patients for a certain yearly sum the medicines which he himself orders, and which it appears (from a bill shown to the Assistant Commissioners) he is accustomed to procure from a painter and glazier. The shop certainly contained, with the exception of quinine and morphia, all the medicines usually adopted in practice, but there was no surety that the attending physician or his journeyman, (under whose charge the dispensary drugs were said to remain) should not supply the poorer patients with an article very different from that which to all appearance, existed for their use. This was the more likely to occur, as the former individual had a positive interest in so doing, inasmuch as he was considered to be entitled to all the surplus remaining from the income of the charity after its yearly expenditure had been provided for. It was not therefore possible to ascertain what had been the actual cost of medicine, for any previous year. The medicines intended for private and those for dispensary practice were all kept together, and although a cupboard was pointed out in which were said to be the articles for the latter purpose, it was found on inspection to contain nothing but some refuse drugs; in such a condition as to preservation and distribution as gave the public clearly to understand that if they wished to have medicines good for any thing, they should purchase them at the shop. There were not any surgical instruments, and it was stated that leeches were never used, on account of the expense. The children of the poor are gratuitously vaccinated at this institution, but it is to be regretted that no regular days have been appointed for the purpose, nor any system adopted whatever. The opinion of the medical attendant is very strong as to the preventive efficacy of the practice, and he states that the confidence of the public in it is very generally on the increase. Small-pox has ceased to be common in the district, although inoculation with variolous matter is not against the rules of the dispensary. The physician states he has always refrained from it.

Patients' Registration.

The medical attendant keeps a register of the number who receive relief from the charity. He records the name of the patient, his age, and his residence, and the nature of the disease for which he seeks advice. The termination of the disease is also in a few instances mentioned. On an average of the last three years, about one thousand persons have been annually relieved, and it is stated that none have been refused assistance. When the Assistant Commissioners visited the institution, there were two poor persons attended at their homes by the physician, and usually about eight individuals came to the dispensary on public days. The number of lying-in women who receive assistance each year averages about nine. None would be attended but in difficult cases.

Who entitled to Relief.

All persons who obtain the recommendatory order of a subscriber are entitled to apply for the advice of the medical attendant, and to receive the necessary medicine. As these recommendations can be procured with the greatest facility, and as each governor may issue an unlimited number of them, there is little chance that any one, even a stranger, can be excluded from the benefits of the charity. On the contrary, the facility enables many individuals to obtain gratuitous assistance whose circumstances by no means renders such necessary.

Extern Patients.

In addition to the patients who are relieved at the dispensary, those poor persons whom sickness confines to their homes are visited by the physician, provided the distance of their dwellings do not exceed four miles and a half from the town; that gentleman observes that he is in the habit of visiting patients who labour under any acute disease at least once a day. He considers occasional attendance as of hardly any use in such circumstances, and only likely to do good where the affection partakes of a slow or chronic character. He frequently is called upon to see patients at night. The Assistant Commissioners inquired into what provision of splints, bandages, &c., had been made for the treatment of fractures and other accidents. They were told, that every thing necessary for the purpose existed, but when a desire was expressed to see them they could not be produced, and it was stated in explanation, that they were in use among extern patients. However, on looking over the register of cases, it appeared that not a single case requiring such applications was under treatment. Attendance on poor women whilst in their confinement forms part of the duties of the attending physician, but only when their cases present some unusual difficulty or complication. At other times, they have no other aid than that afforded by the country midwives, who are represented to possess very few qualifications for the purpose, and to be not seldom the cause of much suffering and injury to those who place themselves in their hands. No other prescriptions are made up for the poor at this charity than those of the attending physician.

Nourishment.

The sick poor are not supplied with any kind of nourishment from the present or any other institution in the district.

General Management.

The subscribers to the Passage and Monkstown dispensary amount to nearly 40. They nominally exercise the supreme authority in the general management of the establishment, and are understood to assemble in general meeting once every year. However, although every governor is equally privileged to take a part in the proceedings, and although voting by proxy is not permitted, it seldom happens that more than from 12 to 14 individuals are present at each meeting, of which some account is always committed to writing. It may, indeed, be stated, that the dispensary has been altogether directed at the discretion of the medical attendant, although his name is not to be found amongst the list of governors.

Managing Committee.

A managing committee, to whom are intrusted the details of the institution, is annually appointed, with instructions to assemble once in every month. Their proceedings have been recorded with regularity when they did meet, up to the last few months. A board of superintendence chosen by the grand jury also exists; but none of the governors ever visit the establishment (at least officially) during the intervals of the meetings of the committee.

Officers not medical.

There are two non-medical officers, viz. the secretary and the treasurer, both acting without remuneration. The latter does not give any security, and the former gentleman was absent in England at the date of this examination. About twelve years ago, the assistant to the physician was superseded.

There

The Assistant Commissioners procured a copy of the rules and regulations, which appeared to be well calculated to promote the usefulness of the charity.

Every half year a report relative to the details of the institution is laid before the members of the grand jury; and at the end of the year it is presented to the subscribers. There are, it is said, a very considerable number of intelligent persons to be found in the district of Rathcormac, and who would be very willing to co-operate in any investigation likely to promote the welfare of the poorer inhabitants.

The income of the dispensary is derived partly from annual subscribers and partly from the county. The subscribers belong exclusively to the wealthier classes, and they all give their contributions without any stipulation for gratuitous assistance in return. One individual gives yearly 15*l.*, another gives 10*l.* During the last three years the amount of the grand jury presentment has remained the same, viz. 70*l.* The following were the receipts, under the head of subscription, during the period mentioned:—

1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	88	12	-
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	93	10	-
1834	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	86	17	1

The treasurer receives both portions of the income, which remains exclusively in his own hands.

Medicines, salaries and rent constitute the principal items of expenditure. Bills are discharged by the treasurer, who is expected to examine their accuracy previous to payment.

Person who attended the Examination.

The Medical Attendant was the only person whom the Assistant Commissioners had an opportunity of examining. The notice of their intended visit had not reached Watergrass-hill, although it had been despatched through the post office some days previous to their arrival.

THE district for which this charity is intended, extending in some directions nearly nine miles, contains a population of about 15,000 souls; within its compass are three other dispensaries, at from three to five miles distance each, viz. Glenville, Rathcormac and Glanmire. These contiguous sources of relief are not productive of all the advantages which might be expected to flow from them; for the Glenville medical officer, being a non-resident, the poor of that neighbourhood are in the habit of seeking relief at Watergrass-hill, where the physician attached to the present dispensary resides, and is bound to give advice at all hours. This confusion of claims is felt by the physician to be a very serious grievance, and leads him to coincide with the idea of forming well-defined medical districts, each of them to have attached a dispensary. He did not suggest the extent of country which each division should embrace, nor the number of such divisions with which an hospital should be connected, but he complained much of the inconvenience which he had, on many occasions, felt from the want of proper intern accommodation for the sick poor.

The dispensary is held in a house in the village, which is, perhaps, sufficiently large for the intended object, but is certainly not possessed of a very respectable exterior. It contains a waiting room, but quite unprovided with furniture. The premises are only held from year to year, and from a person who is not connected with the charity. This precarious mode of tenure may appear injudicious; but it is stated that no practical inconvenience has hitherto resulted from it. However, there can be little doubt that all such places should be the property of the county which maintains them. This would secure, if nothing else, at least some greater attention to their decent condition.

There is but one medical officer, a gentleman aged about 29 years. He is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, and in that city he studied midwifery. He also spent some time at Paris and in London, in the pursuit of professional knowledge. Previous to his appointment to this situation in the month of January last, the duties of it were discharged by a physician who dwelt at Fermoy. He resides about a quarter of a mile from the dispensary, and is accustomed to receive the poor, and to give them advice and medicine on all the week days, and at all hours. In the dispensing of medicine he sometimes has recourse to the aid of an assistant, and if any occasion should require a temporary interruption of his attendance (a circumstance which as yet has not occurred) he would be able to procure the services of an efficient substitute, under the sanction of the committee.

The salary of the medical attendant is 100*l.* a year, without any further allowance for either a horse or a residence. As to the amount of payment made to him, if the grand jury conceive that there existed on the part of the subscribers any inclination to grant him too high a rate of remuneration, they could at once check the disposition by withholding their usual yearly presentment. By the statement already made of the too great number of dispensaries in this district, it would appear that either there is no authority capable of preventing their formation, or else that it has been suffered to remain in operation.

When the last vacancy occurred in the situation of medical attendant, the subscribers gave notice, by an advertisement inserted in the public journals, of their intention to proceed to a new election, in which afterwards none were permitted to participate, except those who had fully paid up their annual subscription. Three candidates presented themselves on that occasion; there was no inquiry made as to their respective ages, but they were all required to be possessed of a degree from some university, or of a diploma entitling them to practise surgery. It was not deemed necessary to hold any communication with the grand jury in reference to the appointment. If a veto were vested in that or in some other superior authority, all improper selections would be effectually precluded. There is not a second medical man in the district, and as the amount of private practice which that gentleman can look to is very trifling (owing to the scarcity of wealthy and independent residents), there is little reason to suppose that either his services or indeed those of any qualified practitioner could be secured for the poorer inhabitants, except through the emolument derived from the dispensary.

Pharmacy.

The room used for dispensing medicines was found to be in good order, and to contain a good supply of drugs of a fair quality, including several of the more delicate preparations; such as quinine and morphia. They had been all purchased from the Messrs. Harrington of Cork, druggists, and it was stated that the treasurer had paid to that firm about 30*l.* as the amount of their bill furnished during each of the last three years. The medicines remain in charge of the medical attendant or of his apprentice, and they are never sold to any person, or used in making up the prescriptions of other practitioners, being kept quite distinct from those the medical attendant makes use of in his private practice. There was a very tolerable collection of the apparatus necessary for preparing decoctions, &c., but there were not any surgical instruments, except splints for fractures. Leeches it was said were rarely ordered on account of their great expense, but when judged absolutely necessary, they were procured.

A register is kept by the medical attendant, particularizing the disease of each applicant; of this register a copy is annually lodged with the grand jury. Since the appointment of the present physician (a period of about eight months) no person has been refused relief, no operations of any importance have taken place, nor has he been called on to attend any lying-in women.

Who entitled to Relief.

Every person (including the domestic servants of subscribers) who can procure a recommendation with a single signature, is entitled to relief in advice and medicine. As there is no limit to the number of these recommendations which each subscriber is authorized to issue, there exists no difficulty in obtaining them, and the Assistant Commissioners heard without surprise, that they were not unfrequently made use of by persons whose circumstances by no means rendered them proper objects for gratuitous assistance; the charity may justly be said to be further abused by the practice of permitting individuals to subscribe small sums, with the understood agreement that they and their families shall receive medical aid in return.

Extern Patients.

It has been already mentioned that the medical officer is bound to attend at all times to the poor who apply to him. He would also visit at their dwellings any poor whose illness rendered them unable to leave their homes, provided they did not reside at a greater distance than nine miles in one direction, and about six in the other; accidents and other urgent cases would be attended to at any hour of the day or night, and splints, bandages, &c. have been provided for the proper treatment of fractures and severe injuries. The physician remarks that he considers himself bound to repeat his visits more than once a day when an acute disorder requires that attention. "In such cases," he adds, "occasional attendance is absolutely of no use. In chronic diseases, however, the case is different." The midwives to whom the women of the poorer classes generally intrust themselves in this district during their confinement are represented as being extremely ignorant, and it is said that many injuries are caused by their carelessness and incompetency. It is only when labour becomes complicated or protracted, that the services of the dispensary physician can be demanded; that gentleman is in the constant habit of performing gratuitous vaccination, and his opinion is very strong in favour of it, as a preservation against small-pox. The confidence of the public is also very generally on the increase. The medical attendant is not forbidden to inoculate with variolous matter, but he disapproves of the operation. Happily the disease has appeared very rarely of late years.

General Management.

About 100 subscribers constitute the general managing authority. It is understood that a general meeting should take place every quarter, and such meetings are usually attended by from 10 to 12 of the body, who are accustomed to keep minutes of the business which they may have to transact. The surgeon has never been allowed to take any part in their proceedings, but those who cannot or will not attend, are permitted to give their votes by proxy.

Managing Committee.

There is besides a managing committee, who have the immediate control of the affairs of the institution, and of whose proceedings minutes are regularly kept. The working of the charity is further subject to the inspection of a board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury, but it is to be regretted that no governor during the intervals of the assembling of the committee directs any personal care to its interest, or to the state of the patients in connexion with it.

Officers not medical.

Both the treasury and the secretary discharge the duties of their respective offices without any remuneration. The former does not give the security which the Act of Parliament specifically requires; the two situations are filled by the subscribers, and it is stated, without reference to exclusive or religious prejudices.

Persons who attended the Examination.

CHARLES HAINES, M. D.—RICHARD L. JAMESON, esq.—Archdeacon ST. LAWRENCE (attended in place of the Rev. W. COLBURN, secretary.)—JAMES M'MULLAN, esq.—Rev. W. SCANNELL, R. C. C.—Rev. CHRISTOPHER TUTHILL.

THE extent of the district is about three miles in length and two miles in breadth, and the point most distant from the dispensary is four miles. The population is very numerous, amounting to about 4,000. This district, which is of peninsular form, consists of the parishes of St. Michael's, Black Rock, and portions of the city parishes of St. Barns and St. Nicholas; it comprises two large villages, Ballintemple and Dundannion, and hamlets, &c. &c. The Douglas dispensary is distant about two miles, and with this exception and that of institutions at Cork, four miles distant, there are no institutions within six miles of the Black Rock dispensary. This dispensary seems sufficient, and is most eligibly placed for the district.

The medical attendant could visit a distance of four miles; but the extent of country to be included in a dispensary district must depend upon the number of inhabitants. There is no intern accommodation. It was not considered necessary to establish a fever hospital here, as there is no difficulty in procuring admission at the fever hospital in Cork.

The house taken for the dispensary is small, but neat and commodious; it is built of brick and roofed with tiles, and is in a good state of repair. It consists of three rooms, a waiting-room below in front for patients, a sleeping room in the rear for a woman who lives in the house, and on the first floor the dispensary room, which is of considerable size, supplied with chairs, table, writing desk, counter for dispensing medicines, &c. There is a small garden attached. The premises are rented at 8*l.* per annum, but are not held by lease. This cannot lead to any inconvenience, as another house could, without the least difficulty, be had, and it is thought that the premises, being the property of the county, would not be any advantage.

The medical attendant, aged 36, took the degree of M. D. at Edinburgh, and also is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of London. He is besides a licentiate of midwifery of the Dublin Lying-in Hospital. He resides in the parish, at Ballintemple, near Gassess, in the centre of the district, and about a quarter of a mile from the dispensary. By the rules of the establishment, he is not allowed to sleep out of the district. He was appointed to the institution in 1832, at a meeting of the subscribers, who required a resident physician. Before his appointment he had been practising at Cork; he does not attend any other institution, but is allowed private practice. His appointment is as physician and surgeon. In case of illness or of necessity for temporary absence, he obtains leave of the subscribers, by applying through the secretary. He attends every day, except Sunday, at eleven o'clock, and the duty has never been done by proxy. In case the medical officer be irregular in his attendance, the poor can complain to any subscriber, who would bring such complaint before the general meeting. The medical officer is himself always in readiness to attend, and the medicines are dispensed by him. There is no pupil attached to the institution.

One medical officer only is paid, and the amount of his salary, viz. 100*l.* per annum, paid from subscriptions and presentments. He receives no allowance for a horse or other conveyance, nor for board and lodging. The grand jury of the city could withhold presentments, if they thought the money improperly expended, or that too great a sum was paid to the medical attendant, or they could appoint a board of superintendence, by which means they might see that the public money was rightly applied, and so far as the public money is concerned, their control seems sufficient.

At the last election, when the present medical officer was chosen by the subscribers, they pledged themselves not to make any promise till they had seen testimonials, by which they would be guided. Notice is given by public advertisement whenever a vacancy occurs.

There can be no control over the elections, which are left to subscribers, who would cease to subscribe if subject to control in such a matter. In this institution the testimonials of a medical degree and also in midwifery are indispensable.

There is not any limitation as to the age of the officers, either in appointing or displacing them. Sixteen candidates came forward at the last vacancy, but were reduced to seven by testimonials. The subscription of a guinea entitles a person to vote at these elections. There are individuals in the immediate neighbourhood capable of paying for advice, sufficient in number to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary emolument; it is not, however, probable that any physician would reside in the district, because of its vicinity to Cork, were it not obligatory upon the dispensary and medical attendant that he should do so.

No retiring allowances are given, nor has there been any mortality among the medical officers. In case the medical officer or officers should be harsh to, or neglect the patients, they can complain to a subscriber, as before stated. The poor are aware that there is such a tribunal, but there have been no complaints since the last appointment.

It never occurs that medical officers are appointed or retained against the known feelings of the people.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed, condition of drawers, bottles, &c. are all exceedingly neat, and in excellent order. The medicine appears to be of good quality, and sufficient sufficient in quantity, and a good supply of the more delicate and expensive medicines, such as quinine, morphia, &c. and all that is necessary.

The medicines are supplied by Messrs. Harrington, druggists, of Cork, who are not subscribers. The accounts are audited at the annual meeting, and paid by the treasurer. The annual expense for the last three years was—

In the two latter years the expense of medicine was less, as the cholera board made a present to the dispensary of medicines left. The medicines are locked up and left under the care of a woman at the dispensary. There are no medicines or medical articles belonging to the institution sold to any persons, nor does the medical officer dispense medicine at all on his own account. The institution possesses all the requisite apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c. and they are in good order. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the dispensary; the medical attendant having a supply of his own has saved the dispensary all expense on this head. Leeches are not used. The medical officer is bound, as far as he is able, to give vaccine matter gratis for the neighbourhood, and the rule is that vaccination shall be practised, and the medical officer would not inoculate with small-pock.

Patients' Registra-

The return of the number of patients, arranged as above, is submitted annually to the grand jury. No register is kept of persons refused attendance; but an explanation is given to subscribers when required. The number of patients on the books at the time of visiting were, six attended at home, and 30 who came to the institution. No operations of any importance were performed during the last three years. The medical officer has attended in 13 difficult midwifery cases in the year 1833, and nine in the four last months of 1832, as appears by the book.

Who entitled to

Relief.

All persons who bring a recommendation are entitled to relief, also the servants of subscribers; but no persons participate in the benefits of the charity who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance. Attendance is not given gratuitously to any of the poorest subscribers. As an order for aid of the institution is necessary, none but urgent cases are attended without recommendation; such order need be signed but by one subscriber, and there is no difficulty at all in obtaining it. The subscribers are not limited in the number of tickets, although it would appear that five at a time on the books is the number allowed for each guinea subscriber. In case a poor person be not known to, or be not liked by the subscribers, still it is not at all likely that he would be thus excluded from the benefit of the county subscription.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and sick poor are attended at their own dwellings, and the limit is the boundary of the district; should the illness be such as to require two or three visits a day, they would be paid, and attendance would be given in the night, if required, by the poor. In case an accident should occur, a fractured limb, &c. the medical officer possesses all the necessary means for assistance which applies to purposes of the institution.

No prescriptions but those of the medical attendant are made up at the institution. Lying-in cases are attended in cases of difficulty only; but such cases are generally attended by midwives who possess no skill at all, and have had no instruction, therefore injury may often arise to both mother and child. Daily attendance on the sick is considered absolutely necessary, particularly in dangerous cases, and then the poor are attended even at their own houses. The medical attendant has visited a case daily, and even twice a day, during the last fortnight. It is also considered that occasional attendance is of use. There is no prescription book kept, the patients being seen daily. Vaccination is performed very regularly and gratuitously. There have been many secondary cases of small-pox, but all favourable, and this disease has been very frequent of late years, particularly this last year. The confidence of the public in vaccination is considerable, yet they are careless in regard to it, unless frightened by the occurrence of small-pox in the neighbourhood. The medical officer vaccinated about 90 this year; but only 16 the preceding one. Cases arising out of the local secondary effects from small-pox, as on the breast of nurses, and even when applied to the case of visitors who happened to handle children suffering under this disease (especially in bad cases) are not uncommon; but the medical officer has not seen a fatal case from constitutional disturbance.

There is not any institution in the neighbourhood for affording food or clothing, or fuel, to the sick poor, upon which the medical men of the institution can give an order; such a mode of relief did exist during cholera, and there is still a fund of 40*l.* remaining for any emergency which may arise.

The general management rests with the subscribers, who are summoned for any business, and five constitute a quorum.

Medical or salaried officers are not governors of the institution, nor has it been essentially under the management of the surgeon. Salaried officers are not allowed any material participation in the general management, neither is any person ex officio in the principal direction. The regular fixed meetings of the direction are annual; five constitute a meeting. The meetings are regularly attended; from 10 to 15 are in the habit of attending.

All governors are equally entitled to attend and vote, and can send their votes in writing. Minutes are kept of the proceedings.

There is no managing committee appointed by the subscribers; but they are all summoned by the secretary whenever there is any business to be done. The medical officer stated that the minutes are regularly kept; but owing to the secretary's absence they were not produced. The treasurer, who was absent also, sent his book, which we inspected; it was most carefully kept, all monies received and disbursed being entered by him in the most minute and regular manner. No board of superintendence ever has been appointed by the grand jury of this city; at least none have ever visited the patients, nor is there any visiting governor.

All officers are appointed by the subscribers generally; the form of electing all officers is gone through annually at a full meeting of all the subscribers, called for the first Monday in January, and the voting in general business is open, but the last election of physician was by ballot, such a mode being believed to be the most beneficial. Particular religious belief does not exclude any person from being an officer. The medical attendant is a protestant; the treasurer and secretary are protestants. A sudden accession of governors or governesses immediately previous to the election of any officers has not occurred. The treasurer, collector or auditor are not paid officers, nor does the treasurer give the security required by Act of Parliament. The last medical officer was called on to reside in the parish, and in consequence of his declining to do so, a new appointment took place.

There is a woman attendant who resides within the house; board is not found for her, nor has she any perquisites; her wages, 16*s.* per month, are paid by the treasurer; she was appointed by the subscribers, and can be discharged by them also; her general conduct is required to be good, and she is obliged to be always on the spot.

No governor, member of committee, officer or servant supplies any article for the institution, nor is any article of the institution ever lent or used by any governor or officer.

The rules are not printed; the present regulations are generally believed to conduce to the utility of the institution. Alterations have been lately made by which the dispensary is open every day except Sunday, and the physician is obliged to reside within the district. These rules appear to render this charity as efficient for the relief of the poor as is necessary.

Reports are made at stated periods relating to admissions, discharges, cures, relieved, deaths, &c., and these reports are made to the subscribers, and usually printed. A board of health was formed during the prevalence of cholera two years since, and they held meetings at the dispensary, which in such cases is considered a proper place.

The district affords a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, provided it hereafter be thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The funds arise from resident subscribers and presentments from the grand jury, usually about 50*l.*, but increased the last two years to about 65*l.* None of the poorer classes subscribe; but there are not any particular subscribers on whose bounty the existence of the charity depends. The subscriptions are on the increase, the residence of the physician having afforded so great satisfaction, and it was thought that the funds otherwise would have materially fallen off. There is no stipulation in a single instance to the effect that a subscriber or any of his family is to obtain relief gratis. No capital stock in houses, lands, &c. belongs to the institution, from which annual income is derived.

The treasurer sends out receipts and gets in the subscriptions, which are lodged in the treasurer's name, for the Black Rock dispensary, in the Provincial Bank of Ireland, and an interest paid, of which the institution has the benefit.

The accounts are made up, audited and reported once a year, and as often as made up are presented to the full body of the subscribers, and copies are sent to the grand jury.

The professional gentleman who has the care of this dispensary is a well-educated and intelligent person, and very attentive to the duties of his situation. The gentlemen also who subscribe to this charity, as well as the treasurer and secretary, (who were unable to attend on the occasion of our visit) all seem to take great interest in the well being and beneficial operation of the institution. It is a matter of great satisfaction to be able to state, that the establishment is exceedingly well conducted, and that it affords the very best relief to the sick poor of the district that can be provided by the dispensary system.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of this district is about 110,000, it comprehends the city and suburbs of Cork; the most distant point is about two miles from the dispensary; the district is divided into seven parts, and there is a medical superintendent to each. It is the general opinion that the medical institutions in this quarter are too few, and that the utmost limit which should be comprehended in any one dispensary district is two miles from a central point; it has been in contemplation to divide the district into three parts, and to have a dispensary attached to each.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The house is built of brick, stone and mortar, three stories high; it has a very good and convenient room for dispensing medicines, but a very bad one for the physicians to prescribe in; there is a waiting place, which is a long cold hall, subject to a current of cold air; there is scarcely any furniture belonging to the institution, that in use is the property of the apothecary; the whole house, except the part occupied by the apothecary, is devoted to the attendants; the back parlour is occasionally used for meetings of the committee and medical gentlemen. There is an abundant supply of pure water, and the sewers are tolerably good; there are no baths, but there is a small garden and plot of ground attached, and the usual out-buildings and offices. The premises are occupied by the apothecary; they are held under a lease taken for three years; rent 23*l.* per annum, and minister's money 6*s.*, and pipe water 2*l.* 2*s.*, but free of all other taxes. The landlord is not connected with the institution.

Medical Officers.

The medical officers who principally attend the institution are, a licentiate of the King and Queen's College of Physicians, Dublin, four physicians possessing degrees from the Edinburgh University, one of whom is also a member of the College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, a member of the College of Surgeons of London, and a graduate of the University of Glasgow, who is a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of that town.

The medical attendants belonging to this institution are elected by the subscribers, and the voting is by ballot. Two of these medical gentlemen attend the Lying-in Hospital, but receive no salary for their attendance. In case of any medical attendant of this institution requiring more than one week's leave of absence, he may obtain it by procuring the permission of the committee, and leaving in his place a duly qualified substitute. The medical attendants are allowed private practice, but are bound to attend at the dispensary daily from eight o'clock to twelve. In case of neglect of duty, a complaint can be made to the monthly committee, or to a committee summoned at any time by the secretary. The resident apothecary is also a surgeon, and has two apprentices living in the house, and the medicines are dispensed by himself and the apprentices.

Payment.

The five senior physicians and the apothecary are paid; the two junior physicians get no payment. The salaries of the three seniors are 30*l.* each per annum; the two next 25*l.* The apothecary 100 guineas per annum, out of which he is bound to provide coals and candles for all the purposes of the institution. The funds from which they are paid arise from subscriptions and presentments. There is no allowance for horse or other conveyance, nor for the board or lodging to any except the apothecary, who resides.

The medical officers are elected by the subscribers. Whenever a vacancy occurs, a week's notice is given by advertisement, and a summons is sent to each subscriber. Candidates must produce a university degree or a degree from college. There is no limitation to the ages of officers either in appointing or displacing them. The conditions for voting at these elections are fully acted up to.

The individuals in the immediate neighbourhood capable of paying for advice, are sufficient in number to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary emolument. The gentlemen in the district qualified to be elected to the dispensary are very numerous. The two junior attending physicians serve gratuitously. There are no retiring allowances.

Election.

There has been no mortality among the medical attendants of late. In the years 1817 and 1818, during the prevalence of fever, four physicians fell a sacrifice to disease; they were in attendance at a temporary fever hospital.

In case the medical officers should be harsh to or neglect the patients, they are always at liberty to complain to a subscriber, who can lay such complaint before a committee summoned by the secretary for a special purpose; and with this mode of reference the poor are acquainted.

Pharmacy.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed appears to be very neatly kept as to bottles, drawers, &c. The medicine is reported by all the physicians present to be of good quality, quality, and always in sufficient quantity; also the more expensive kinds, as quinine, morphia, &c.

The medicines are supplied by Messrs. Harrington, wholesale druggists, who are subscribers to the institution of a guinea per annum. They are paid for by the order of the committee on the treasurer; the average annual amount rather exceeds 250*l*. When the apothecary is absent, the apprentices have the charge of the medicines and make up the prescriptions. The medicines are never sold, and the apothecary is prohibited selling medicines on his own account. Every thing necessary for preparing decoctions, &c. is in possession of the institution. The apothecary has not any private practice. The institution is provided with a stomach-pump, suspended animation apparatus, electrifying machine, cupping apparatus, &c., and the apparatus seem to be sufficient for all medical purposes required. Leeches are not supplied; they are found to be too expensive.

Vaccination is regularly performed; the medical gentlemen do not inoculate for small-pox.

A registry of all cases treated is duly kept by the apothecary.

In 1831 the number of patients was	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	10,890
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	13,062
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	12,060

At the period of the inspection of the Assistant Commissioners there were 419 patients, of whom about one-half were visited at home. Midwifery cases are not attended to.

A recommendation from a subscriber entitles persons to be attended from the institution. The servants of subscribers are attended to on recommendation. It very rarely, if it at all happens, that any persons participate in the benefits of the charity who are able to pay for advice. Attendance is never given gratis to any subscriber, nor is there any stipulation of that kind accompanying the subscriptions. An order is always indispensable to obtain relief at the dispensary; it need not be signed by more than one subscriber, but the number recommended must be in proportion to the amount of subscription; otherwise the funds would be inadequate.

There can be no difficulty in a poor person getting relief, because if not known to a subscriber, they will be told at the institution where to get an order; and if the case be urgent, it is always attended to under all circumstances.

The sick poor are seen at the institution, unless unable to attend, and in that case are visited at their own homes; there is no limit as to distance; and if several visits were necessary in one day, they would be paid, as required by the laws. Among the medical gentlemen present at the examination, some were attending cases and giving them daily visits at the time. The patients would be visited at night if necessary.

The establishment is medical, but in case of accidents, surgical treatment would be afforded. No prescriptions are compounded at the institution, but those of the medical men engaged.

Daily attendance is in acute cases considered absolutely necessary. In what are called the extern orders, the physicians are obliged to visit at the house of the patient the first time, and continue to attend at their houses, or to order them to go to the dispensary according as the urgency of the case may require it. The acute cases are visited as often as necessary. The prescriptions are not entered in any book, but appear on the note of each applicant. Vaccination is performed at the institution whenever any present themselves for it. The gentlemen who are in the habit of attending for this dispensary state, that they are very seldom called in to cases of small-pox, which they attribute to the preservative influence of vaccination.

There is no wine nor any other extra, or nourishment of any kind given, nor are there any institutions in the neighbourhood to afford food, clothing or fuel to the sick poor.

The principal direction is vested in about 212 subscribers. Some of the medical and salaried officers are governors of the institution, and attend the meetings. But the institution is not essentially under the management of the medical attendant, nor is any person ex officio in the principal management.

The regular fixed meetings of the direction take place on the third Thursday in April, when all officers are elected. By a law of the institution, there should be 13 present. The meetings are not well attended; 13 or 14 are generally present. All governors are equally entitled to vote, but none except females can vote by proxy. Minutes of the proceedings are kept.

There is a managing committee who meet regularly once a month, and for extraordinary purposes, whenever summoned. Minutes of their proceedings are kept. The grand jury appointed a board of superintendence, but they have not acted. In the intervals of meeting of the committee, there is not any visiting governor appointed, nor does any governor ever visit the patients officially.

There is a secretary and two other subscribers of the monthly committee who act as treasurer and constitute a finance committee. There is also a collector and an accountant; each of these officers is elected annually under bye-laws. The voting is open, and the mode of election is considered beneficial. No particular religious belief excludes a person from being an officer. The accountant receives 20*l*. per annum. The collector 5*l*. per cent. The other officers are not paid. The treasurer does not give security as required by the Act, and the consequence has been a considerable loss to the funds. Seven hundred and fourteen pounds were abstracted from the funds for accounts paid which it appeared had not been paid; partial security is given to pay this by instalments, and the late treasurer is now the accountant. There is not any instance of an officer being suspended or removed visit in every case, the first time that an extern ticket is sent to them, and to continue attendance upon patients at their residences if the illness be such as to prevent personal application at the dispensary. This entails upon the physicians great labour and much loss of time, for which they receive no adequate remuneration, and two are not paid at all, while it is admitted they have discharged their duties with much credit to themselves, and the Roman Catholic curate, who has been seven years aiding the poor, never heard any complaint against them.

The situation of the dispensary is not central; and it is very desirable that there should be another in the opposite quarter of the city, which has been very frequently suggested at their meetings, but has not been acted upon from the fear of exceeding their means, which are very limited.

The funds, small in themselves, have been considerably embarrassed by a defalcation to the amount of 700 l. and upwards on the part of the late treasurer. An account of this is given in the report of the committee for 1832. To meet this deficiency they have got a deed from Mr. Young (the late treasurer, and now, be it observed, kept as "accountant" to the dispensary at a salary of 20 l. per annum), a deed secured upon house property, and producing 50 l. per annum, to be held by the secretary until the debt incurred by Mr. Young shall be paid off; but no interest is accruing to the funds of the charity, and they were obliged to apply a legacy of 500 l. left by Mr. Rochfert to the liquidation of unpaid debts, the interest of which sum is lost also.

The secretary is at present bonâ fide the treasurer. He does not lodge the money in any bank, nor does he give security. This we find omitted in every case, and beg to direct the attention of the board to it. The committee too, in the instance before us, must come in for a share of our reprehension and reproof: they placed implicit confidence in this treasurer, and did not examine vouchers for the payment of such bills as were returned to them as paid by him.

We find too there is a salaried officer belonging to this establishment, who holds an appointment, which we confess is now for the first time heard of. Mr. Michael Troy is bleeder as well as cupper to the dispensary, and is paid twenty guineas per annum for doing what we conceive ought to be done by the apothecary, or at least by senior apprentices. We strongly deprecate the plan of allowing an uneducated and unprofessional person to perform "venesection," an operation which, simple as it may appear, may be productive of most serious and even fatal consequences. We do not learn, however, that such has been the case, which we take to be mere matter of good fortune.

We have only in conclusion to state, that even, with the objections which we have above noticed, and to which we have directed the attention of the subscribers, this institution is effecting great good, and affording most material relief to the numerous poor who get recommended to it; and we cannot but lament that a charity so deserving of public patronage is not more liberally supported or better managed.

THE population of the district is between 2,000 and 3,000, and the extent about three miles to the most distant point. The medical institutions within six miles are,—Cork, two miles; Carrigaline, four miles; Passage, four miles; Blackrock, four miles. There are no other institutions within the bounds of the district. This institution appears to be well placed, and was established by resolutions agreed to at a general meeting on a conviction of the necessity for such a charity at this place. The greatest extent of country included in one dispensary should not exceed four miles. No persons are refused relief at the dispensary. There is not any intern accommodation, but no evil has arisen from the want of it, owing to its contiguity to Cork, where the poor go without any reluctance, and get all necessary accommodation in fever hospitals and infirmaries. It is considered that the assistance is equal to the wants of the poor.

Extent of District.

A respectable and commodious dwelling-house is applied to the purposes of the dispensary, which consists of three rooms. One is occupied by the resident attendant, a second forms a waiting-room for patients, and the third the prescribing-room, in which the medicines are also kept. These rooms are neat and clean, in a good state of repair, and appear to be sufficient for the purposes of the institution. There is not any garden or grounds attached. The building is occupied by the female attendant, who is the only person resident. It is not the property of the institution, but is held from a subscriber from year to year, at a rent of 5 l. 10 s. per annum. There is no apprehension, however, of inconvenience arising from a change of ownership, as the rent paid is considered sufficient, and there would not be any difficulty in getting as good a house at any time, if removal was requisite.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The only medical officer attached to the institution is about thirty years of age. He is a member of the Edinburgh College of Surgeons, where he also studied midwifery. He resides in Cork, about two miles from the dispensary, to which he was appointed in 1828, at the original establishment of the institution by a meeting of the inhabitants held for the purpose of forming the dispensary. He had just returned to Cork after his studies, and commenced as a practitioner: he is likewise surgeon to the city of Cork gaol, in which capacity he receives a salary of 50 l. per annum; and is obliged to visit the establishment twice a week. In case of illness or temporary absence, he may find a substitute; but if the absence is longer than one week, he must give notice to the committee of the name of such substitute for approval; he is allowed private practice; his attendance at this dispensary is fixed on three days in each week, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, for as long a period each day as required, and whenever he is sent for besides. There is no student or pupil, and the medicines are dispensed by himself.

The medical attendant receives 70*l.* per annum from the funds of the institution; but is not allowed any horse or conveyance, nor board or lodging. The grand jury may grant what sum they please. On the formation of the institution, they gave not quite half the sum subscribed. There does not appear to be sufficient control to prevent collusion between a physician and his friends; but here such an occurrence as a combination for the purpose of raising an institution for the sake of medical appointment, and to obtain a county grant, has never taken place; and it is the opinion of the gentlemen present, that the affidavit of the treasurer and medical attendant might prevent it.

The medical officer was elected by the inhabitants at the formation of the institution, and would be now elected by the subscribers. There has not been any vacancy since its first establishment. Notice was not given in the newspapers of the intention to elect a medical attendant at the formation of the institution; but the present medical man being known in the neighbourhood, was appointed without opposition. Having obtained a degree from any of the recognized colleges is sufficient testimonial, and there is no limitation as to the age of a medical officer. Notice of his appointment was not sent to the grand jury. All subscribers of 1*l.* 1*s.* per annum or upwards are entitled to vote. It is supposed that from the contiguity to Cork, the neighbourhood could not support a medical man independent of the institution, and there are not any medical gentlemen residing in the immediate neighbourhood. In case of harshness or bad treatment, the patients can complain to any subscriber or to the committee; and the poor are perfectly well aware of this mode of redress, but the Rev. Mr. M'Namara, P. P. stated that he never heard of any complaint.

The room in which the medicines are kept appear sufficiently neat and adapted for the purpose. There appears to be but a small supply of medicines; however, from its vicinity to Cork, a fresh supply can be easily procured for the institution. Quinine, and all medicines necessary, are used here, being supplied by a druggist in Cork (who is not a subscriber) and paid for by the treasurer. The annual expense is about 20*l.* When the medical attendant is absent, the medicines are under the care of the servant. No medicines are ever sold. The apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c. appear to be sufficient. Medicines for private practice are not kept with those of the institution. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution. Leeches are not often used, but if necessary they can be ordered. The medical officer is bound as far as he is able to give vaccine matter gratis. He never inoculates with small-pox matter, not approving of it.

A register is kept, which particularises the disease of each patient and its termination.

In 1831 the number of patients relieved or cured was	1,746	-	-	-	15 died.
1832	"	"	"	"	1,668 - - - 17 "
1833	"	"	"	"	1,938 - - - 19 "

The register is kept by the medical attendant, who enters each case on receiving the recommendation. A copy is lodged with the grand jury. No patients are refused. There have not been any capital operations performed during the last three years.

The poor generally are entitled on a recommendation, also the servants of subscribers. Persons not entitled may have received relief, but it rarely occurs except in the cases of the better classes of servants, who all avail themselves of the advantages of the institution. The medical officer considers himself bound to attend to all persons recommended. There are some persons, about four in number, who subscribe 10*s.* each, and have themselves and families attended gratis, but this would not be done were they not of the poorer classes. It is necessary that each person must have a recommendation to obtain aid from the institution, these however are easily obtained as no subscriber is limited as to numbers. An applicant would not be excluded from the benefit of the charity because of being a stranger, or being disliked by the subscribers.

The patients are seen at the institution and attended at their own dwellings, when necessary, or whenever a subscriber directs, and the medical attendant has expressed his readiness to attend at night, but of course from not residing in the district there would be a difficulty. In cases of accident, should he be absent, he will immediately attend on being sent for. No person is entitled to have his prescriptions made up at the institution. The medical officer attends difficult cases of lying-in on being called on by a midwife. The midwives are in general uneducated, but obtain knowledge by experience; and it does not appear that injuries from the ignorance of midwives are frequent. There have been only two deaths in childbirth since the dispensary opened; should it be necessary daily attendance would be given as often as the case required it. It is not considered that occasional attendance, except in cases of chronic disease, is of any use; the medical attendant being in the habit of dispensing the medicines has not of late deemed it necessary to enter the prescriptions. Vaccination is performed whenever any one applies, in the opinion vaccination ameliorates small-pox very considerably, though it does not altogether prevent the occurrence of that disease. Three or four cases were mentioned of small-pox occurring after vaccination, and of one in particular, to a person of high rank, of confluent small-pox, which proved fatal. The people appear anxious to have their children vaccinated.

There is nothing given but medicine, nor is there any charity on which an order for clothing, fuel, &c. for the sick poor could be given.

About

About 50 constitute the principal direction, but among these there is no medical or salaried officer. The institution has been essentially under the management of the committee. Medical or salaried officers have no participation in the management, nor is any person, ex officio, in the principal direction. A regular fixed meeting takes place once a year. No particular number are required in order to constitute a meeting, but as many as attend form one; the meetings are regularly attended, from seven to 14 are in the habit of attending. All governors are entitled to vote; none can vote by proxy, and minutes of the proceedings are kept.

The regulation of the managing committee is, that they should meet once a month, or as often as expedient, in which case they are summoned by the secretary; they are appointed at each annual meeting, and minutes are kept of committee meetings. There is a board of surperintendence fixed by the grand jury, but they have never met, nor as a body ever taken any part in the affairs of the institution. There are no visiting governors, nor any who visit the patients officially.

The only officers not medical are the treasurer and the secretary, who are elected annually. There are no bye-laws printed. The voting is open, and this mode is considered beneficial. Particular religious belief does not exclude any one from being an officer. The treasurer and medical attendant are Protestants; the secretary is a Roman Catholic. A veto is not thought necessary, as the subscribers are considered the best judges. The treasurer and collector are not paid, they account to the general meeting and the grand jury. The treasurer does not give security. There has not been any instance of an officer being suspended or removed.

There is one female attendant belonging to the institution who resides in the house, but is not provided with board; her wages are 5*l.* 4*s.* per annum, without any perquisites, she is paid by the treasurer, and is appointed and can be discharged by the committee. No mortality has occurred among the attendants since the formation of the institution.

No person connected with the institution supplies it with any article, nor is any article belonging to the institution ever lent or used by a governor or officer.

There is but one set of rules printed, which are framed and posted up in the dispensary. It is not supposed that the present regulations restrict the utility of the institution, and the opinion of the gentlemen present was, that there is not any alteration required, and that the institution appears to work well. They are also of opinion that their own system is appropriate, and that a uniform system for management would be desirable.

Reports are made out annually, and submitted to the meeting; they are then printed. In case of necessity a board of health might be formed, but at present it is not necessary. There are many persons in the district capable of entering into a more minute inquiry into the wants of the poor, and who would be willing to assist if such inquiry was considered necessary.

There are only two sources from which the funds are derived. The existence of the institution does not depend on the bounty of one or two subscribers. The subscriptions are not very fluctuating. There is not any property belonging to the institution.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain until wanted. No money remains in the hands of salaried officers.

The expenditure was for—

The general heads of expenditure are officer's salary, medicine, servant, coals, printing, douceur to physician, which latter appears, by the reports of the institution for the years 1831, 1832 and 1833, to have amounted to the sums of 5*l.*, 9*l.* and 10*l.* in each of those years respectively. The bills are examined previous to payment by the committee, and are then paid by the treasurer.

The accounts are made up, audited and reported annually, and copies are sent to the grand jury.

THE Strand Road Dispensary has been established only with a view to the granting of external aid to the poor. It possesses all the means of affording any intern accommodation to the sick, and though there can be little doubt that an hospital of a proportionate extent would be of much utility to the neighbourhood, the want of it is not attended with that degree of inconvenience which manifests itself in other places. The city of Cork, with its numerous medical charities, is within one mile of the institution, and there are dispensaries at Blarney and at Glanmire, distant respectively five miles and a half and four miles. The immediate district attached to the Strand Road dispensary is not of much extent; no part of it is more distant than three miles, and it contains a population of about 1,000 souls. It is stated that no one who has made application for relief to it with a proper recommendation has ever been refused relief, and it is suggested that the actual number of persons who are dependent on it for professional assistance is about the greatest that should ever be placed under the charge of one medical attendant.

The business of the charity is carried on in one small room, which has been hired for the purpose, and for which a rent of 5*l.* a year is paid.

There is but one medical attendant; he resides within about one quarter of a mile from the institution, at which he is required to attend on three days in each week, for the purpose of receiving and prescribing for the poor who may present themselves. He is at present about 35 years of age, and was appointed by election in the year 1831, with the understanding that he was to give his services as physician, surgeon, apothecary and accoucheur. His qualifications consist of having attained the degree of M. D. in the university of Edinburgh, of which he produced the testimonials, and having gone through a course of instructions in midwifery, under the direction of Dr. Woodroffe, in Cork. Previous to his appointment he was engaged in practice in the city of Cork, and he is still permitted to attend to private patients on his own account. Notwithstanding this it is stated that he has never been absent from his duties, and that he has been always found at hand when his aid has been required by any sudden emergency. He alone, at all times, is the dispenser of medicine to the poor; however, if his temporary absence should be called for, the committee are represented as being disposed to grant him permission to find a substitute for the performance of his duties. As to the sufficiency of the length of the periods of his attendance, they have been hitherto found to answer all the proposed ends, and if any of the poor should have reason to complain of neglect or harshness, a remedy lies accessible to them in the committee, before whom, on one occasion, a complaint was preferred, which on investigation was found destitute of foundation. It is but just to add, that the secretary bears strong testimony to the degree in which the medical attendant possesses the confidence and good-will of the poorer classes of the inhabitants. It should be remarked, that immediately previous to his election there was a considerable accession to the usual number of governors, and there is reason to suppose that the friends of the several candidates contributed for the one occasion, in order that they might be enabled to vote, as they have to a considerable degree declined to renew their subscriptions.

The salary of the physician is fixed at 80*l.* per annum. Of this sum 20*l.* is allotted for the expenses of a residence; but he does not receive any allowance towards the maintenance of a horse. The salary is paid from the general funds of the establishment, and its amount is entirely dependent on the discretion of the subscribers. They are at liberty to raise it in whatever degree they may think proper, and in doing this are quite beyond the control of the grand jury, who have no other means of checking their expenditure than by withholding their sanction from the usual annual presentment; however, there are not any grounds for suspecting any thing improper, whether in the origin or in the conduct of the present charity.

Subscribers of 1*l.* 1*s.* annually are alone entitled to give their votes at the election of a medical attendant, which takes place without any necessity for obtaining the sanction of the grand jury to the appointment of the successful candidate, or to the adequacy of his qualifications. When the last vacancy in the situation took place, an advertisement, inviting competitors to come forward, was inserted in three newspapers, and was repeated during a period of three weeks. It was announced that each person should possess a degree from some university, and there was not any limitation as to age. Seven candidates came forward. Notwithstanding the very close proximity of Glanmire road to Cork, it is stated that none of the qualified practitioners residing in that city would be willing to attend the present dispensary without remuneration. The district contains a very considerable number of wealthy residents, whose practice would be very likely to afford an adequate maintenance to a medical man settling among them. The dispensary does not grant any allowances or retiring pensions to its officers, nor has there been any mortality amongst them.

The

* The limited attendance at the examination into the condition of the Glanmire Dispensary was explained by the medical attendant in saying, that he had not accurately understood the letter of notice which had been forwarded to him. It may, however, be stated, that little advantage could have been derived from the presence of any number of the supporters, as their interest in the dispensary is only to be traced by their payment of an annual contribution. It does not appear that any of them ever take any part in the management of its affairs.

The room for dispensing medicine is neat and cleanly. The drugs, including quinine morphia and some other of the more delicate preparations are of the best quality; the supply of them is rather scanty, which is, however, of the less consequence from the facility with which it can be replenished at Cork, where every thing is purchased from the Messrs. Gosnell & Son, wholesale druggists and apothecaries. The amount paid to these gentlemen by the treasurer on account of their yearly bills has, during the last three years, averaged about 12*l*. (The firm does not contribute to the charity, and has therefore no share in the management of it.) The stock of medicine remains always under the care of the medical attendant, who is not permitted to sell or dispose of any part of it, otherwise than in the practice of the dispensary. Being only engaged in private practice as a physician he does not keep any medicines for his patients. The usual apparatus for forming decoctions, &c., has been provided. The surgical instruments are few, being limited to a stomach pump and a tooth instrument; nevertheless, they are found sufficient for the purposes of the charity, and any deficiency is supplied from the private instruments of the physician. The high cost of leeches prevents their being ever made use of in the practice of the dispensary. The rules of the dispensary require that the poor shall be gratuitously vaccinated by the medical attendant. This is done to a considerable extent, and the physician states that his experience has led him to form a very favourable opinion of the preventive efficacy of the practice. He has never seen a case of well authenticated small-pox to occur, where the operation had been performed with proper care and attention, and he has observed an increasing confidence on the part of the public in the security conferred by it. The disease of small-pox has ceased to be frequent in the district; he is not forbidden to inoculate with the matter of it, but is averse to so doing.

The attending physician keeps a register of the circumstances under which all applications for assistance are made to him. A copy of this register, containing a statement of the number of persons relieved in each year, is presented to the grand jury previous to the usual presentment being granted. It would appear that nearly 1,500 persons have been relieved during each of the last three years, and that within that period no person has been refused aid under any circumstances. The number of lying-in women attended was about 20, and no surgical operation of any importance had been performed.

All paupers and persons (including the servants of subscribers) who have obtained a proper recommendation are entitled to the assistance of the dispensary. An order is considered necessary, but as each subscriber may issue any number of them, which require each but a single signature, it is stated that there is not, even in the case of a stranger, any difficulty in complying with the required preliminary.

Notwithstanding the facility which exists in this point, there are no grounds for supposing that any but the really needy and those whose circumstances justly entitle them to gratuitous relief, have been accustomed to participate in the benefits of the charity. There is but one subscriber to a less amount than 1*l*. 1*s*. yearly, and he does not receive either advice or medicine from the dispensary.

On three days in each week, as has been already intimated, the poor who present themselves at the institution are attended to by the physician, who is further bound to visit in their own houses, at any place within the limits of the district, those persons who may be confined by sickness. This, he states, he is in the habit of doing as often as circumstances may require, and sometimes even at night. He gives it as his opinion, that occasional attendance can be productive of but little benefit in cases of acute disorder, although it may be difficult where the affection has assumed a slow or chronic character.

The charity does not supply either splints or bandages for the treatment of fractures and other accidents. It only affords the assistance of the medical attendant, who generally contrives to supply the deficiency from some other source. With respect to lying-in women it is only when parturition has become complicated or difficult that he can be called on to act without remuneration by the poor. At other times they are attended by midwives, who, although no positive mischief has been traced to their interference, are yet said to be very ignorant, and very little qualified for the task which they undertake.

The Assistant Commissioners examined the prescription book kept by the physician. The remedies appeared to them to indicate a very judicious line of practice, and it was stated that none other were compounded than those of the medical attendant.

The design of the dispensary does not extend to the supplying any kind of nourishment to the sick poor, nor is this deficiency, which is much to be deplored, supplied by any other charity in the neighbourhood.

The subscribers, who amount to about 44, are supposed to attend to the general management of the institution; they appear, however, not to have performed this duty with any degree of regularity. The fixed general meetings of the governors are appointed to be held twice in each year; nevertheless there has hardly been an assembly since the formation of the charity, although all governors are alike entitled to attend and to vote (ladies alone are permitted to vote by proxy); of such meetings as have taken place minutes of the proceedings have been kept, and they appear to have been attended by four or five governors, that, or even a smaller number, being authorized to transact business. The surgeon is not a governor of the dispensary, nor has he been allowed to participate, at least materially, in its management.

A managing committee has existed, at least in name, since the origin of the institution. Its members are directed to assemble every half-year, but they have in truth performed little or no duty, though an account of their proceedings has been always kept. The grand jury have not appointed a board of superintendence, nor do any of the governors act as visitors, so as in some measure to supply the defect of general management.

The treasurer, who is the only non-medical officer, has continued to hold his appointment since the origin of the institution, when he was elected by the subscribers at large, open voting was the mode adopted, and that which hitherto has been found of the most advantage. The treasurer gives no security, but neither does he receive any salary; he accounts annually with the grand jury.

It is stated that in the selection of officers no religious or sectarian prejudices have ever interfered. The Assistant Commissioners would however observe, that although the present appointments are certainly worthy of commendation, yet the only effectual mode of preventing the occurrence of improper ones would be to vest a discretionary veto in some superior authority.

A servant woman is engaged to reside in the dispensary, she receives no wages, and has no other remuneration for her services than the advantage of a residence; she was appointed by the medical attendant.

The only articles purchased to any extent are drugs; it should have been mentioned that these are procured on the same terms as they are furnished to the North Infirmary, to which institution the Messrs. Gosnell supply them according to contract prices.

There are not any rules for the conducting this dispensary, every thing appears to be left to the discretion of the medical attendant, who fortunately is attentive and correct; at the same time, were he otherwise disposed, he would be equally without superior control. The Assistant Commissioners regret to add, that the present establishment bears too close a resemblance in this particular to a large proportion of the medical charities which they have visited in this part of the country.

No report of the circumstances and affairs of the charity has ever been prepared either for the subscribers or for the members of the grand jury; nevertheless the district contains a considerable number of persons of the educated classes, who would willingly co-operate in the investigation of the real condition of the poorer inhabitants, and it is conceived that much good might be effected if the former were to constitute a permanent board of health for general sanitary purposes.

As the dispensary is not possessed of any permanent property, its existence is entirely dependent on the adequacy of its annual income, which is derived partly from subscribers and partly from the county. There is not much inequality in the respective contributions of the annual subscribers, amongst whom no individual of the poorer classes is to be found. The amount of subscriptions in each of the last three years was as follows; viz.—

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	227	-	-
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	44	14	-
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	50	10	6

The striking defalcation in the receipts of the two latter years is at once perceived; the cause of it has been intimated above in speaking of the sudden increase in the list of governors which preceded an election.

The funds are collected by the secretary, who pays them over to the treasurer; in his hands they remain until wanted.

The chief items of expenditure are the salary of physician, rent of house and cost of medicine; all payments are made by the treasurer alone, after the bills have been examined by the medical attendant.

The accounts of income and expenditure are made up every half-year, but although a copy is regularly submitted to the inspection of the members of the grand jury, such is never done with respect to the subscribers.

Persons who attended the Examination.

THERE are two other charities of a similar character (viz., at Clanmaurice and at Tralee, neither place more than six miles off,) within the limits of the district attached to the Ardfert dispensary, which contains a population of about 10,000 souls, and extends nearly eight miles in all directions. These institutions are very injudiciously placed, as in some respects the district in question is considered to be too large, while it is at the same time stated, that with reference to the country which surrounds it, the above named charities are in number too few. The witnesses observe, that a dispensary district should never exceed eight miles in diameter, and that to a certain number of contiguous ones a small hospital should be attached, capable of receiving fever patients at all times, and occasionally a few surgical cases, or a serious accident. They state, "that although the institution has always been able to supply all applicants with extern relief in advice and medicine, yet that, in several instances, the most serious inconvenience has resulted from the want of internal accommodation."

The dispensary is held at the house of its medical officer; he receives patients in his shop, and, for the use thus made of it, he is allowed 10*l.* a year as rent, from the funds of the charity.

The

The medical attendant, aged 30, has no other qualification for his situation than the diploma of a master apothecary; nevertheless he was elected about two years ago by the subscribers at large, to fill the place of surgeon, physician, accoucheur and compounder of medicines; previous to his appointment he kept a shop in Tralee, and, as before stated, he is still engaged in trade at his residence in the village of Ardfert; he does not possess any testimonials of having studied midwifery; he is obliged to attend for the relief of patients on three days in each week; and he states, besides dispensing the required medicines in person, he is always ready to give immediate assistance in case of accidents, and other emergencies. There are no regulations as to the conditions under which his duties could be delegated to a substitute, in case circumstances required his temporary absence; however, he has hitherto never had occasion to avail himself of the assistance of any one.

A salary of 50*l.* per annum is given to the medical attendant, without any further allowance for a conveyance or for a residence. As to the amount of payment awarded, the subscribers, it is admitted, have it in their power to increase it to any sum within the limits of the annual income of the charity, and this without respect to the value of the services obtained in return. The grand jury has no control over them in the matter.

The appointment of the medical officer is altogether in the hands of the subscribers, who act without being in any degree subject to the authority of the grand jury. There can, however, be little doubt that the vesting a veto on all appointments in the latter, or some other controlling jurisdiction, would be productive of much service to the public; on the occurrence of the last vacancy in this dispensary, an advertisement, inviting candidates to present themselves, was inserted in the newspapers; the notice had the effect of bringing forward a gentleman who possessed the testimonials of being a perfectly well educated surgeon; nevertheless, it would appear as if no other qualifications were deemed necessary than the ability to compound medicine, for the gentleman in question was rejected, and the present attendant remained the successful candidate. Candidates of all ages were equally admissible, and those persons alone were permitted to vote on the occasion who had their annual subscription of one guinea in full. The number of persons residing in this neighbourhood capable of paying a physician is very small, and were it not for the salary derived from the dispensary, it is not improbable it would not contain even a single medical practitioner; and it is nearly certain that no one would be found willing to yield medical assistance gratuitously to the numerous inhabitants of the poorer class. It is stated that the poor have not shown themselves backward in appealing to the subscribers when they have thought themselves ill treated or neglected by the medical officer; but notwithstanding their occasional complaints, there is no reason to suppose that he would be retained in his situation if he were known to have lost their general confidence.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed presented an appearance of much neatness; it is in the apothecary's shop of the village, and contained an adequate supply of drugs of good quality, including quinine, and some other of the more delicate preparations; they are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, druggists in Dublin (and annual subscribers of two guineas), whose bill, as discharged by the treasurer during each of the last three years, had amounted to nearly 50*l.*

There was no distinction observable between the portion of the medicines intended for sale, and those destined for the use of the dispensary patients. The entire stock was equally under the care of an apprentice during the absence of the medical attendant; and the Assistant Commissioners were unable to learn that any guarantee existed against the substitution by the attendant of inferior drugs in the practice connected with his situation. It is sufficiently clear that he would be a gainer in so doing. There was, of course, under the circumstances, no want of the apparatus necessary for preparing decoctions, infusions, &c., but there were no surgical instruments of any kind, and it was stated that leeches were never supplied gratuitously to the poor. Neither is vaccination ever performed for any class of patients, unless it be paid for. This is a defect the more to be regretted, as the practice has been found by the medical attendant to be decidedly preservative against small-pox, and the public have latterly shown themselves disposed to repose much confidence in its efficacy; cases of small-pox have recently become very frequent.

The names of the patients who obtain assistance are entered by the medical attendant or his apprentice in a register, from which, it appears, that about 7,500 persons have received advice and medicine during each of the three years immediately previous to the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, at which time there were nearly 150 cases on the books of the charity. It was stated that a copy of the registry is annually laid before the grand jury, and that no case had occurred in which an application for relief, accompanied with a proper recommendation, had been refused. During the last three years no operation of any importance had taken place, nor had the medical officer attended officially any lying-in women during that period.

Every person (including the domestic servants of subscribers) who presents a recommendation, is entitled to demand the advice of the medical attendant, and a supply of the medicines necessary for his cure; these recommendations are procured with facility, as each subscriber may issue in his own name an indefinite number, enabling even a stranger to acquire a claim for relief. There are no grounds for supposing that these orders often come into the hands of persons not in circumstances requiring gratuitous aid, but there is a class of subscribers who for 5*s.* or 10*s.* a year, are privileged to avail themselves on all occasions, and without any further disbursement, of the services of the attendant, and of the medicine of the charity. Their contributions, though small individually, yet help to swell the list of subscriptions, and to increase the equivalent which the county is bound to grant, and which eventually augments the emoluments of the physician. It seems not unfair to add, that the last named individual has placed himself on the list of subscribers with a somewhat similar design. Not only a larger presentment is thereby obtained, but he receives back his own contribution and its equivalent.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and are also, when necessary, visited at their own dwellings wherever situated, to the extent, in some instances, of two or three times in the course of the day. It is stated, that attendance is also given at night, but of this there is some reason to doubt. There has been no provision made of splints or bandages for the treatment of fractures or other accidents, and the medical attendant is not in any case bound to render his services to lying-in women, who are therefore thrown entirely into the hands of the ignorant and uneducated midwives of the country. No prescription book is kept whereby an opinion would be formed as to the nature and character of the remedies in general use at the dispensary.

The institution does not supply nourishment of any kind to the poor, nor is it given by any other charity in the district.

The general management of the affairs of the dispensary is nominally placed in the subscribers, who amount to nearly 40 in number, and who are directed, by the rules, to assemble once in every year for the despatch of business, five constituting a quorum, and voting by proxy not being allowed. However, there has been but little regularity in the holding of these meetings, and only one is reported to have taken place, which was attended by about seven or eight members only, though all subscribers were equally entitled to be present, and to take part in the proceedings. In fact, the whole establishment has been essentially governed by the medical attendant, who, being a subscriber, possesses all the privileges of any other governor.

A managing committee was originally appointed, but it has long since ceased to exist, and there is neither a board of superintendence, nor any visiting governors.

The treasurer, the sole non-medical officer, was elected by the subscribers in March 1832. There were not any bye-laws in existence at the time for regulating the appointment, immediately previous to the date of which a very considerable addition to the number of governors was made by persons who, since that period, have never renewed their subscriptions; for the future much good would be effected by vesting in some superior authority a veto on all appointments.

The treasurer acts without remuneration, and he has been selected without reference to his religious persuasion.

There has never been occasion to cancel the selection of an officer.

No general report on the affairs of the charity has ever been presented either to the subscribers or to the grand jury.

The income of the Ardfert dispensary is derived partly from the county, and partly from annual subscribers. Amongst the latter are several individuals of the poorer classes, and but one contribution of any large sum, namely, a nobleman, who gives 5*l.* 5*s.* a year. The existence of the institution is mainly contingent on the continuance of the annual subscriptions, and these form a very precarious support. They have been gradually diminishing in amount during the last three years, as will be perceived from the following table:—

Subscriptions in 1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	87	-	-
" 1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	63	-	-
" 1834	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	54	-	-

There are reasons for believing that the subscriptions of some persons are given with an understanding that they shall receive relief in return.

The institution does not possess any property of a fixed nature.

The income, from both its sources, is collected by the treasurer, and remains exclusively in his hands until required for disbursements.

The annual expenses have invariably equalled the receipts. They consist of the medical attendant's salary, which includes the whole amount of the income after payment of the current disbursements, of the cost of medicine and of rent. The treasurer is permitted to pay any bills at his own discretion, and without their having been examined by any other authority.

Neither the subscribers nor the grand jury have ever been furnished with an account of the income or expenditure.

Population and

Extent of Country.

THE district for which this dispensary is intended embraces two parishes, and extending in some directions about eight miles from the institution, includes a population of about 7,000, who have no other institution from which to seek medical relief. The dispensary at Tarbert is about four miles off, and that at Listowel rather more than six; and as the persons examined are of opinion that a distance of five miles is the greatest to which this description of charity should extend, it appears that the establishment does not correspond to the wants to which it professes to minister. However, no one has ever been refused that description of relief, consisting in advice and medicine, which alone can be given, as there is not any accommodation accommodation for intern patients—a want sometimes felt very severely. All agree in approving of the formation of medical districts, to each of which should be attached a dispensary, and a few beds to accommodate urgent cases, but they are unable to suggest to what extent of country or number of such districts it would be advisable to attach a common fever or surgical hospital.

A very incommodious place is appropriated to this dispensary, in which a single room serves for waiting-room, surgery and pharmacy, whose scanty and ill-conditioned furniture shows that either economy or limited funds must have prevented the procuring the indispensable necessities for such a place. There are not any grounds or out-buildings attached to it.

The medical attendant is allowed 5*l.* per annum for the rent of the house, which is occupied by him alone. He is 33 years of age, and his only qualification is that of master of the Apothecaries' Hall, Dublin. He was appointed by the subscribers to his present situation, in which he acts as physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary, in 1833, having been previously an apothecary in Tralee, which occupation he has given up, and now devotes all his time (except in so far as he may have private practice) to this institution, at which he prescribes for, and gives medicine to the poor on Mondays and Fridays from ten until three o'clock, a time fully sufficient for all that is required. It has never occurred that he has been unable to attend to his duty, but should such a case arise, the committee would permit him to find a substitute. The committee also are fully competent and ready to check any irregularity of the medical officers, and to redress any just complaint of his conduct laid before them by the poor, who are quite aware that they have such an authority to appeal to.

The salary of the medical attendant is only 40*l.* per annum, and, except the rent of his house, 5*l.* per annum, he has no other emolument, and as there are but few opulent individuals or others, capable of paying for advice, in this neighbourhood, it is clear that no medical man would gratuitously undertake the duties of his situation. It cannot be said that there is any tendency on the part of the subscribers to pay the medical attendant too highly, and the power of the grand jury to refuse the presentment is a sufficient check upon any such inclination. This dispensary does not afford an instance of the temporary formation of voters for personal or other reprehensible motives, in getting up an institution without any regard being had as to the eligibility of its situation.

At the last election, at which all were entitled to vote who had paid a subscription of 1*l.* 1*s.*, no means were taken by public advertisement, or otherwise, to secure an extensive competition; there were but three candidates, and the only qualification required was that of a licentiate apothecary. No notice was given to the grand jury of the transaction.

The medicine room is in a state of tolerable cleanliness. The medicines, which are supplied by Messrs. Pollock, Figgis & Co., druggists, of Capel-street, Dublin, appear to be excellent, and there would be no hesitation in procuring any of the more delicate and expensive medicines which might be required. The institution has been established about a year and a half, in which period the treasurer has disbursed, under the head of drugs, about 30*l.*; the list of medicines includes all in general use, which are constantly placed under the charge of the medical attendant, who is not permitted to sell them under any circumstances; notwithstanding which regulation the medicines intended for his private patients are kept in the same room. There were all the apparatus required for preparing and dispensing medicines, and the few smaller surgical instruments exclusively belonging to the institution are sufficient for every ordinary purpose; leeches are not used. Though there is no vaccine matter to be had here, the medical man never inoculates with small-pox; this, however, rests with his own discretion, as he is not prevented so doing. There has been very little small-pox of late years.

The medical attendant keeps a very full and accurate register, not only of particular cases but of all recommended for relief. At the time of visiting the establishment he had on the books eight persons whom he attended at their homes, and about 15 who sought relief on the spot. He is not qualified to attend midwifery cases, nor has he been called on to perform any capital operations.

The recommendation of a single subscriber entitles the bearer to relief, and there are few, if any, instances where this recommendation is used by servants or other persons not in circumstances requiring gratuitous relief; but all really necessitous persons are promptly and readily attended to, the more so as the subscribers are not limited in the number of their tickets.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, and if unable to attend there are visited at their own houses at any hour of the day or night, or as often as may be necessary, and it is considered that daily visits are absolutely indispensable in acute diseases. In case of accident, requiring immediate assistance, though the institution possesses no splints or bandages, the medical attendant would be quite ready to afford all the relief in his power. It is greatly to be regretted that he is not able to attend to lying-in women, who, from being compelled to have recourse to ignorant and uneducated midwives, are, together with their offspring, exposed to many dangers.

No nourishment is ever provided from the funds of the dispensary, nor is there any charity within the limits of the institution whence it can be gratuitously procured.

The general management is vested in the subscribers at large, who amounted previous to the election in number to 50, but have since fallen off to about 35; the medical attendant has no share whatsoever in it. There is a fixed annual meeting which is attended by about eight or ten, and at which only such subscribers as are present are permitted to vote; a minute is kept of their proceedings. There is also a managing committee, which is appointed pointed each year, of whose monthly meetings a register is kept. None of the subscribers direct any individual attention to the affairs of the charity, or ever inquire into the concerns of the sick poor receiving relief from it.

The treasurer, the only officer not medical, is annually appointed by the subscribers, who give their votes openly, a mode considered most advantageous ; but there are no printed bye-laws. The treasurer, who is an unpaid functionary, gives no security. It were much to be desired that there existed some controlling authority to check improper appointments, where necessary.

Nothing destined for the service of this institution is purchased from any subscriber, nor does any of that class at all participate in the benefits of the charity.

A written report is annually presented to the grand jury, which is also laid before the subscribers. In this neighbourhood there could be found a sufficient number of respectable individuals to administer in an efficient manner a much more extensive system of relief to the poor.

These sums (no portion of which are received from the poorer classes) form the entire resources of the charity. Trinity College, Dublin, (which contributes an annual sum of 10*l*.) is the only instance of a large subscription, for although there are eight landed proprietors, drawing each from 500*l*. to 2,000*l*. a year from the district, their united subscriptions only amount to 12*l*.; a lamentable instance of the indifference of Irish landlords to the support and well-being of these institutions. The subscriptions to this establishment are all given without any improper stipulation whatever for relief in return.

The receipts, which are barely equal to the expenditure for salary, medicine and house-rent, remain in the hands of the treasurer until a demand occurs, which is never paid until it has been examined by a committee of five, who constitute a quorum.

THE district attached to the present dispensary contains a population of nearly 30,000 souls, and although the Valentia Dispensary is not more than four miles off, yet in other directions this district extends to a distance of fully 16 miles. This is an extent of country which renders it quite impossible that the inhabitants can receive proper attention from a single medical attendant. So far, however, as relief in medicine and advice given at the institution, there has never been occasion to refuse aid to any applicant. The defect which is productive of the greatest inconvenience is the entire absence (hitherto) of any intern accommodation, and in order that such should exist, under circumstances the most calculated to be beneficial, it is suggested that judicious medical districts should be established, and that divisional hospitals, or fever and surgical infirmaries, should be attached to a certain number of them.

The dispensary house is situated exactly opposite to the residence of the medical attendant. It is a convenient structure, and possesses all the accommodation required for its purposes.

A fever hospital has also been recently erected within two furlongs of the town, in a healthy and airy situation, containing eight wards very well contrived, both with respect to size and ventilation, and capable of containing about 50 patients. It has been set on foot by private subscriptions, much to the credit of the inhabitants. The site occupies nearly an acre of ground, given without fine or rent by a gentleman resident in the vicinity, who has further authorized the governors of the establishment (of whom he is himself one) to take in whatever additional quantity of land they may deem advisable. The same gentleman has also given a very liberal donation in money towards the objects of the charity, whose funds have been much increased by a contribution of 50 l. from a noble Marquis, who is an extensive proprietor of land in the county. The hospital had not been as yet opened at the date of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, but as the grand jury had recognized it as a county institution, though it had not as yet received its grant, it was confidently expected that it would be ready for the admission of patients by the next ensuing spring. It could in fact have been prepared for the occupation of 20 patients within two days, as it possessed a number of beds which had been procured at the time of the appearance of cholera. It is intended that the dispensary and the hospital in question shall be directed by the same same managing body, but it is not proposed to alter the actual locality of the former establishment.

The medical attendant of the dispensary is a graduate of the University of Glasgow, a master of the Apothecaries' Hall, and is in possession of a diploma from the Lying-in Hospital in Dublin, which qualifies him for the practice of midwifery. His age is about 34; he resides, as has been already intimated, opposite the institution, and is engaged in private practice. Previous to his appointment, which took place in the year 1823, at a general meeting of the subscribers, he carried on business as an apothecary in Dublin. He attends at the dispensary every day in the week, and being a resident on the spot, assistance, in case of emergency or of sudden accident, can always be relied on from either himself or his apprentice. He is permitted, in case of illness or of temporary absence, to appoint (under the sanction of the subscribers, who grant him leave of absence) a substitute. He has availed himself of this permission but on one occasion. As to the power possessed by the poor of obtaining redress in case of any harshness or inattention shown by the physician towards them, it is stated that they can at all times obtain it by complaining to the subscriber whose recommendation they had presented. They are not slow to do so, but the charges hitherto preferred have always on examination turned out to be frivolous and destitute of foundation. The medical attendant, and occasionally his assistant, personally dispense the medicines required in each case; the former holding no appointment to any other establishment.

The physician's salary is 100*l.* per annum, payable from the general funds of the charity. No allowance is made to him for a horse, or for the expenses of a residence; but it is in the power of the subscribers to give him whatever amount of remuneration they may think proper; the grand jury having no other means of checking excessive expenditure on this point than by the control which they exercise over the annual presentment.

The appointment of the medical officer rests with the subscribers at large; there has not been an election for ten years, and on the last occasion there were two candidates, who (without limitation as to age) were required to be either masters of the Apothecaries' Hall or graduates of some university. Were another vacancy to occur, it is stated, that recourse would be had to advertisements in the newspapers, for the purpose of procuring as extensive a competition as possible. The governors are not bound to acquaint the grand jury of any appointment having taken place, nor to consult them as to the fitness or qualifications of the individual selected. The institution does not undertake to grant retiring allowances or superannuations, and it has not suffered any deaths amongst its medical officers. There is no second practitioner in the district, and from the small number of persons of independent circumstances who reside in it, it is considered very probable that were it not for the emoluments derived from the dispensary, it (the district) would be altogether unprovided with medical assistance.

The Assistant Commissioners visited the room appropriated to the dispensing of medicine, they found it provided with an excellent supply of the best medicines, and of some of the more delicate and expensive preparations. They were informed that every article had been purchased from the Messrs. Harrington & Hayes, druggists, of Cork, at an annual expense during the last three years of about 50*l.* The druggist's bills had been discharged by the treasurer. The entire stock of medicine was placed under the care of the medical attendant, and during his absence of his assistant, being kept quite distinct from that which he made use of in his private practice, of which last alone he makes sale. There were not any surgical instruments for the use of the charity, but a very complete set of pharmaceutical apparatus was produced; and it was stated that leeches were freely administered when there was any necessity for them. The physician is bound to perform vaccination gratuitously on all who call for it; he observes, "that he has formed a very favourable opinion of its efficacy as a preservative against variola, when properly done;" and he adds, "that the public generally have latterly shown an increasing tendency to resort to the practice." Small-pox has become rather frequent of late; inoculation with the matter of that disease is not forbidden at the dispensary, but the attendant states, that "he has never used it."

A register, which particularizes the disease under which the applicant labours, and the mode of its termination, is kept by the medical attendant and his assistant. No person having a proper recommendation has ever been refused relief; and it would appear that the number of persons who receive aid is annually increasing; in 1831 this number amounted to only 4,000; in 1832 it increased to 4,500; and in 1833 it had reached a total of 4,600. In the course of the months of June, July and August, immediately previous to the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, 900 persons had been supplied with advice and medicine, and at the date of their being in Cahirciveen, about 100 patients were under treatment by the physician at their own homes; no operations of any importance had taken place for a period of three years, but during that space about 20 poor women had been attended in their confinement. A copy of each year's register is regularly laid before the grand jury.

All persons (including the servants of subscribers) are entitled to the aid of the medical attendant, if they come provided with a recommendation. The rules declare that it shall be indispensable for each applicant to present one of these orders, but the condition is not very rigidly enforced. It is stated, at the same time, by the witnesses, that they may be obtained with the greatest facility even by strangers, as each subscriber possesses the right of issuing an unlimited number of them in his own name. It sometimes, but not often, happens that these orders are made use of by persons whose circumstances by no means render them fit objects for the gratuitous benefits of a charitable institution, but there has been no instance of subscriptions obtained on the promise or understanding of medicine and medical assistance being given in return.

On the public dispensary days the medical officer is in attendance to prescribe for and give medicine to the poor. It is also the custom to compound at all times the prescriptions given to the poor by any authorized and known practitioners. The attending physician himself does not keep any "Prescription Book," as he is in the habit of making up whatever he thinks necessary at the time of ordering it. The extent of the district attached to the dispensary is such that it has been found expedient not to require the physician to visit any poor patient whose dwelling is at a greater distance from the dispensary than four miles. The poor, therefore, who reside in remote parts are quite without medical assistance, even in case of fractures or accidents arising; however, the medical attendant does not on all occasions avail himself of the above-mentioned restriction, and in particular and urgent circumstances he does not refuse his services, though demanded sometimes at very inconvenient distances; this is purely discretionary with him. He observes on this point, that to do justice to a patient labouring under an acute disorder, he ought to be seen by a medical man at least once a day; less frequent attention is really of no avail except where the disease has assumed a chronic character. It is only when parturition has become protracted or impeded that lying-in women are entitled to demand his assistance; at other times they have no aid but that rendered by the midwives of the place, who possess very few qualifications for the task which they undertake, and become frequently the cause of serious injury to those who place themselves in their hands.

In the entire district of the Cahiriveen Dispensary there is no source whence the poor can obtain any extra nourishment, clothing or fuel, during their sickness.

The principal direction is nominally constituted by the governors, whose numbers amount to about 28, and who are all equally entitled to take a part in the proceedings of each general meeting. There has, however, been no general meeting since the occurrence of the last election of an officer, upon which occasion all the governors who remained absent were permitted to deliver their votes by proxy. In this state of things, the management of the institution has in all essential particulars devolved of necessity on the medical attendant, although neither a governor nor a subscriber.

There is no managing committee, nor board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury, nor any visiting governors.

The treasurer, the sole non-medical officer, was appointed by the subscribers about five years ago, and has never been required to give any security. He accounts annually with the grand jury. His election took place by open voting; and that mode of selection has been found to answer exceedingly well. It is stated by the witnesses, that sectarian prejudices have had no share in the choice of any of the officers. The medical attendant is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. It is further observed, that although there has never been reason to suspect any increase of the number of governors for the purpose of carrying an election, yet it would be very desirable that a veto should be vested in some superior authority for the purpose of preventing the possibility of any improper appointments. No officer has ever been removed or suspended.

The only articles purchased are the stock of medicine.

No rules have ever been framed for the government of the affairs of this charity.

Reports are annually made to the grand jury; but they are never printed. It is conceived by the witnesses, that much benefit might be derived from the establishment of local boards of health, to consist of individuals from the class of the gentry, farmers and clergy. They add, that a large number of competent individuals could at all times be found in the district perfectly willing to take a part in any investigation, having for its object the ascertaining or the relieving the wants of the poor, who it is to be regretted are very numerous.

The institution possesses no fixed property. It is certainly dependent on the county presentment in its favour, and on annual subscriptions. Its existence is in fact contingent on the continuance of the latter source, as, were they to fail (which under present circumstances is not at all likely), its operations would inevitably be suspended. The subscribers belong exclusively to the wealthier classes, and there is no great disparity in the amount of their respective contributions. The following sums have been the gross receipts in annual subscriptions during the last three years; viz.—

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands until wanted.

The principal items of expenditure are the physician's salary and medicine; bills are usually examined by the medical attendant previous to their being discharged by the treasurer.

A statement of income and expenditure is prepared every year, but, although it is laid before the grand jury, it is not the custom to do so with respect to the subscribers.

Rev. Mr. FITZGERALD, R.C.C.—WILLIAM HAMET, esq.—Rev. Mr. O'LEARY, P.P.—JOHN ROCHE.—
The Medical Attendant; and the Apothecary.

THE country around Castle Island is very scantily provided with sources of medical relief. There is no similar institution within $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles of the Castle Island dispensary, to which a district of 15 miles square (containing nearly 20,000 inhabitants) is attached. As the medical attendant is not bound to visit at the dwellings of any persons living at a greater distance than three miles from the dispensary, those of the poor who reside in the remote parts of the district can seldom obtain any immediate advice, when labouring under acute disorders; no person has, however, under any circumstances been refused medicine. The witnesses give it as their opinion, that no dispensary district should ever exceed three miles square, and they are anxious to see the country arranged in medical districts of a judicious size, each provided with an establishment for dispensing medicine, while a small hospital for fevers and accidents should be erected for the use of a greater or less number of them. The great distance to the county hospital at Tralee ($10\frac{1}{4}$ miles) renders it of comparatively little benefit to the neighbourhood of Castle Island, and, on many occasions, the want of some internal accommodation for the sick poor has been felt as a defect of the most serious inconvenience.

The dispensary under consideration is held in a small room on the first floor of the market-house, and although the accommodation afforded is of the most inadequate description, a rent of 3 l. per annum is paid for it to the nobleman from whom it is held from year to year. There is however some advantage in this tenure, as it can at any time be surrendered. It were most desirable that the duty of providing fit places for medical charities constituted part of the functions of the grand jury. There is no waiting room for the patients, nor any baths, no out-buildings, nor any grounds.

There is but one medical officer, a gentleman aged 35, who is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, of which he produced the testimonials. He stated that he had been educated in midwifery in the same city, but he did not bring forward any evidence of the fact. He holds no other appointment than the present, to which he was elected at a general meeting of the subscribers assembled in the year 1824 for the purpose of establishing the institution and selecting the necessary officers. He acts in the combined capacity of physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary, and resides in the town at a distance of about half a mile from the establishment, at which he is obliged to attend in order to relieve the poor, on every alternate day from the hour of 9 A. M. so long as any applicants present themselves. Being engaged in private practice, he is in the habit of availing himself during his occasional absence of the services of an apothecary who acts as his substitute, without it being deemed necessary that notice of the change should be given. It is stated that the committee are possessed of sufficient authority to prevent any irregularity on the part of the medical attendant, and that the poor can always obtain redress for any neglect or inattention on his part towards them, by stating their complaints to any one of the subscribers. It is also stated that the poor are well aware of their being possessed of this power, but that there is no reason to suppose that the physician does not enjoy their good will and confidence. The medicines are dispensed by the apothecary who has been already mentioned, and who is always on the spot to afford assistance in cases of emergency.

The physician receives a salary of 100 l. a year from the funds of the institution. He has no allowance for the maintenance of a horse, or for the expenses of a residence; as to the amount of his payment, the subscribers alone are concerned in the determination of it. In the present instance they would appear to have allowed a salary higher than is necessary for obtaining the services of a properly qualified person. They are not liable to be controlled in their proceedings by the authority of the grand jury, although some check of the kind is certainly much wanted.

There has been but one election since the foundation of the dispensary, when the present medical attendant, being the only candidate, was elected unanimously. Previous notice of the intention to make the appointment had been given in the newspapers for the purpose of procuring extensive competition, and it was announced that candidates of all ages would be equally admissible, if they were in possession of a degree from some university. The grand jury were not made acquainted with the appointment, nor with the qualifications of the individual chosen. There are no superannuation or retiring allowances; and as yet there has been no mortality in the medical department. It is conceived that from the small number of individuals capable of paying for advice, who reside in this district, there would not be any medical man in it, were it not for the emolument derived from the dispensary. In point of fact, there is not a second practitioner within its limits.

The room in which the medicines are dispensed appeared very ill-suited to its purpose. The drawers and bottles were in indifferent order, and every thing seemed poor and decayed. There was, however, a fair supply of very good medicine, including quinine, and all those usually adopted in private practice, with the exception of morphia. They had been purchased by the treasurer, pursuant to the order of the committee, from Mr. Hayes, a druggist in Cork, at an average annual cost, during the last three years, not exceeding 36 l., but at a former period it amounted in one year to 61 l., in another to 56 l. They are placed under the care of the apothecary, who is in the habit of assisting the medical attendant, and they are preserved distinct from those made use of in private business. Every thing necessary for the preparing decoctions, &c., had been provided, but there was a deficiency of surgical instruments; instruments; the stock of them being limited to those contained in a small pocket-case, and a few designed for obstetric purposes. Leeches, it was stated, were never, under any circumstances, resorted to. The medical attendant is bound to vaccinate the poor gratuitously at the dispensary, and he has an opinion very favourable to the utility of the practice. The public, in some instances, participate in the same sentiment, but by no means universally, as there are still many individuals among the poorer classes who prefer obtaining inoculation with variolous matter. This operation, though not forbidden by the rules of the institution, is one to which the physician declares himself averse, and one which he does not sanction. It is exclusively performed by certain itinerants, through whose instrumentality small-pox has prevailed to a most alarming degree during the last two or three years. Many of the persons who have been inoculated by them have fallen victims to the disease.

A register of the circumstances under which relief is granted is no longer kept. It was found to occupy too much time, and was therefore discontinued. It was, however, stated that none had ever been refused relief. The following table was framed from the evidence given by the witnesses as to the ordinary extent of relief granted.

Who entitled to Relief.

The rules declare that every person seeking relief from the dispensary shall be provided with a recommendation. In obtaining these orders there exists no difficulty. They may be procured at all times, even by strangers, as each subscriber is entitled to issue an unlimited number of them in his own name. In urgent cases, recommendations are frequently dispensed with. No contract for medicine or advice is ever made with any of the poorer subscribers. But at one time it occurred too frequently, that persons participated in the benefit of the charity whose circumstances did not in any degree place them in need of gratuitous relief. The medical attendant, at last, ventured to refuse relief to the tenant of the grand juror, a man whom he knew to pay an annual rent of 50*l.*, and who was by no means distressed. The man's landlord brought a complaint of the refusal before a general meeting of the subscribers, who justified the physician's conduct, and put a final check to the repetition of similar cases.

Extern Patients.

Besides the poor, who are relieved at the dispensary the sick who are confined to their houses are visited, if they reside within a distance of three miles. It is stated also, that the visit would be repeated two or three times a day, and at night, if such were necessary (which it is said seldom to be). In cases of accident immediate assistance is never refused, and the physician observes, that "in all acute cases it becomes quite indispensable that the patient should be seen daily by his medical attendant." This constant care can only be remitted when the disorder is of a chronic nature. No prescription book is kept at the dispensary, but it is stated that no other prescriptions are compounded than those of the attending physician. Lying-in women are attended by that gentleman whenever a subscriber's recommendation has been procured, or when their case has shown any symptoms of difficulty. In general they are attended by midwives, of whom two or three are reported to be tolerably well qualified for their business. Injury sometimes occurs during parturition, but not so much from their interference as from the delay too common in sending for proper assistance. Very serious mischief (laceration of the perinæum, rupture of the neck of the bladder, opening of the head of the child, dislocation of jaw, and loss of eyes in children born alive, and still alive) has been produced in this district by a male practitioner of midwifery, who has never obtained any qualification whatsoever.

Nourishment.

There is not any institution in the district for affording food, clothing or fuel to the sick poor.

General Management.

The general management of the establishment is conducted by a meeting of the subscribers, which is held on a fixed day in each year, and is usually attended by upwards of 10 members. Business however may be transacted by any number that think proper to attend, and a record of the proceedings is always kept. The surgeon has not been allowed to take any material part in the principal direction.

Managing Committee.

At the formation of the dispensary a managing committee was appointed; the same has existed since that period without any renewal of their authority, but they have never met; there is neither board of superintendence, nor visiting governor.

Officers not medical.

There are two non-medical officers, namely, the secretary and the treasurer, the latter is the Curate of the parish. Neither of these gentlemen receive any remuneration for the performance of their respective duties, nor are they required to enter into any security, and it is stated, that both have been elected without reference to their religious persuasions.

Attendants.

The only attendant is a servant woman, who is hired for the purpose of cleaning the dispensing room, for which she receives 10*s.* or 15*s.* per annum.

Reports.

No report has ever been made. The witnesses state, that the district contains a very considerable number of persons, every way qualified and willing to take a part in any investigation, having for its object the ascertaining the real condition and the actual wants of the poor.

Funds and Accounts.
Receipts.

The institution does not possess any fixed property. It is mainly dependent for its existence on the contributions of annual subscribers; of whom there are three who give each 10 l. a year, whilst there is but one who gives a sum under 1 l. Until within the last 12 months it was the custom of the grand jury to present for an annual sum equal to the total of the subscriptions.

1831 - - - - -	80	9	10
1832 - - - - -	80	5	7
1833 - - - - -	78	14	7

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands until required to meet the expenditure, which consists chiefly of salaries, medicine and rent, and amounted to the following sums during each of the last three years : viz —

1831 - - - - -	160	19	8
1832 - - - - -	160	11	2

At the general meeting of the subscribers the bills which have become due are examined and then discharged by an order on the treasurer.

A statement of the income and expenditure is prepared once a year, and copies are presented to the grand jury and to the meeting of the subscribers. Accounts.

The Medical Attendant.

Clanmaurice
Dispensary.

ALTHOUGH the district attached to the Clanmaurice Dispensary includes within its limits another institution of a similar character within six miles of the town of that name, namely, at Ardfert, yet it has been found to be of an extent altogether too great for the effectual administration of medical aid to the entire body of the inhabitants, who amount to nearly 14,000 ; of these some live at a distance of 11 miles from the charity, and though they are always certain of advice and medicine on making application at that place, yet from the difficulty of giving proper attention to them when labouring under acute disorders, it is the opinion of the witness that a dispensary district should not exceed at the utmost a radius of four miles. Another evil which has on many occasions been productive of very serious inconvenience is the defect of internal accommodation for patients. " Every purpose," observes the witness, " could be easily obtained, if the country were judiciously divided into medical sections, and if, besides a dispensary for affording external relief attached to each, there were, connected with a greater or less number of such sections, a small hospital, common to all, destined to receive cases of infectious fevers at all times, and provided with a few surgical beds for accidents."

Population and
Extent of Country.

A wretched thatched cabin is appropriated to the purposes of this institution. It is built of mud, and contains a few small rooms, and serves alike for the dispensing of medicines to the poor, and for the residence of the medical attendant, his wife and eight children. It contains no baths, and is held by the year from an individual who is quite unconnected with the charity.

Buildings, Furniture
and Grounds.

As for any inconvenience arising from the precarious mode of tenure, it is impossible that any change of situation could be for the worse. It would be truly desirable that the county were obliged to provide adequate accommodation for all similar establishments, if for no other reason, at least to prevent the occurrence of such misery as the present locality displays, which in winter must be truly deplorable.

The sole medical attendant of the institution is a person aged 37 years, who is possessed of no other professional qualification than the diploma of a master in the Apothecaries' Hall in Dublin. He never received any education in midwifery, and has held this (his only) situation for a period approaching to nine years, having been appointed at a general meeting of subscribers which assembled at the formation of the charity. Previous to that period he had been in business as an apothecary in Killarney, and he is still engaged in private practice, in addition to being attached to the dispensary in the combined capacities of surgeon, physician, accoucheur and apothecary ; as he resides on the spot he gives attendance to the poor on all the week days, and at all hours. It is stated that he has not, on any occasion, been absent, and that his duties have never been delegated to a substitute ; as to the ensuring of regularity in his attendance, the authority of the subscribers is said to be quite sufficient ; and it is also stated, that the poor have it in their power to obtain redress for any harshness or neglect on his part, by laying their complaints in the hands of the subscribers. They are in general very well aware of this mode of procuring redress ; but, at the same time, there is no reason to suppose that the medical officer is not possessed of their good will and confidence.

Medical Officer.

The annual salary of the medical attendant is 70*l.*, in addition to this, which he draws from the general funds of the establishment, he is allowed 10*l.* per annum on account of the rent of the cabin in which he resides ; he has no allowance for the maintenance of a horse. The amount of payment which is awarded to the surgeon rests entirely at the direction of the subscribers ; should they be inclined they can augment the salary much beyond what would be necessary to secure the services of an efficient officer ; the county can no otherwise control this expenditure than by diminishing or withholding their annual presentment.

Reports.

It has been already intimated that an election of a medical officer has occurred but once in this charity; on that occasion the voting was limited to the subscribers of 1*l.* 1*s.*, and three candidates presented themselves, one of whom was a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London; however, no testimonials were required beyond those of an apothecary, and there was no limitation as to the age of the competitors; it was not considered necessary to inform the grand jury of the appointment. There is no second practitioner within the limits of the Clanmaurice dispensary district, and as the number of individuals capable of paying for advice which it contains is very small, it is supposed that the salary derived from the dispensary forms the chief inducement to a medical man to take up his residence in it; no retiring allowance or superannuation would be granted.

Very little neatness was observable in the room wherein medicines were dispensed; the supply of medicines, though of good quality, was restricted to those of the coarsest kind, and contained none of the more novel preparations, such as quinine or morphia; they had been purchased from the Messrs. Boileau of Dublin, and the annual cost (as paid for by the treasurer out of the funds of the institution) had amounted during the last three years to an average of 36*l.*; the entire stock remained at all times under the care of the medical attendant, who was not permitted to sell any part of it. There were scarcely any of the apparatus usually considered necessary for the preparation of decoctions, &c., and not any surgical instruments; leeches were never made use of. Much attention, it is stated, is paid to the diffusion of vaccination, it is performed gratuitously on all who make application for it at the dispensary, and the public have begun to manifest an increasing confidence in it. The medical attendant observes, "that he has had much reason for looking on the practice as truly preventive of small-pox;" he adds, that "that disease is mainly kept alive by individuals who go about the country and maintain themselves by the performance of inoculation." He himself (the medical attendant) disapproves highly of inoculation with small-pox matter, which is also forbidden by the rules of the dispensary.

No register of cases or of the amount of relief granted in connexion with the charity is kept. It does not extend its aid to lying-in women; and no operation of any importance has been performed during the last three years.

The persons who seek medical aid must come provided with the recommendation of a subscriber, this is a condition which the regulations declare to be indispensable, but which, nevertheless, is not always insisted upon. It is stated that the greatest facility exists in obtaining orders of relief, so much so that many individuals contrive to participate in the benefits of the charity, who by no means stand in need of gratuitous assistance. The poor, and even those who are strangers, cannot fail in procuring tickets, as the number of them which each subscriber is entitled to issue is unlimited, and they singly require but his own signature; none of the poorer subscribers obtain gratuitous attendance.

Those patients whom disease renders unable to present themselves at the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings, if not at a greater distance than eleven miles. On this point the medical attendant observes, that "he is accustomed to visit acute cases as often as they require it, daily, or oftener if it be necessary; but when the patient resides in a remote quarter, it becomes impossible to grant him that repeated attention, which alone is of any real service, and which cannot be dispensed with except in disorders of a chronic character." The institution does not possess any of the splints or bandages which are required in the treatment of fractures and other accidents. The attendant does not keep any prescription book, as he is in the habit of making up on the spot the medicine which is adapted for each applicant. The Assistant Commissioners were, therefore, unable to form any opinion as to the quality or judiciousness of the remedies usually administered. They were, however, informed, that all prescriptions given by authorized practitioners to poor persons in possession of a subscriber's order were made up at the dispensary on all occasions; as the medical attendant is not bound to attend gratuitously on lying-in women, the latter are obliged to have recourse in their confinements to the services of common midwives, whose ignorance renders them extremely unfit to be trusted.

There is no institution in the entire district of the Clanmaurice dispensary for supplying the sick poor with articles of food, clothing or fuel.

The constitution of the dispensary provides that the general management of its affairs shall be carried on by the subscribers, who amount in number to about 30, and who are all equally entitled to take a part in any business that may be brought forward. However, they are reported to have held not more than one meeting, at which about seven or eight members were present. The actual management of the establishment seems to have been in all things left to the discretion of the medical attendant, who has had a large share in the disposal of the funds.

No managing committee exists, neither have the grand jury appointed a board of superintendence. There are not any visiting governors.

The treasurer, the sole non-medical officer, was appointed by the subscribers about three years back, at the only general meeting that has taken place. The votes at the election were given vivâ voce, and it is stated, were uninfluenced by sectarian distinctions. The treasurer acts without receiving any salary, and does not give any security, but is held accountable to the grand jury. There has not been an instance of the removal or suspension of an officer.

There are not any attendants attached to this institution, nor are there any fixed rules for its guidance; indeed, there appears to be an universal want of system throughout all the medical charities of this part of the country.

No report of the state of the affairs of the institution has ever been presented to the public. This district contains a very considerable number of persons, who would cheerfully take a part in any investigation into the wants of the poor.

The

The Clanmaurice Dispensary possesses no permanent source of income. It is entirely dependent on an annual presentment granted by the grand jury, and on the contributions of yearly subscribers. The latter form a very precarious support, and the absolute existence of the charity is said to be contingent on the continuance of the bounty of two individuals who subscribe the larger proportion of this part of its income. The total receipts in subscriptions have remained nearly equal for the last three years ; they have been as follows :—

No individual of the poorer classes is to be found among the contributors, and it is stated that no subscriptions accompanied with stipulations for relief in return have been hitherto received.

The income is collected by the treasurer, and remains in his hands exclusively.

The entire expenditure has not exceeded, during any of the last three years, an average of 100*l.*, the principal items being, salary to the medical attendant, rent and medicines. Bills are discharged by the treasurer without their having been examined by any other authority.

The Assistant Commissioners were not able to procure any copies of the half-yearly accounts, which, they were informed, were regularly submitted to the grand jury, though not to the subscribers.

Dingle Dispensary.

THE district to which the Dingle Dispensary forms the only source of medical relief is of a peninsular outline, extending in length nearly 40 miles, with a mean breadth of about 12. The inhabitants amount to 40,000, and are scattered over 20 different parishes. There is not a second dispensary in any part of the barony, and the nearest medical charity is at Tralee, distant upwards of 30 miles. The district is represented by the witnesses as embracing altogether too great an extent of country. It is observed that “ although the poor can always obtain advice and medicine by making application at the dispensary, yet that it is quite impossible that one medical man can give them proper attention at their houses when they are confined by acute diseases.” They (the witnesses) are of opinion that a dispensary should be established at a place called Castlegregory, about 15 miles from Dingle, and they would propose that, if possible, no dispensary district should exceed six or eight miles in diameter. The witnesses complain of the very serious inconvenience which has, on many occasions, been felt from the want of internal accommodation for the sick poor, and the medical attendant states that he has frequently expressed to the committee his sentiments regarding the urgent necessity of providing a small hospital for the treatment of surgical and medical disorders, and above all for the reception of patients affected with contagious fevers.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The house appropriated to the purposes of the dispensary is well placed, being situated in the main street, and nearly in the centre of the town of Dingle. It is held from year to year at an annual rent of 9*l.* 6*s.*, and has not any ground attached to it. It is however small and out of repair. The patients are usually prescribed for by the physician in a room on the ground floor, in which the medicines are kept, but there is a consulting room up stairs for any particular case, and a convenient passage is allotted as a waiting-room.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The medical attendant is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, and also a licentiate of the King’s and Queen’s College of Physicians in Ireland. At the formation of the charity, in the year 1824, he was selected as physician by the unanimous vote of the subscribers ; since that period he has been unconnected with any other establishment, and has constantly resided at a few paces from the dispensary-house, at which he is obliged to attend every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, between the hours of eleven and one, and later if there be any need. Either he or the apothecary are always on the spot to afford assistance in cases of immediate urgency, and the latter officer, it is stated, would act in the place of the physician, if any cause required his absence, which has never hitherto exceeded a period of 24 hours. Any prolonged irregularity in the discharge of the duties of either officer is effectually guarded against by the control which the committee possess over their conduct, to whom any complaints which the poor may have to make of inattention are usually addressed. The witnesses describe the committee to be a tribunal from whom redress can with facility be obtained ; but the Assistant Commissioners beg leave to remark, that that body are not in the habit of holding any fixed and regular meetings, and that they are seldom called together more than one day in each year. The medical attendant states that previous to his being appointed to the situation which he at present holds, he resided as a practitioner in Dublin, and that he is still engaged in private practice on his own account. The medicines of the charity, though usually dispensed by the apothecary, always remain in the physician’s custody.

Medical Officer.

The salary of the physician is 100*l.* per annum, that of the apothecary 28*l.* per annum ; neither of them receives any allowance for a horse, or towards the expenses of a residence. At one time the annual payment to the physician amounted to 150*l.* It would appear that the grand jury conceived this sum to be too high, as they stopped their usual presentment, until the salary was reduced to its present amount. The Assistant Commissioners inquired whether it was possible for a medical man, under the present system of dispensary management, to create an appointment for himself, and to obtain funds from the county, by giving in to the grand jury as the subscriptions of individuals, money either actually advanced by himself, or to be repaid by him when the purpose had been answered. They were told that "such a trick could not be played in the present establishment, inasmuch as the salary of the physician was a fixed sum, but that it might be practised with success in any case where the attendant was accustomed to receive all surplus monies that remained after the ordinary expenses of the dispensary had been defrayed."

Election.

It has been already intimated that only one election of medical officer to this charity has taken place. The gentleman who was then chosen had been invited to settle in the town, on the express understanding that he was to receive a salary of 150 l. a year. It is thought that from the few persons capable of remunerating a physician for his attendance which the district contains, it would be altogether without medical aid, were it not for the salary derived from the dispensary; the other practitioner has, however, recently settled in it. On the occasion of the election, the successful candidate had no competitors, nor was any notice of the matter given in the newspapers. He was known to be possessed of the qualifications of a regularly educated physician, and no notice of his appointment was sent to the grand jury. The witnesses state, that no superannuation or retiring pensions would be allowed to its officers.

Pharmacy.

The room in which the medicines are kept is rather confined for the purpose, but it is neatly arranged, and contains a good stock of all the principal medicines in general use, with the exception of quinine, and some other of the more modern French preparations. The medicines are purchased from Messrs. Harrington & Co., druggists in Cork, who subscribe a guinea a year to the funds of the charity. The expense of drugs (as paid for by the treasurer) has amounted during the last three years to an average of about 35*l.* The Assistant Commissioners found the stock on hand equal in value to nearly 40*l.* and forming the best supply of medicines which they had met with in any dispensary. It was under the care of the physician, who keeps it under lock and key, and is not allowed to sell any part. There is a good apparatus for forming pharmaceutical preparations. The supply of surgical instruments belonging to the charity is limited to a few of the most ordinary, but which, at the same time, are found adequate for all purposes. Leeches are never adopted in the practice of the dispensary. Vaccination is quite neglected, and the medical attendant is not bound to extend the practice, in which, notwithstanding the public is said to place a daily increasing confidence, amongst the poorest and most ignorant portions of the population there exists however a very strong prejudice against it, which has been adroitly taken advantage of by persons who travel through the country, disseminating the disease of small-pox by inoculation; one of these individuals, who had been the cause of extensive mischief, has lately been brought before the magistrates, who succeeded in checking his career. It should be remarked that the apothecary of the present institution has a direct and positive interest in the non-performance of vaccination at the dispensary; he is in the habit of performing the operation to some extent at his own house, and receives payment from every person operated on.

Patients' Registration.

The physician keeps a register of all the applications made to him for relief. In it he specifies the name of each applicant, the nature of his disorder, and the mode of treatment adopted in it. A copy of the register is annually furnished to the grand jury. The number of persons relieved during the last three years was stated as follows, viz.—

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-

When the Assistant Commissioners visited the charity, they were informed that the average number of persons for whom the physician is called upon to prescribe, on a dispensary day, amounted to 100; all cases requiring important surgical operations are sent to the County Infirmary at Tralee.

Who entitled to Relief.

According to the rules of the institution the physician and the apothecary are authorized to use their discretion in selecting persons whom they may think fit objects to participate in its benefits. They are directed expressly to refuse their aid to all whom they have not reason to believe to be in necessitous circumstances. The servants of subscribers are at all times entitled to relief, and it is stated, that undeserving persons sometimes contrive to obtain it through the instrumentality of others who are really in distressed circumstances. About 20 of the water-guard men, who are stationed at Dingle, subscribe 10s. a year each to the charity, and receive in return advice and medicine gratuitously.

Extern Patients.

Besides the patients who are prescribed for at the institution, the sick poor of the town (whose population amounts to nearly 6,000) are visited at their own dwellings, when labouring under acute disorders. The great extent of the rural portion of the district renders it quite impossible that the medical attendant can render similar attention with any regularity to the peasantry of the country. The attendance of the medical officers is never demanded at night. The treatment of fractures and other accidents is intrusted to the apothecary. No account is kept of the prescriptions ordered for the poor, but it is stated, that the prescriptions of authorized practitioners are occasionally compounded for them. As the physician is not obliged to attend the women of the poorer class, during their confinement, they are completely thrown into the hands of midwives, of whom the majority are said said to be extremely ignorant and unskilful; a small number of them, about three or four, have been educated at the Lying-in Hospital in Dublin, whither they were sent and maintained at the cost of the county.

No kind of nourishment is supplied to the sick poor from this or any other institution in the district.

The principal direction is nominally vested in a committee of eleven gentlemen, who were appointed at the origin of the institution, and who have continued in office without any renewal of their election. The regular meetings of this committee do not occur oftener than once a year, when they assemble for the purpose of passing the accounts. It is stated, however, that they meet occasionally at other periods when specially required so to do. The real management of the charity is in a great measure left to the physician and the treasurer, who act in all things subject to the ultimate control of the committee, of the proceedings of which latter body no account has been kept: as subsidiary to the authority of the committee it is the custom for some of the governors occasionally to visit and examine the dispensary, but not at any stated times. There is not any board of superintendence acting under the orders of the grand jury.

The treasurer (who also acts as secretary, and discharges the duties of both offices without remuneration) is the only non-medical officer. He has remained an officer for some years, and has not been required to give any security. Persons of all religious denominations are, it is said, equally eligible to the spot.

Reports relative to the affairs of the charity are prepared once in every year and laid before the members of the grand jury. It has not been usual to print them, and the Assistant Commissioners were unable to procure a copy of any. The witnesses were requested to give their opinion respecting the utility of a permanent board of health, to consist of the gentry, clergy, medical men, and of the middling class of farmers. They were unanimous in saying, that "such a body was not required except during the prevalence of an such as cholera or typhus fever." They added at the same time, that "the district contained a large number of individuals who would most cheerfully co-operate in any measure which tended to place in their true light the wants and actual condition of the poorer classes of the inhabitants."

As the dispensary does not possess any fixed property whether in land or houses, it is entirely dependent on the contributions of annual subscribers, and on the presentments which the grand jury are accustomed to grant; the former constitute the main support of the charity, which would recently have fallen altogether to the ground, had not a nobleman, whose usual donation had been 25*l.* increased it, on consideration of the emergency, to 50*l.* The following table shows the income under the two heads during the last two years.

When the treasurer makes application to the grand jury for their customary grant, it is necessary that he should be able to make affidavit that he has received and has in his possession a certain sum derived from annual subscribers. But as this portion of the receipts of the charity is paid with very little regularity as to time, it has been the practice of the medical attendant to pay in anticipation to the treasurer the sum which he afterwards takes upon himself the trouble of collecting from the several contributors.

The principal items of expenditure are physician's and apothecary's salary, medicine and rent, and of late years it has exceeded the receipts. All bills are paid by the treasurer, after having been previously examined by the committee.

Once in the year the accounts of income and expenditure are drawn up and laid before the grand jury. They are also presented to the members of the committee, but not to the subscribers at large.

Persons who attended the Examination.

EUGENE DOWNING, esq.—NATHANIEL IRVINE, esq.—DAVID MAHONY, esq.—THOMAS M'CARTHY, esq.—Mr. O'SULLIVAN.—The Apothecary; and the Medical Attendant.

THE population of six parishes, amounting to nearly 30,000 souls, have no other source of medical relief than the dispensary of Kenmare; some of them have to come for assistance a distance of 30 miles, and in no direction does any other medical charity occur nearer than at Bantry, or at Killarney, each about 15 miles off. The district is universally felt to be too large, and quite inadequate to the wants of those who are dependent on it. Its utility has been of late years still further diminished by the curtailment of its income, so that a very large number of persons have, of necessity, been refused relief. A still greater inconvenience is experienced from the want of some intern accommodation for the sick poor. The fever hospital at Killarney is of comparatively little benefit to the inhabitants of Kenmare, on account of its remoteness; and even, if patients be sent thither, it is by no means certain that they will be taken in; in several instances admission has been refused; as for the county infirmary at Tralee, it is quite out of the question, being situated at the opposite extremity of the county. Thus, the sick poor are quite unprovided for, and if attacked with infectious disease, they are discarded from their own hovels and left to perish by the road side, as no kind of shelter can be found for them. As a remedy for this state of things, the witnesses suggest, the country should be divided into convenient districts, and that each of them should contain a dispensary for affording external relief, while, to a greater or less number of such districts, according to circumstances, a small hospital should be attached, with wards for the reception of fever cases, and a few beds for the treatment of accidents and surgical disorders.

The dispensary is judiciously situated in the main street and centre of the town. The house consists of three rooms, the uppermost of which is used merely as a lumber room. In the two lower, the business of the institution is carried on. It is a dirty place, and if not well adapted in itself for the purposes of a dispensary, it is rendered much worse by the entire absence of arrangement, and neatness in the keeping of it. The premises are held at an annual rent of 5*l.*, from a person who is in no other way connected with the charity.

There are no ground or out-buildings, and they do not contain any convenience for the administration of baths. If it were enacted that each county should provide localities for the medical charities which it supports, there would, in all cases, be some guarantee for their being better adapted to their purposes than they are at present.

There are two medical officers attached to the dispensary, a surgeon and an apothecary. The former is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, (in which city he obtained his qualifications as an accoucheur), and a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London. He was appointed by the subscribers at large in the year 1827, and is at present 36 years of age. He attends no other institution than the one under consideration, to which he is attached as physician, surgeon and accoucheur. He resides within 100 yards of the dispensary-house, and is permitted to engage in private practice. On three days in each week, namely, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, he is obliged to attend at the dispensary, between the hours of twelve and three, and to prescribe for the patients who may present themselves. It is stated that this portion of his duties has never been performed by proxy, except in case of his illness, on which occasions, the apothecary has to act in his place.

The ordinary duties of the apothecary (the second medical officer) are confined to the preparing and dispensing the medicines which have been ordered by the medical attendant. One or other of these gentlemen is always on the spot, so as to secure immediate assistance in urgent and pressing cases. The subscribers exact from them at all times constant attention and regularity in the performance of their respective functions; and any poor person who has just reason to complain of harshness or inattention experienced from either of them, has in his power a well-known mode of obtaining redress by making application to the subscriber who recommended him.

The amount annually awarded to the medical officers is not fixed, it varies with the sum received from the subscribers, whatever that may be, the salary of the physician is made to bear to that of the apothecary—the proportion of three to one. To neither gentleman is any allowance made for a residence or towards the maintenance of a horse. The subscribers have it in their power to apportion what salaries they please to their officers. They may raise them, it is stated by the witnesses, to any amount within the limits of the income, without being subject to the interference of the grand jury, who have no other mode of checking lavish expenditure (if such occurred) than by stopping their usual annual presentment.

Each of the medical officers is elected by the subscribers at large, independent of any superior authority. This is a defect which should be remedied by vesting in some tribunal the power of passing a veto on all elections, for the purpose of preventing the appointment of improper persons, on the occasion of the last vacancy in the situation of physician, it was filled up without any previous notice, it being required from the person chosen that he should be possessed of separate testimonials as a physician, surgeon and accoucheur. The last election of an apothecary was preceded by an advertisement inserted in the newspapers, inviting candidates to present themselves, and informing them that they should be qualified as masters of the Apothecaries' Hall in Dublin. There was no limitation as to age, and there was but one candidate. The usual conditions for voting were insisted on in all those who were admitted to take a part in the election, but it was not considered necessary to acquaint the grand jury with the qualifications of the individual appointed. There are no other medical practitioners in the district than those attached to the dispensary, and it is thought that there are not in the neighbourhood a sufficient number of persons capable of paying for advice to maintain a medical man, independently of the salary derived from the institution. Neither superannuations nor retiring pensions are allowed. No death has ever taken place among the medical officers.

The Assistant Commissioners found the room appropriated to the dispensing of medicine in a very filthy and disorderly condition. From the absence of any thing like arrangement of its contents they were unable to ascertain with accuracy what the quality of the medicine was. It appeared, however, to be in sufficient quantity, with the exception that neither quinine nor morphia, nor any other of the more delicate preparations had been provided. It was all under the care of the apothecary, and was distinct from the articles used in his private practice, which were kept in his shop in a different part of the town. The sum paid by the treasurer for drugs to the Messrs. Harrington, druggists, in Cork (who are subscribers to the institution), had amounted to 30*l.* The pharmaceutical apparatus was of the most miserable description, and the stock of surgical instruments did not exceed a stomach-pump. It was stated that leeches were never made use of. No provision is made for the performance of vaccination at the dispensary. The apothecary practises it to some extent at his own residence, but he is paid for all those on whom he operates. The better informed classes exhibit an increasing confidence in the efficacy of vaccination, which has hardly ever been succeeded by small-pox, and in the excepted instances the latter disease has been of an exceedingly exceedingly mild character. Inoculation is not forbidden by the rules of the dispensary; but the medical officer states, that he has never sanctioned the performance of it.

A very accurate register is kept by the apothecary, which specifies all particulars relative to the extent of relief granted to the poor, as well as can be done when the desultory nature of dispensary practice is considered. No account is, however, kept of the numbers to whom relief is refused. The following table shows the number of persons who applied for aid with tickets of recommendation during the last three years:—

1831, number of patients was	-	-	-	-	-	-	1,630
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	1,570
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	1,320

As the one suffices to procure medical assistance during the course of one and the same attack of illness, the number of times at which medicine was actually granted may be supposed to be far greater than the above figures would indicate.

The ordinary number of persons who were relieved at the dispensary on public days, at the period of the Assistant Commissioners' visit, was stated to be between 20 and 30. At the same date, from five to ten poor people were under treatment at their own dwellings by the medical attendant. No operation of any importance had been performed for a considerable time; of midwifery cases about 20 are attended in the course of each year.

A note of recommendation is indispensably required from all persons, without any exception, who apply at the dispensary for relief. The rigid adherence to this condition does not, however, interpose any effectual obstacle to the procuring of aid by the poor. It is stated by the witnesses, that even strangers can always obtain the necessary order, as each subscriber is entitled to issue an unlimited number of orders, and a single signature to each order is sufficient. In this institution it is not usual to give either advice or medicine gratuitously to any of the subscribers. But there is reason for believing, nevertheless, that many persons contrive to participate in its benefits, whose circumstances place them quite above the necessity of applying for the assistance of a charitable establishment.

Those persons whom the nature of their sickness prevents from making personal application at the dispensary are visited at their own dwellings (provided they be not more distant from the town than two miles) by either the physician or the apothecary. It is stated, that in cases of acute disorder, this attendance is in many instances repeated to the extent of two or three visits in the course of the day, and that it is also freely rendered at night when required. The medical attendant observes, that occasional attention is really of no use whatever, except where a patient is labouring under an attack of a slow or chronic character. No provision has been made for the proper treatment of fractures and other accidents, as the charity does not possess or supply either splints or bandages. It is only in cases of danger or of difficulty that the women of the poorer classes are entitled to call for the assistance of the medical attendant of the dispensary during their confinement; at other times, they are attended by midwives, of whom the generality are represented to possess very few qualifications for their business, whilst some are said to be grossly ignorant and unskilful to a lamentable degree. A book is kept, in which the prescriptions ordered by the attendant are carefully registered. No other prescriptions than this are ever compounded at the charity.

There is no institution within the bounds of the district or in its neighbourhood for supplying the sick poor with either food or fuel.

The general management of the affairs of the establishment is vested in the annual subscribers, who amount to about 28, but who have never been in the habit of holding any fixed and regular meetings for the transaction of business. Neither of the medical officers are governors of the institution, nor have been allowed to take any material part in its management.

There is not any committee of management, nor any board of superintendence. No governor has ever been appointed for the purpose of occasionally inspecting the working of the establishment.

The officers not medical are the secretary and the treasurer. Both of them give their services without receiving any remuneration, and the latter is not required to give any security. It is stated that they have been elected without reference to their religious persuasions.

No attendant is engaged.

For the first time a report was prepared previous to the last assizes, in pursuance of the directions of the grand jury. The report was not printed, but the Assistant Commissioners were informed that it contained a statement of the numbers who had obtained relief from the dispensary, together with their diseases and the mode of treatment adopted. It is suggested by the witnesses, that much advantage would result from selecting a certain number of individuals from the gentry, the clergy and the middling class of farmers, and forming them into a board to watch over the public health, and to make known the wants and real condition of the labouring classes.

There are, it is stated, a large number of persons in the district who would very willingly co-operate in any investigation having in view the latter object.

The institution does not possess any sources of income of a permanent character. It is maintained by a yearly presentment allowed by the grand jury, and chiefly by annual subscriptions derived exclusively from the richer classes. On its receipts from the latter source its existence is altogether dependent, and it forms a very uncertain and precarious support. Two individuals subscribe considerable sums respectively, viz., 10*l.* and 5*l.*

The following gross sums were received from subscribers during the last three years.

1831	70	—	—
1832	51	3	—
1833	51	—	—

Until the year 1832, the amount annually contributed by the county was equal to what had been collected from contributors.

After the subscriptions have fallen due the secretary issues a circular to the subscribers, requesting them to deliver their contributions to the treasurer. The funds then remain in his hands until they are required; but the institution is generally in his debt.

The principal items in the annual expenditure are salaries, medicine and rent. The amount of the expenditure in each of the last three years was as follows; viz.—

1831	140	—	—
1832	102	6	—
1833	88	6	—

The payment of bills is in all cases intrusted to the discretion of the treasurer.

The Assistant Commissioners were not furnished with any detailed account of the income and expenditure of the charity, but they were informed that such was systematically prepared every twelve months.

STEPHEN E. COLLES, esq.—Rev. Mr. HICKSON, Vicar of Duagh.—Rev. Mr. HEWSON, Curate.—The Apothecary; and the Medical Attendant.

THE district attached to the Listowel dispensary has frequently been found inconveniently large; it extends in some directions to a distance of eight miles from the institution, and contains a population of 10,000 souls, who have not any other source of medical relief to apply to; as, although a dispensary has for some time existed at Ballylongford (which is about six miles off), it is not included within the district of the charity under consideration: the witnesses state, that no applications for relief have ever been refused at the Listowel dispensary; but they observe, that no similar establishment should ever be required to afford assistance over a country of more than ten miles in diameter; they complain of the serious evils which, on many occasions, have arisen from the want of internal accommodation for the sick poor; and it is suggested by them that small hospitals for the reception of fever cases, and containing a few beds for surgical cases, should be attached to a certain number of contiguous medical districts, each of which, at the same time, might continue to possess a dispensary for the distribution of external aid, in advice and medicine, as at present.

A neat and commodious apartment, fitted up as a shop, and situated at the rear of the house in which the medical attendant resides, has been appropriated to the purposes of the dispensary, and answers its ends extremely well. It does not, however, contain any article for administering baths.

The principal medical officer of the institution, and who is connected with it in the joint capacities of surgeon, physician and accoucheur, is a bachelor of medicine of Trinity College, Dublin, and a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh. He received his education in midwifery in the Lying-in hospital of Dublin. He is permitted to engage in private practice, but does not hold any other public situation. He was appointed by the subscribers at large, in the year 1828, at which period he was 27 years of age. As the institution is carried on in his house he is required always to give immediate aid in case of emergency, and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday he is obliged to attend in the dispensary, and to prescribe for all patients who present themselves under the proper conditions between the hours of twelve and three o'clock. The second medical officer is the apothecary. His ordinary duties are limited to the compounding and dispensing of the medicines which have been ordered by the attending physician; but whenever the absence of the latter gentleman is compelled by illness or any other unavoidable circumstance (a thing which is stated by the witnesses to have occurred but very rarely), it devolves upon the apothecary to act as his substitute, under the sanction of the subscribers or of the committee; the regular performance of their respective duties is effectually secured by the control which the committee possess over both officers, and from that body, it is said, or from any individual member of it, that the poor can with the greatest facility obtain redress, if they have had just reason to complain of having been treated as patients with harshness or neglect. No medical officer would be retained in this institution against the general wishes of the poor, or if he were known to have deservedly forfeited their confidence and good opinion.

The salaries paid to the two medical gentlemen from the general funds of the establishment are, to the physician 80 l. per annum, to the apothecary 20 l. per annum; neither of them receives any allowance towards the expenses of a residence or of the maintenance of a horse. The amount of the remuneration granted to them is quite discretionary with the governing body of the charity. The grand jury have not any other means at their disposal to control it than by withholding the presentment which they are annually called upon to grant.

Managing Committee.

Both medical officers are elected by the annual subscribers of one guinea, without any interference in the appointment on the part of the grand jury, for whose control, or for that of any other body, there does not seem in the present case to be any necessity; on the occasion of the last vacancies there appeared three candidates for the situation of physician, and two for that of apothecary. This competition had been produced by the insertion of an advertisement in the newspapers, which, at the same time, announced that all candidates would be expected to possess degrees from some university, college or board; there was no limitation as to the age of those who might think proper to come forward, nor does any number of years' service entitle an officer to a superannuation or to a retiring allowance. There has not been any mortality among the medical attendants of the dispensary. The number of persons residing in the immediate neighbourhood of Listowel who are capable of paying for medical advice is very considerable. There are, in fact, two practitioners established in the district besides those who are attached to the dispensary; but it is stated by the witnesses, that neither of them would be willing to attend the poor gratuitously.

The Assistant Commissioners found much to praise in the condition of the room in which the medicines were kept. The drawers, bottles, &c. were in good order, and contained an adequate supply of excellent medicine (including quinine and some other of the more delicate preparations) which had been procured from the Messrs. Harrington, druggists, of Cork, at an annual expense during the last three years of about 60*l*. The druggist's yearly bills are discharged by the treasurer. The drugs remain under lock and key, and always in charge either of the medical attendant or of the apothecary, to whom it is not permitted to sell any part of them, and they are kept in an apartment separate from those intended for private practice. There is a good apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c.; but the supply of surgical instruments is limited to a few small ones, which, as far as they go, answer the purposes of the charity, but are found to be altogether too few in number. Leeches are sometimes made use of, when circumstances particularly demand their application. Their frequent adoption is quite precluded by the high price at which they are sold. It is to be regretted no provision whatever is made for the diffusion of vaccination in this dispensary. Notwithstanding that small-pox has prevailed to a considerable extent of late years, the medical attendant is not forbidden to inoculate with the matter of the latter disease; but it is a practice which he has never either followed or approved of.

A very accurate register of all applications for relief is kept by the physician. It embraces the name, residence and disease of each applicant, together with its termination, and some personal remarks in particular cases. Mention is also made of the subscriber on whose recommendation each patient presents himself, and whenever, from any cause, assistance is refused, a special note of the circumstances is entered in the journal; when the Assistant Commissioners were at Listowel, the usual number of persons who were accustomed to be relieved at the dispensary on a public day was about 60; at the same date, the number of patients visited at their own dwellings was 30. It was stated that within the last three years about 30 lying-in women had been attended in connexion with the charity.

No poor person is entitled to demand the assistance of the institution, unless he has provided himself with the recommendation of a subscriber; this condition is found to operate as an exclusion to many, as each subscriber is only authorized to issue tickets in the proportion of 20 in the year for each guinea that he contributes; nevertheless it sometimes, though rarely, happens that individuals contrive to obtain both advice and medicine at the dispensary, whose means would very well enable them to pay for it; the knowledge of this fact has led to the establishment of a regulation, whereby it is provided that no man possessing three cows shall be admitted to participate in the benefits of the institution. The servants of subscribers are at all times attended gratuitously, but this privilege is not extended to any class of subscribers.

All persons who present themselves at the dispensary on the days and hours indicated in a preceding part of this evidence receive medical assistance, under the restriction already mentioned. In addition to this portion of his duty, the medical attendant was formerly required to attend at their own houses, in whatever part of the district they might be situated, those patients whom sickness did not allow to seek him at the dispensary. However, after a time this was found to be impracticable, from the great extent of country included, and it is now left to his own discretion to determine in what instances he shall visit or not. He states, that when it is possible, he is accustomed to attend two or three times a day, when such is necessary, and that he also visits at night, when circumstances are urgent. He adds, that occasional attendance is nearly if not altogether useless, except in diseases of a chronic nature, where the disorder is of an acute character, it becomes indispensable that the patient should be seen by his physician at least once a day. The Assistant Commissioners inspected the prescription book, and with reference to its entries, they were informed that no other remedies were ever prepared or compounded with the medicines belonging to the dispensary than those ordered by the medical attendant. That gentleman is not bound to give his gratuitous aid to lying-in women, except in cases of difficulty; they are usually attended by midwives, who possess very few qualifications for what they undertake, and it is stated, that a large number of the instances in which the physician is ultimately called in, have become complicated, from their mismanagement and want of skill.

A managing committee has been appointed to attend to the details of the establishment. They are directed to assemble every month for the despatch of business; minutes of their proceedings have always been kept. They do not appear to have performed their duties with any regularity. The grand jury have never appointed a board of superintendence, but some of the governors (and more especially the treasurer) are in the habit of paying occasional attention to the affairs of the charity, independent of the meetings of the committee, which seldom occur unless the members of it be specially summoned.

The treasurer is the only non-medical officer. He acts without any remuneration for his services, and has not been required to give any security. It is stated that religious distinctions do not influence the election of this officer.

Reports are annually prepared to show the circumstances of the institution. These are not usually printed, but copies of them are laid before the members of the grand jury and the subscribers.

The resources of this charity are derived in part from the county, and partly from the subscriptions of individuals, of whom one annually contributes 20*l.* to its funds. On the continuance of this gift the existence of the dispensary is chiefly dependent, as the grand jury presentments bear always a certain proportion to the amount received in subscriptions; the entire receipts during each of the last three years is given in the following table:—

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain, until wanted, in his hands. The expenditure in the year 1833 had amounted to 214*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* In the present year (1834) it has exceeded the income by 18*l.*, which sum has been advanced by the treasurer through whose hands all bills are paid, after they have been examined by the committee.

Miltown
Dispensary.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE Miltown dispensary is situated at a distance of about 13 miles from Killarney, and at not much more than half that distance from Tralee, to which however the road is difficult and leads across a ridge of mountains. In both of the last-mentioned places there are institutions for the affording medical relief to the poor, but neither of them are within the bounds of the dispensary at present under consideration, which extends in some directions to nearly 14 miles, and embraces a population of nearly 10,000 souls. The sources of professional assistance are without doubt too few in this part of the country generally, and although extern aid in advice and medicine has, at all times, been freely granted to patients provided with the necessary recommendation, yet on several occasions, the want of hospital accommodation has been severely felt, and has been attended with no little injury to the poor in general. It would be desirable to remove this defect, by the establishment of small infirmaries, in connexion with well defined and moderate districts. The Assistant Commissioners cannot however avoid remarking, that other portions of the county suffer under the want in question, to a degree exceeding the inconvenience experienced by the inhabitants of Miltown. The latter can, in some measure, avail themselves of the establishments which exist at Killarney and at Tralee, and also of the excellent hospital which has, within a short period, been erected in the town of Cahirciveen.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary is carried on in a tolerable sized room, attached to the residence of the medical attendant, of which, in fact, it, together with an apartment appropriated to the purposes of a waiting room, forms a part. The house is but one story in height, constructed of stone and mortar; neither baths or any garden or grounds are attached to the premises.

Medical Attendant.

The medical officer of the institution holds no other appointment. He was selected at the formation of the charity by the subscribers at large, and discharges the duties of general medical attendant. He is a master apothecary, and is at present 40 years of age. He resides in the institution, and is required to receive and provide for the sick poor on every day in the week. He has no assistant in the dispensing of medicine, or to take his place during his occasional absence. However, it is stated, that he has never performed his duties by proxy, and that if it were necessary for him to quit his post, he would be required to give notice of his intention to the members of the committee.

Payment.

The salary allowed to the medical attendant is 30*l.* a year. He does not receive any thing towards providing himself with a residence, or towards defraying the expenses of a mode of conveyance. There is but little reason for supposing that any disposition can exist on the part of the managers of this charity to grant to their medical officer a rate of remuneration beyond what may be considered just and adequate, but, it is stated, that no authority exists capable of preventing them from so doing, were they inclined. The grand jury have it in their power to refuse their usual yearly presentment; but such a step would in all probability put an end to the existence of the institution.

Election.

It has been already intimated that the election of the medical attendant is vested in the general body of the annual subscribers. On the occasion of the last election an advertisement was inserted in the newspapers, inviting candidates to appear. No limitation was announced announced as to the age of the competitors, and the only qualifications which they were called upon to produce was that of having attained the rank of a master apothecary. Nevertheless, on the day of election only one candidate presented himself. None were permitted to tender their votes, except those subscribers who had complied with the requisite conditions, but neither notice of the appointment or statement of testimonials was submitted to the grand jury. The institution does not profess to grant either superannuation or retiring allowances to its officers. The neighbourhood of Miltown contains very few residents in independent circumstances, and holds out no temptation to a practitioner to make it his residence, without having a fixed salary from a public establishment to depend on. It contains no other medical man than the medical attendant of the dispensary, who also discharges the functions of postmaster in the town; with respect to the securities possessed by the poor of the district against neglect or harshness on the part of the medical attendant, it is stated that "they are well aware that any one who feels himself aggrieved, can at all times easily obtain redress by lodging his complaint with one of the subscribers. There is not, however, any reason for supposing that the attendant does not enjoy the confidence and good will of the generality of the people for whose benefit he has been selected.

Pharmacy.

The Assistant Commissioners found the dispensary room arranged with much neatness. Its appointments were all good, and it contained an abundant supply of all the necessary medicines, including quinine, morphia, and some other of the more delicate preparations. It was stated that the several articles were purchased by the treasurer direct from the Messrs. Harrington and Company, druggists in Cork, and that the medical attendant was not permitted to sell any of them; they were always under his care, and were kept distinct from those of which he made use in his private practice. There is a very good apparatus for preparing decoctions, and for other pharmaceutical operations. Leeches are procured when circumstances require them, but there are not any surgical instruments belonging to the institution. It is provided that the physician shall furnish vaccine matter gratuitously to the poor of the neighbourhood, as far as he may be able; and though he is not prevented from using inoculation, yet he has never done so. He states, that "he considers vaccination as decidedly preventive of small-pox, and that the public generally manifest an increasing confidence in the utility of the practice." Small-pox has not, of late years, been very frequent in any part of the district.

Patients' Registration.

Who entitled to Relief.

No operations of moment had been performed for a period of three years, and during that time no case of midwifery had been attended in connexion with the dispensary.

A resolution of the governors directs that relief shall not be afforded to any applicant, unless he have provided himself with a recommendation from a subscriber; the servants of subscribers are entitled to the services of the medical attendant, if they comply with this condition, which is not, however, in general enforced with much strictness. At any rate it does not throw any obstacle in the way of the poor when standing in need of assistance, as each subscriber is authorized to issue an unlimited number of recommendatory orders in his own name. There is no reason to suppose that any individual, from not being known to the subscribers, has been debarred from the benefits of the charity, which, in the opinion of the witnesses, are never shared except by those whose circumstances justly render them deserving of gratuitous relief.

Extern Patients.

If a patient possessing a proper recommendation be not able to present himself at the dispensary on one of the public days, the physician is not bound to visit him at his own dwelling. He is, however, bound to give attendance in the night if required. Lying-in women are not attended from the institution. They are obliged to make use of the sources of ordinary midwives, who are represented as being, generally, extremely ignorant. No provision whatever is made for the treatment of fractures and other accidents. It is remarked by the medical attendant, that "although he is not bound to visit the poor at their own houses, yet he considers that in all cases of acute diseases they should be seen at least once a day by a physician, occasional attendance being of little if any use, except when the disorder partakes of a chronic character." The Assistant Commissioners were not able to form an opinion of the nature of the remedies adopted in the practice of the attending physician. He was not accustomed to keep a prescription book, as he made up each patient's medicine at the time of prescribing it. It was stated that, if the poor possessed the remedies of any other authorized practitioner, that they would be compounded for them gratuitously at the institution.

Nourishment.

The dispensary does not supply the sick poor with any thing beyond advice and medicine; neither does it, nor any other charity in the district, furnish them any article of nourishment, clothing or fuel.

General Management.

The supreme authority over all the affairs of the institution resides in the subscribers, who amount in number to about 33; however there is no instance of their having assembled for the transaction of business, and they would appear to have relinquished the management of the establishment, in all its particulars, to the discretion of the medical attendant, although that gentleman has not, either ex officio or by subscription, a claim to the authority of a governor.

Managing Committee.

No managing committee has ever been appointed, nor is there any board of superintendence, nor even a visiting governor to supply the defect of a more numerous and legitimate direction.

Officers not medical.

The present acting treasurer, who is the only non-medical officer, has held his situation for a considerable time; he has continued to act since the period of his original appointment without any renewal of his election, which took place by open voting, and without any reference to his religious persuasion; he receives no remuneration for his services, and has never been called upon to give any security; however, he is obliged to present his accounts to the grand jury at the termination of each year.

No report of the state and affairs of the charity has been ever prepared. The witnesses were requested to give their opinion as to the expediency of organizing a permanent board of health, to consist of the clergy, medical men and the gentry; they stated such an establishment would be productive of very extensive utility, and that a large number of individuals could very easily be found both qualified and willing to enter into measures having for their object the investigation or improvement of the general condition of the poor of the district.

The income of the charity amounts to about 60*l.* a year, which is made up partly by annual subscriptions and partly by the presentment allowed by the grand jury; it possesses no permanent property, but, however, its existence is considered to be pretty well secured, as it does not depend on the contribution of any one individual; none of the poorer classes are to be found among the subscribers.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands until wanted.

The annual expenditure is usually fully equal to the receipts, and consists chiefly of salary to physician and medicine; the payment of bills rests entirely with the treasurer.

The accounts are made up at the termination of each year, but as they are only presented to the grand jury and not printed for circulation among the subscribers, the Assistant Commissioners were not able to procure a copy.

Persons who attended the Examination.Tarbert Dispensary.

MR. ALLEN.—W. BRUNSHELL, esq.—GEORGE HILL.—THOMAS W. SANDES, esq.—
W. SANDES, esq.;—and the Medical Attendant.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district of the Tarbert dispensary contains a population of about 7,000 souls, and extends in some directions to a distance of five miles. It is judiciously placed with respect to the county for the benefit of which it has been established; and there has never been occasion to refuse relief to any applicant. There are similar medical charities at Glyn (county of Limerick) and at Ballylongford, both of which places are less than six miles off. The dispensary under consideration professes to give only external assistance; it possesses no internal or hospital accommodation for the sick; and the witnesses state, that "no evil has arisen from the defect, and that the district does not stand in need of any change."

Building.

The dispensary accommodation is exceedingly good, the room appropriated to that purpose in the house of the medical attendant is large and neatly kept, and that gentleman is allowed 5*l.* per annum for the use of it. So far as the dispensary goes there is no fault to find.

Medical Attendant.

The medical attendant was appointed by the subscribers at a general meeting, which took place in the year 1828, for the purpose of establishing the institution. He is at present 31 years of age, but is not in possession of any degree or license whatsoever, whether as surgeon, physician or apothecary, neither has he ever received any instructions in midwifery previous to his election; he had been in straitened circumstances, which prevented him from practising his profession. He resides at the institution, and acts as general medical attendant. On two fixed days in each week, viz., Tuesdays and Fridays, he is required to receive and prescribe for the poor at the dispensary, and on the intermediate days he is occupied in visiting the patients at their own dwellings. He is not attached to any other institution, and his regularity in the performance of the duties of the present is insured by the facility with which, it is stated, that any of the poor who have just reason to complain of harshness or neglect, on his part, can obtain redress by appealing to one of the subscribers; who would summon a meeting for the purpose of inquiring into the accusation. It is stated, at the same time, that there are no grounds for supposing that the medical attendant is not in full possession of the confidence and good will of the people.

Payment.

The salary of the physician is 40*l.* per annum.

Election.

At the origin of the charity, an advertisement was inserted in the newspapers, inviting candidates to present themselves for the situation of medical attendant. However, the person who at present fills that situation alone appeared on the day of election, and he was appointed by the votes of such of the subscribers as had contributed to the amount of 1*l.* 1*s.* No qualifications whether as to age or education were called for, an omission which points clearly to the necessity of investing in some superior authority an unconditional veto on all appointments, as the only certain means of preventing improper selections. The grand jury were not consulted in any step of the proceedings. There is no medical practitioner residing nearer to Tarbert than at Listowel, in the same county; and it is thought that this neighbourhood would be left wholly without professional aid, were it not for the inducement offered by the salary derivable from the dispensary, which in some degree compensated for the small number of individuals who are capable of remunerating a physician for his services. It is stated that the subscribers would not grant any pension to an officer in case of his being superannuated, or of his retiring.

Pharmacy.

The room for dispensing medicine presented an appearance of tolerable neatness. The medicines were good, but the supply was limited to those of an ordinary description, there being neither quinine nor morphia nor any of the more delicate preparations, a want which the witnesses attributed to the low state of the funds of the charity. All the medicines that are required are purchased by the treasurer from the Messrs. Leslie & Co., druggists, in in Dublin, and, on arrival, are consigned to the care of the medical attendant, who, though not permitted to sell any part of them, is nevertheless accustomed to keep them in the same apartment with the medicines which he makes use of in his private practice. The cost of drugs during each of the last three years has been as follows :

There are not any surgical instruments worth mentioning, and leeches are rarely if ever employed. With respect to vaccination, no rule exists enjoining the gratuitous performance of it on the part of the medical attendant ; but he is in the habit of vaccinating all the children who are presented to him for the purpose, never adopting inoculation by small-pox, though not forbidden to do so. The disease of small-pox prevailed throughout the district to a considerable extent about two years previous to the date of this evidence ; but since that period it has not manifested itself. The medical attendant states that “ he considers vaccination as being very decidedly efficacious in the prevention of small-pox ;” and he adds that “ the practice of it is gradually diffusing itself among the people.”

A register is kept with great correctness of the extent to which relief is granted in connexion with the institution. Particulars are stated of all the cases in which application has been made for assistance, how they have been disposed of, and what has been the result of the mode of treatment adopted in each instance. During the years between 1830 and 1833, 1,496 persons were supplied with medicine at the dispensary ; and within the same interval, the number of patients who were visited at their own dwellings amounted to 828. At the time the Assistant Commissioners visited the charity, there were on the books of the former class, 30 ; and of the latter, 10. No operation of any importance had taken place for three years, nor are midwifery cases at all attended.

Patients' Registration.

Every subscriber has the privilege of issuing, in his own name, an unlimited number of recommendations, entitling the bearers to obtain relief from the dispensary. The lower class of domestic servants are permitted to avail themselves of their tickets, which it is stated can be procured without any difficulty by all classes of the poor. They are not, however, issued, except to those who, from their poverty, are considered to be fit objects for gratuitous medical aid. In no case does the institution furnish either advice or medicine to any of the subscribers.

Who entitled to Relief.

The medical officer may be called on to visit at their houses (provided they may be not more than five miles distant) those patients who are incapacitated from presenting themselves at the dispensary. He is bound to attend them as often, either by day or night, as may be required. He observes himself, that “ he considers that a patient labouring under an acute disease should be visited at least once a day, and in some instances oftener : occasional attendance being in truth of no service except in chronic diseases.” He cannot be called to attend lying-in women, except in his capacity as a private practitioner. The poor have no other assistance in their confinement than that afforded by common midwives, who are very seldom qualified either by education or skill for their employment. No other prescriptions are compounded at the institution than those of the medical attendant.

Extern Patients.

The dispensary does not furnish any thing to the sick poor beyond advice and medicine, nor is there any charity in any part of the district whence they can procure articles of nourishment or of clothing.

Nourishment.

The management of all matters connected with the dispensary is vested in the annual subscribers, of whom there are about twenty-three. They are not accustomed to hold any regular or fixed meeting ; but as many as assemble on each occasion are empowered to transact whatever business may be laid before them. Voting by proxy is not permitted at these meetings, of the proceedings at which no register has been kept. The surgeon is not a governor, nor is he allowed to have any material participation in the general management.

General Management.

A certain number of the subscribers have been appointed to act as a managing committee, but as they have never acted, the body can be said to exist only in name. There is no board of superintendence, nor any visiting governors.

Managing Committee.

There are two non-medical officers, viz., the secretary and the treasurer. Both these gentlemen were elected a considerable time back, and have continued to render their services without remuneration, and without any renewal of their appointment. The latter officer does not give any security, but he presents his accounts at the termination of each year both to the subscribers and to the members of the grand jury. The two gentlemen were selected by open voting, and without any reference to their religious tenets.

Officers not medical.

There are not any fixed rules for the government of the establishment, or for the guidance of its officers. In this particular there is much that requires alteration and amendment, and there can be little doubt that much injury has arisen from the want of a uniform system of management.

Rules.

Once every year a report relating to the amount and nature of the relief afforded by the dispensary is prepared for the governors and submitted to the grand jury. The witnesses coincide in describing the benefits which might be expected from the formation of a permanent board of health in this district. The neighbourhood contains many individuals among the gentry, clergy and middling class of farmers, who would be found willing, and, at the same time, qualified to take a part in any investigation into the wants and condition of the poor.

Expenditure.

The income of the dispensary is derived partly from annual subscriptions and partly from presentments, passed by the grand jury. The amount received under the former head was in—

1831	27	6	—
1832	32	11	—
1833	36	10	—

No contributions were obtained from the poorer classes, and a very considerable proportion of the whole was given by one or two individuals, on the continuance of whose bounty the existence of the charity mainly depends. As there is no fixed property of any kind, it is evident that a support of this nature is extremely precarious.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain at all times in his hands.

The chief items of expenditure are salary, medicine and rent. The expenses during each of the last three years were as follows :—

1831	67	9	7
1832	63	15	8
1833	71	11	11

The payment of bills is intrusted to the discretion of the treasurer.

Tralee Dispensary.

Of this dispensary but little need be said, it being evident from the present system, or rather want of system, that it cannot effect any really useful purposes.

It is held in a dirty back street in a house, two stories high, and very much out of repair; the shabby and dilapidated appearance of which bespoke forcibly the tottering condition of the institution.

The prescribing-room is above stairs, the dispensary-room on the ground-floor, and the patients' waiting-room is the entrance passage. The pharmacy is allowed to be dirty, and slovenly kept; the stock of medicines scanty, ill assorted, and of the commonest kind only. The chief commodity is a large tub of salts, which is set up conspicuously facing the entrance. For the house (bad as it is) the rent of 12*l.* per annum is paid.

The physicians of the town, about six in number, undertake to attend in rotation on two fixed days during the week. They receive no salary. The only salaried officer is the apothecary, who is paid at the rate of from 15*l.* to 20*l.* a year.

Midwifery cases are not attended to, nor are patients visited at their own dwellings.

The very limited—the very questionable use of this dispensary is certainly to be ascribed to the low state of its funds, which do not allow of compensating the medical attendants, and putting the institution on an efficient footing.

The subscriptions amount to a few pounds yearly. But it is not to the support of the dispensary alone; it should be remarked, that the local gentry are averse to contributing.

There is not a single annual subscription for either the county infirmary or for the fever hospital. The whole expense is defrayed by the county, which is heavily taxed for the maintenance of these institutions, although the benefits which they confer cannot be participated in by those who live at any great distance from them. This must be especially the case in a country intersected by mountainous ridges, which render intercourse to any extent quite impracticable.

According to returns the whole of the funds for the last three years amounted to 245*l.* 15*s.* being raised half by subscription and half by grand jury presentment.

By the account which we have received from the treasurer, the expenditure for the last three years was 187*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*, leaving a difference of 58*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* for fuel, &c., and keeping the dispensary in a proper state and order, which has not been done. There being no committee, whatever blame may be due for such neglect must rest with the treasurer, chiefly if not exclusively, as to one to whom the entire management of the charity is given.

Extent of Country.

THE Valentia dispensary is intended solely for the island of that name, of which the point most remote from the institution is about six miles distant. The population of the island amounts to between 2,000 and 3,000 souls. There is no other medical charity on it; but, on the mainland, at Cahirciveen, about four miles off, there is a dispensary. The establishment at Valentia is considered to be quite sufficient for the wants of the district which is attached to it, at least so far as external relief. There is no hospital accommodation connected with it; and though no very great evil has hitherto resulted from the defect, yet, as cases are of continual occurrence, which cannot be properly treated otherwise than by being under the constant inspection of the medical attendant, it is thought by the witnesses, that unquestionable benefit would arise from the formation of a small local infirmary fitted up for the the reception of patients labouring under fever, and also containing a few beds for the treatment of accidents and other surgical cases.

A small room attached to the court-house is hired at an annual rent of 3*l.* for the purposes of the dispensary. It is well placed, convenient, and neatly kept. It answers its design sufficiently well, except that it has neither outbuilding nor any provision for administering baths.

The medical attendant, about 33 years of age, is a master of arts and a bachelor of medicine in the university of Dublin, and had been an apprentice to a surgeon residing in that city. On the occurrence of a vacancy in the month of December last, he was elected without opposition to his present situation on the recommendation of the treasurer. Previous to that period he had been in the habit of acting for the surgeon of the Roscommon Infirmary. He discharges the duties of physician, surgeon and apothecary, and holds no other appointment. He is permitted to engage in practice on his own account, and having no apprentice or assistant, it forms part of his duties to dispense medicine to the poor in person. He is required to give attendance at the dispensary every day until 12 o'clock, and to prescribe for all the patients who make application before that hour. On one occasion during his absence in London, he obtained the sanction of the committee to the performance of his duties by an approved substitute. But from the circumstance that his predecessor was dismissed solely for neglect of duty, it is very clear that no prolonged irregularity or want of attention would be suffered to take place. It is further stated, that the poor have it at all times in their power to obtain redress for any harshness manifested towards them, by laying their complaints before one of the subscribers. The medical officer was not retained long after he had ceased to possess the general confidence and good will of the people.

A salary of 70*l.* per annum is paid to the physician, without any allowance for a residence or towards the expense of a horse. By the late Grand Jury Act, all presentments on account of dispensaries must have been approved of at a special sessions before they can receive the final sanction of the grand jury. In this manner the last named body are fully adequate to the preventing any improper expenditure in the payment of medical attendants. If they suspect any collusion between the subscribers and the surgeon of a dispensary for the purpose of obtaining more money from the county than is justified by the amount of bonâ fide subscriptions, they at once check it, either by altogether withholding their fiat from the presentment, or else by curtailing it to its just proportions. The witnesses conceive that, on these points, there exists a very sufficient and watchful control.

The election of the medical attendant resides with the subscribers of one guinea yearly and upwards. Appointments are made without any reference to, or interference on the part of the grand jury. When the last vacancy took place, under the circumstances already adverted to, public notice by advertisement was not given of the intention to fill it up. It was considered that enough of publicity was secured by the several gentlemen who mentioned the matter in large towns. Candidates were, without limitation as to age, required to bring forward testimonials of having obtained a regular degree, and on the day of election three gentlemen presented themselves to the subscribers. No death has ever taken place among the medical gentlemen attached to the charity, and there are not any regulations with respect to the allowance of superannuation or retiring pensions. It is stated by the witnesses that, were it not for the emoluments derived from the dispensary, the poor of the Island of Valentia would, in all probability, be left wholly without medical assistance; the number of persons residing in the immediate neighbourhood who are in circumstances to pay for professional attendance is very small, and could never support a medical man, independent of a public salary.

The room in which medicines are dispensed is kept in a clean and orderly manner. The medicines were found to be of a good quality, and every thing usually found requisite in practice had been provided, with the exception of quinine and morphia. It was stated that the drugs were supplied by a London establishment at an average cost during each of the last three years of about 18*l.* However, during the year that just elapsed the cost did not exceed 10*l.*, and this very considerable saving was attributed by the witnesses to the judicious economy of the medical attendant, under whose care the entire stock is placed, and is kept carefully locked up. In consequence of the inconvenience experienced in obtaining medicine from the main land, the committee have adopted a regulation, whereby the physician is allowed to sell medicine to the inhabitants of the island on which there is not an apothecary's shop. He writes his prescription, and the preparation is sold at the ordinary price, the money being always placed to the credit of the institution. There are not any surgical instruments, and it is stated that leeches are never made use of in the practice of the dispensary. Up to the present time measures have not been adopted for the diffusion of vaccination, and the medical attendant has been at liberty to inoculate with the matter of small-pox. This, however, he has never done, and the disease has not occurred in the island since the period of his appointment. Recently it has been in contemplation to afford to the poor the means of having their children gratuitously vaccinated, and it is stated that the people in general are disposed to place much confidence in the practice, as preventive of small-pox. The opinion of the medical attendant is very strongly in favour of its efficacy.

A very excellent and comprehensive register of patients relieved has been kept by the physician; but owing to the recent date of his appointment, the Assistant Commissioners were not able to procure any details of the number of persons who had availed themselves of the aid of the charity during the years immediately previous to their inspection. They were, however, informed, that no instance had occurred of a person unable to pay for aid being refused it, and it was stated that in general, the number of applicants for attendance at their own dwellings, was far greater during the winter months than during the summer. No operation of any importance had taken place for some time.

Neither advice nor medicine is granted in connexion with the dispensary, except to those who have provided themselves with the recommendation of a governor or subscriber. This condition does not, however, throw any practical difficulty in the way of obtaining relief, as there is no limit to the number of recommendatory orders which may be issued by each subscriber, in his own name. It is said that, should even a poor person be not known to or not liked by the subscribers, still there is no danger of his being excluded from the benefits of the county subscription. Some of the poorer subscribers, those, for instance, who contribute only 10s. a year, are entitled to demand gratuitous relief, but with this exception, there are much fewer instances of undue participation in the benefits of the institution than have been met with in other places. The treasurer denies that any such cases are to be found, and adds that a rule exists which gives the medical officer authority to refuse his services to any one who pays for his land a higher rent than 10 l. per annum.

Extern patients are received at the dispensary on every day in the week, but the physician is also obliged to visit, at their homes, those persons who may be confined by sickness, and when urgent cases require additional attention he may be called upon to repeat his visits to the extent of two or three times a day, and even during the night; the physician states that "he considers daily attendance as being absolutely necessary for the proper treatment of the generality of acute affections;" and he adds, that "he looks upon an occasional visit as being either of no use, or only useful in maladies which have assumed a chronic character. Accidents also are required to be immediately attended to, and provision has been made of splints and bandages for their effectual treatment. No prescription book is kept, and no other prescriptions are compounded than those written by the attending physician. That gentleman has not paid any attention to the practice of midwifery, but, nevertheless, he is accustomed, as far as lies within his power, to give assistance to the poor during their confinement. In general, they are attended by midwives, who are represented as of little or no skill. They are too frequently the cause of serious injury both to mother and child.

The dispensary supplies the sick with nothing beyond advice and medicine. There is not in the neighbourhood any charitable institution whence they can obtain either clothing or food.

Every subscriber of a guinea is entitled to take a part in the proceedings of the committee, which was appointed at the commencement of the establishment. This body has, however, never performed any duties, although it is instructed to assemble for the despatch of business at least once in every month. There are not any visiting governors, but the affairs of the charity seem to be carried on by the treasurer and another gentleman, whose workmen are all provided with professional assistance, in virtue of a large subscription which is paid in the name of the Knight of Kerry.

The treasurer, who is the only non-medical officer, has acted without remuneration for his services, and without any renewal of his appointment, since the origin of the charity, when he was selected by the open votes of the subscribers, and without reference to his religious persuasion; he has never been called upon to enter into any security for the sums intrusted to him, but he is obliged to present his accounts at the termination of each year to the subscribers. In reply to the question "Whether any instance had occurred of an officer being removed from his situation?" it was replied by the witnesses, that the only case of the kind alluded to, was that of the last medical attendant, who, as has been already mentioned, was deprived of his appointment for neglect of duty.

There are not any attendants.

A report is annually laid before the grand jury, which details the general affairs of the charity. It has not been in any instance printed, and the Assistant Commissioners failed in procuring a copy of it. In consequence of the number of intelligent individuals which the Valentia district contains, it is conceived by the witnesses that a permanent board of health could with great advantage be formed, for the purpose of investigating the real condition and the wants of the poorer classes of the inhabitants. It is stated that many persons possessing all the requisite qualifications for the task would willingly co-operate in its execution.

The institution does not possess any permanent source of income. Annual subscriptions and a grant from the grand jury, proportioned to their gross amount, constitute its entire support. Of the former portion of the income, the greater part, viz. 33 l. per annum, is contributed by one gentleman, and on the continuance of his donation, the existence of the charity may be said to depend. No assistance is any longer received from the poorer classes, but there are three names on the list of subscribers, who for the sum of 10s. 6 d. a year are permitted to obtain, without any further charge, whatever quantity of medicine they may chance to stand in need of. The following table will show the entire receipts, from both sources, during each of the last three years:—

It will be perceived that the allowance from the county was diminished in the last year.

The

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands. The principal demands on the funds of the charity are for the salary of the medical attendant, for medicines, and for the rent of the dispensary accommodation in the court-house. This latter item is 3*l.* per annum. The entire expenditure for each of the under-mentioned years was—

	1831	1832	1833
£.	77	113	79

The examination of the bills that become due is intrusted to the treasurer, through whose hands all accounts, all orders for medicine, &c. pass. The accounts are closed and balanced once a year, and copies are submitted to the inspection of the grand jury.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Captain BLOIS, R. N.—Captain BOYD.—Mr. M'CURDY.—Rev. Mr. HILL, Rector of Culfertrin.—Mr. KEENAN.—ALEXANDER MILLAR, esq.—MILLER, esq., late treasurer.—ALEXANDER M'NEIL, esq.—GEORGE SAMSON, esq.—Rev. Mr. WALSH, P. P.

This dispensary is intended for the two parishes of Ramoin and Culfertrin, containing a population of upwards of 9,000. There is no medical institution within six miles. The most distant point in the district is 10 miles, and it is considered that the medical institutions in the county are well placed with reference to population, but there are still populous districts in it destitute of medical charities. The medical attendant is expected to visit the poor at their own homes, but the subscribers would scarcely call upon the medical attendant to go further than three or four miles from Ballycastle, within which distance nearly the whole of the population is situated.

The Rev. Mr. Walsh, P. P., Culfertrin, states that his parish contains 1,200 families, and that the medical charity nearest to the centre is five miles distant; he is of opinion that sick poor should not be obliged to walk more than four Irish miles to seek medical assistance. It is very desirable that there should be attached to dispensaries a building capable of affording intern accommodation to a few bad cases of fever and accidents, but the gentlemen present at the examination apprehend that such an institution would lead to great expense.

This dispensary is well situated and consists of two rooms, that at the rear being used for stores, &c. and that in the front for the medicines, part of the latter being boarded off to form a waiting room. The house is held on a lease for seven years, four of which are unexpired. The opinion entertained here is, that as long as dispensaries depend entirely on subscriptions it is most desirable that the building should be held at lease.

The sole medical officer of the institution is a graduate in medicine of Edinburgh and a surgeon of Glasgow, who also possesses a midwifery certificate from the latter place. He resides in the town, was formerly a surgeon in the navy, and subsequently medical officer to the Loughgill dispensary, previous to his appointment to this charity as general medical attendant; he now has no other appointment, but is allowed private practice. There exist no rules relative to providing a substitute in case of his illness or temporary absence. The days of attendance on the part of the medical officer at the dispensary are Tuesdays and Fridays from 10 till 1 o'clock, and his duty is never done by proxy. There is not always some person at the dispensary to afford immediate relief in cases of accident. The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant in person.

The medical attendant's salary is 40*l.* per annum, paid from the general funds of the institution, without any other allowances whatever. If the committee or subscribers choose to authorize salaries much higher than are requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, the power rests with the grand jury to refuse or diminish the grant, and thus that body becomes the guarantee that a man shall not combine with a few friends to raise an institution for the sake of a medical appointment.

The medical officers are elected by those who subscribe annually one guinea or upwards. When a vacancy occurs it is usual to advertise, but on the occasion of the last election this was not done, because the present medical officer having been a candidate at a former election, when his testimonials were inspected, he was unanimously elected. There is not any limitation as to the age of the officers either in appointing or displacing them, nor is any notice of the appointment, with age and certificate of qualification, &c., sent to the grand jury. The neighbourhood is capable of supporting medical men, independently of the dispensary emolument, and there are resident practitioners in Ballycastle. There are no regulations as to superannuations and resignations of medical officers, nor any retiring allowances. Dr. Walsh, formerly medical officer to this dispensary, died in 1831 from fever caught attending to his duty. There has not been any complaint by the poor of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical officer, but there can be no doubt but that the poor would complain to the subscribers if cause existed.

The room where the medicines are kept is neatly arranged, and the medicines appear to be in sufficient quantity and of good quality; and the more delicate medicines are also provided. These are procured from Mr. M'Adam, a druggist, at Belfast. The arrangement

Neither medicines or medical articles belonging to the institution are sold. The dispensary does not possess any apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c. nor surgical instruments of any kind. No medicines but those belonging to the charity are kept at the dispensary. Leeches would, in cases of necessity, be furnished to the patients. There does not exist any rule by which the medical officer is bound to give vaccine matter gratis, nor with respect to his inoculating with small-pox; but the medical officer declared that he never did and never would inoculate with small-pox, unless at the particular request of a patient.

Patients' Registration.

A register is kept, distinguishing the date, name, age, residence, recommendation and disease of each patient; and, as near as possible, the terminations. This register is kept by the medical attendant, and a report of numbers attended is sent to the grand jury; but this register does not include those refused relief. In the year ending June 30, 1833, the number attended was 346; and in the following eleven months, up to May 31, 1834, 258. The rules do not oblige the medical attendant to attend midwifery cases; but if a subscriber were to inform the medical attendant that the midwife had found a dangerous or difficult case, he would attend.

Who entitled to Relief.

Those only who have tickets are entitled to relief, and domestic servants never have tickets given them. Persons who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance, have attempted to partake of the benefits of the charity; but the ticket system guards against such an abuse. It is not known here, that a contract has been made with individuals for the purpose of swelling a subscription list, and thus obtaining large grants from the county; but some of the gentlemen present have heard of its being attempted elsewhere. All applicants must have a ticket to entitle them to be attended, but one signature to each ticket is sufficient. Every 40s. subscriber has the privilege of sixty recommendations, and a subscriber of a guinea forty. This plan enables all who ought to receive relief to have tickets; i. e. the subscribers have so many tickets to give away, that the poor can always get one.

Extern Patients.

In case an accident should occur, such as a fractured limb, the institution does not possess the means (as splints, bandages, &c.) of rendering immediate assistance. No one unattached to the dispensary is authorized to have his prescriptions made up there. The midwives in the district are most unskilful, and the medical attendant has known accidents occur from their ignorance. No prescriptions are written. The confidence of the poor in vaccination is well established.

Nourishment.

No extras, such as wine, &c. are furnished to the poor; nor is there any charity in which an order can be given to the sick poor for food, fuel or clothing.

Intern Patients.

There are no intern patients. Whenever lunatic cases occur, they are sent to the Belfast Lunatic Asylum, when admittance can be obtained; but at the date of this examination a patient could not be admitted, for two reasons: first, the impossibility of complying with the terms of admission; and secondly, that there was no room. Many were on the books already waiting for admission.

General Management.

The general management rests with subscribers. The medical officer is not among the governors, nor has the institution been under his management; neither is there any person ex officio in the principal direction. There are no fixed meetings, but an annual meeting is held, at which the treasurer calls for subscriptions, and the accounts are passed. Minutes are kept of the proceedings. Although the dispensary was in the act of transition from one medical man to another, the Assistant Commissioners obtained sufficient evidence to show that this charity has been fairly and honourably administered and managed.

Managing Committee.

There is no committee of management.

Officers not medical.

The only officer not medical is the treasurer. There are no bye-laws for regulating the appointment of officers. Particular religious belief does not exclude any one from being an officer, nor has a sudden accession of governors or governesses occurred immediately previous to the election of any officers.

Reports.

Written reports are made annually to the governors, but not printed. The neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, provided it hereafter be thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

Funds and Accounts. Receipts.

The Rev. Mr. McLaughlin, P. P. at Loughgill stated, that he thought his neighbourhood possessed a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to examine more minutely into the wants of the poor, and he judged so from the intelligence of the persons forming a committee connected with his own chapel.

A list of subscribers for the year 1834 was produced, from which it appeared that the charity does not mainly depend on any one particular subscriber. No stipulation has been entered into here in favour of a subscriber, or any part of his family, that he might receive medicine or medical advice gratuitously. The institution does not possess any capital stock in houses, lands, &c. from which an annual income is derived.

Collection and Custody.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain until wanted; and sums of money are not left in the hands of salaried officers or servants of the hospital.

Medical Officers.

THIS dispensary is intended for the relief of all who apply for its aid. None are by rule visited at their own houses. There have not been any persons refused medical relief for want of accommodation, but the medical attendant thinks there is a want of a general hospital in Belfast.

The dispensary is held in a house three stories high, with two windows to the front; the medicines are kept in the front room above stairs, and the stairs, back room and kitchen are used as waiting rooms for the patients. Two rooms were let, and the remainder of the house is occupied by a person who resides on the premises rent free, for taking care of the house; the situation is in a close narrow street, in a densely populated part of the town, without any garden attached. The house is held by the year, but it was thought that it would be advantageous if the dispensary buildings belonged to the charity.

The senior medical officer, aged 37 years, is a graduate in medicine of Edinburgh, and licentiate of the College of Surgeons, Dublin. He does not reside at the institution, but in the town. He was the original founder of the institution in 1827. Previously to his appointment to the dispensary he had been a practitioner in the town, and is still allowed private practice. He is also consulting physician to the fever hospital, and general medical attendant. There is no printed rule as to illness or temporary absence of the medical attendant, but in case of such occurring, the medical attendant has a colleague. He was educated for midwifery at the Lying-in Hospital, Dublin. His duty is never done by proxy.

There is a second medical officer, and except on Sundays, attendance is given daily from 10 till 12 o'clock, or longer if necessary. In cases of accident there is not any student or pupil, or other person on the spot to afford immediate relief. The medicines are dispensed by the medical officers in attendance.

No medical officer is paid any thing or receives any perquisite or allowance, at least the principal physician does not charge any in his accounts, although he and his colleague seceded from the fever hospital because that institution gave no remuneration; yet they now attend gratuitously to the almost incredible number of 7,743 persons annually.

Election.

Medical officers are elected by the subscribers of one guinea and upwards. One of the resolutions passed at an annual meeting, at which very few were present, was, that the present medical officers should be appointed for life. No vacancy has yet occurred. There is no rule as to testimonials being produced by medical officers, nor any limitation as to age, either in appointing or displacing them. No notice of appointment or certificate is ever sent to

* Although he received the letter of the Assistant Commissioners some days previous, the medical attendant did not inform any of the governors of the intended examination.

to the grand jury. There are individuals residing in the immediate neighbourhood capable of paying for advice, sufficient in number to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument. Superannuations or retiring allowances are never granted to the medical officers, nor has there been any mortality among them.

The room in which the medicines are kept is a convenient one, above stairs, provided with drawers, shelves, bottles, &c., such as are proper, and all appeared to be neatly and carefully arranged. There is a good supply of the more delicate and expensive medicines, such as quinine, morphia, &c. The medicines are bought from Mr. M'Adam and from Mr. Walkington, and some of the more delicate from Mr. Grattan, all in Belfast, and cost for the year

The character of the medical officers forms the sole guarantee that they do not substitute medicines of an inferior quality, and thus becomes gainers in the difference of price. The medicines are paid for, by the chief medical officer. The dispensary-shop is locked up when the medical attendant is absent, and he keeps the key. Neither medicines or any other article belonging to the institution are ever sold; and those medicine which belong to the dispensary are alone kept there. The institution does not possess any apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c.; and the only surgical instruments are a case adapted for minor operations, dislocation pullies, catheters and stomach pumps; and these are not sufficient for the objects of the charity, so that occasionally the medical attendants are obliged to use their own instruments. Leeches are sometimes applied at the dispensary, but never given out. There is no rule as to giving vaccine matter gratis. Vaccination was at one time performed gratis, but the children were not brought back, and the medical gentlemen then gave it up. The medical attendants, however, never do and never would inoculate with small-pox.

Patients' Registration.

An accurate register is kept, which distinguishes the name, age, residence and disease of each patient. The register is made by the medical attendant at the time the patient attends. Terminations of the diseases are not given, as that is found impossible; but applicants are never refused relief. Sixty-six patients applied on the day of this examination, and 107 on the previous day. Of the 66, there were 26 new cases. Of the 107, there were 43 such. No capital operations have been performed within the last three years, and there have not been any midwifery cases attended during that period.

Who entitled to Relief.

All persons who are too poor to buy their own physic, &c. are entitled to relief, and the domestic servants of subscribers are attended. Attempts have been made to participate in the benefits of the charity, by persons who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance; but there is no contract with any of the subscribers as to giving them gratuitous assistance. All paupers applying are attended to, and tickets for admission of patients are not required.

Extern Patients.

All patients are seen at the institution, but none professedly visited at their own homes; but a few are occasionally visited in very particular cases. In case of sudden accident, the institution possesses dislocation pullies, and splints and bandages would be procured in case of need. A practitioner unconnected with the charity cannot have medicines made up at the institution. Lying-in cases are not attended from the institution, but the apothecaries and some general practitioners of the neighbourhood attend them at so low a price, that midwives are not much employed. Vaccination is generally found efficacious, and small-pox has not been frequent of late. The poor have confidence in vaccination.

Nourishment.

Wine or any other extras are not given to the sick from the funds of the charity; but there are charitable institutions in the neighbourhood upon which the medical men can give an order to the sick poor for clothing, &c. viz.: The Destitute Sick Society, and the Ladies' Clothing Society.

Intern Patients.

The institution does not receive intern patients. When lunatic cases occur, they are sent to the Belfast Lunatic Asylum.

General Management.

The general management nominally rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards; but the institution has been essentially under the management of the medical attendants. The committee meet once a year, and record a few resolutions pro formâ. Four such meetings are recorded since 1831, at all of which the same president presided, and at one of which the present medical attendants were elected for life. The physician finds great difficulty in getting an attendance. There are only fourteen subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and no rules, either printed or written, exist.

Officers not medical.

All officers of every description are appointed by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and the senior medical officer is the treasurer. This the Assistant Commissioners consider most objectionable, as he is the managing physician, and the person who got up the dispensary. Several of the subscribers undertake to collect the subscriptions. There has not been any instance of an officer being suspended or removed.

Attendants.

There is a person who has the care of the house, but who receives no salary beyond a small gratuity of 5 s. or 10 s.

Stores.

The institution does not possess stores of any kind.

Rules.

No fixed rules exist for the governance of this institution.

Reports.

Reports for the last three years are made to the subscribers at large, and are printed.

1832	52	6	6
1833	46	5	6

The county grants for the same years were of the same amount. The charity depends entirely on subscriptions, but not on the bounty of any one individual, and its existence is tolerably secure. No stipulations are known, such as that a subscriber is to receive medicine and medical advice gratis. The senior medical officer keeps all the accounts himself. The institution has no capital stock in houses, lands, &c. from which an annual income is derived.

The funds are collected by the subscribers (as above stated), and all subscriptions lie with the treasurer until wanted. The treasurer gives no security, nor was he required to do so. Some of these subscriptions are as low as 2s. 6d.

The expenditure was for the year—

1832	107	8	6
1833	102	3	1

The accounts are made out by the senior medical attendant and sent to the grand jury once a year; but they are not kept in such a manner as to present at once a clear statement of the items; however, the medical attendant makes affidavit annually to their correctness.

There are no students attached to the institution, or regulations respecting such, nor lectures given; but the medical attendants have apprentices, and some other young men attend the practice occasionally, and for this attendance no fee is required.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Dr. ANDERSON, treasurer.—Rev. JAMES ALEXANDER; and Rev. HUGH HAMALL, presbyterian clergymen; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.*

A DEFINITE answer as to the amount of population comprised in this dispensary district, or the distance it is intended to include, could not be obtained. The most distant points are two miles from the town of Portrush to the west, and three miles towards the south-east: although there is no medical institution within six miles of the Bushwood dispensary it is not considered that they are deficient in number in this neighbourhood. No persons are refused medical relief who are fit objects, but there is a great want of intern accommodation.

The dispensary is held in the house of the medical attendant, which is a very inconvenient place, though in the principal street.

The sole medical officer of the dispensary is about forty years of age, a member of the College of Surgeons at Glasgow, from which place he likewise obtained a midwifery certificate. He resides at the institution (or in other words, the medicines are kept in a small dark room in his own house); he was appointed at the foundation of the charity in 1830, as general medical attendant, having been previously a practising apothecary, &c. in the town; he has no other appointment, but is allowed to pursue his private practice. There is no bye-law as to providing a substitute in case of the illness or temporary absence of the medical attendant. The days of his attendance at the dispensary are, Mondays and Thursdays from eleven till three o'clock; and his duty is not done by proxy. He has no assistant; and the medicines are dispensed by himself. Sir Francis M'Naughten, proprietor of the town, who resides in the immediate vicinity, speaks in the highest terms of the integrity, humanity and skill of the surgeon, as do all the gentlemen of the neighbourhood.

The medical attendant receives 20*l.* per annum, but has no other allowance of any sort for board or lodging, &c. If the committee or subscribers choose to authorize salaries, allowances or perquisites much higher than are requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, the power of control rests with the grand jury, who can diminish or refuse the county grant. In this case the salary is very small; the cost of medicines, however, seems rather high.

No election has occurred since the establishment of the institution. There is only one gentleman in the town eligible to act as medical attendant to the dispensary. In case the medical officer or officers should be harsh to or neglect the patients, the poor can complain to a subscriber, and most of them are aware of the fact.

The room in which the medicines are kept is a small, dark back room, behind the shop in the medical attendant's own house, and is not kept in a proper manner, but much the contrary contrary. The medicines are ordered and paid for by the medical attendant, who gives the bill and the receipt to the secretary and treasurer. No medicines or medical articles belonging to the institution are ever sold to persons applying as patients, or to other persons. There are not any surgical instruments belonging to the institution. Leeches have, on some rare occasions, been applied. The medical officer is bound by a bye-law to vaccinate gratis. He does not inoculate with the small-pox. Vaccination is found very efficacious, and the medical attendant stated, that he has not seen above five or six cases of small-pox many years. The confidence of the poor in vaccination is therefore fully established.

A register of patients is kept, but not with sufficient accuracy to form the basis of any calculation. But it cannot be expected that the medical officer could for a salary of 20*l.* a year devote much of his time to the registration of patients, especially as the district is very poor, wild and extensive.

All persons applying for relief ought to have a ticket, but the medical officer is in the habit of seeing a whole family on one ticket. Servants of subscribers may have tickets; and the abuse of persons participating in the benefits of the charity who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance does exist to a slight extent; but attendance is not given gratuitously to any of the subscribers; nor has any such abuse been known as a contract having been made with individuals for the purpose of swelling a subscription list, and thus obtaining large grants from the county. The signature of one subscriber is sufficient to each ticket, and the number of tickets is unlimited.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, but in case an accident should occur, such as a fractured limb, the institution does not possess the means (splints, bandages, &c.) of rendering immediate assistance; no practitioner is authorized to have his prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Difficult lying-in cases are attended; but the midwives ordinarily employed are very unskilful persons, and accidents are known to occur in consequence of their ignorance. At this dispensary there are no prescriptions kept.

Extras such as wine, &c., are never given to the sick from the funds of the charity, nor is there any charitable institution in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given to the sick poor for food, clothing, or fuel.

There is no accommodation for intern patients. When lunatic cases occur they are sent to the Belfast asylum, within the district of which, this dispensary is situated.

The general management is vested in the annual subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and the medical officer is not concerned therein, nor has the institution been in fact under his management. There are no fixed meetings, and it is uncertain whether there has been a meeting in the last two years; even when meetings do take place no minutes are kept. There was no meeting to pass the accounts for the last two years.

There was a committee at the establishment of the institution in 1830, but since that period they have not met. Those who should form the active committee of this little charity evince a great want of zeal. The last county grant had not been received owing to neglect.

The only officer not medical is the secretary and treasurer, an old gentleman upwards of 80 years of age. There are no bye-laws for regulating the appointment of officers.

A report of the number of cases treated at this dispensary is made out to send to the grand jury. It was stated that the neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor if it hereafter be thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The smallest subscription is 2*s.* 6*d.*, the largest is 1*l.* 1*s.* The county have always given a sum equal to the subscriptions, but owing to some irregularity the last county presentment was refused. The charity does not depend on the bounty of any one individual, but the withdrawal of one particular family from its support would be a serious loss, and the existence of the charity cannot therefore be considered as secure. No stipulations are known here to the effect that the subscriber or any part of his family is to receive medicine or medical advice gratuitously. The charity has no capital stock or property, from which an annual income is derived.

Medical and surgical Instruction.

The money has been collected by a paid servant who received 1*l.* for so doing.

The principal expense is for medicine and salary of medical attendant. The cost of medicine seems rather large, being for the year 1833-34, 40*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, and of that expense the single item of oil of peppermint amounted to 4*l.* 13*s.* 1½*d.*

The treasurer manages the accounts. Copies of the accounts are sent to the grand jury. A copy of the accounts for the last three years could not be procured.

There is neither medical or surgical instruction.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Rev. HENRY CARTER, Curate of the parish.—Rev. JOHN PAINT, Covenanter; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.*

THIS dispensary is intended for the relief of the sick poor of the town and county of the town of Carrickfergus, containing a population of nearly 10,000, and the extent of district to which the medical attendant is liable to be called on to attend is four or five miles. The only medical institution in the vicinity is situated at the White house, at a distance of five miles. This dispensary is not adequate to the wants even of the town, as the funds are low and decreasing, notwithstanding which the medical attendant never refuses aid to any applicant, and is in the habit of giving his own medicines on those days on which the dispensary is not open. The Rev. Mr. Carter is of opinion, that a medical man with an adequate salary should be placed among a poor population, and should be bound to attend the sick poor at their own houses. According to the regulations of this dispensary the medical attendant is not obliged to visit the sick poor, although he occasionally does so; yet the subscribers feel they cannot require it for so small a salary as he receives. This is a circumstance deserving of notice in the management of this charity.

The room appropriated for the dispensary is a small dark shop situated in the principal street in the centre of the population; there is no waiting room attached; a few old drawers, shelves and bottles constitute the furniture of the charity. The shop is rented at will for 4*l.* per annum, and the owner is now threatening to take it from the institution. It is highly desirable that a building should belong exclusively to the charity, and that it should be capable of receiving 10 or 12 patients in case of fever or accidents.

The principal medical officer is a physician, about 51 years of age, who graduated at Glasgow, but has not received a midwifery diploma; he resides about a quarter of a mile from this dispensary, and attends from 11 to 2 o'clock on Tuesdays and Fridays. Besides attending to this charity he is also surgeon and agent for the sick and wounded seamen of the navy, a situation worth 30*l.* a year; he likewise attends on the military, for which service he receives about 20*l.* per annum; he is also allowed private practice. The medicines are dispensed by the physician and by his son, who is not yet a graduate but who is always on the spot in case of his father's absence, although there is no bye-law having reference to the appointment of a substitute during the absence of the medical attendant.

The physician is the only medical officer paid by the institution, he receives 21*l.* a year from the general fund, without any other allowance whatsoever.

The physician was well known in the town, and at the establishment of the institution was nominated and requested to take charge of it; no other candidates were put in nomination, nor any notice sent to the grand jury. The neighbourhood is sufficient to support medical men independently of the dispensary, and there are four or five medical men residing in the town. At the formation of this dispensary great difficulty was experienced in obtaining a grant from the grand jury, and the committee employed a barrister to present their petition to the judge, who ordered the grand jury to admit the presentment. In the minutes of the dispensary is a statement, dated March 17th 1832, purporting to be the opinion of judges Joy and Doherty; it is to this effect, that it is imperative on grand juries to present a sum equal to the sum subscribed. This statement is certainly contrary to what the Assistant Commissioners have known to be the practice of grand juries, and contrary to what they have been frequently given to understand to be the law; and if it be the true interpretation, there does not appear to exist at present any impediment to the establishment of extravagant dispensaries. In the evidence on many of the institutions of a similar description to this, it is stated that the grand juries can and do diminish or refuse a presentment.

The room in which the medicines were kept was by no means neat, the medicines were in very small quantities, and none of the more expensive and delicate sorts were to be met with: Calomel was in a bottle labelled Quinine; Pulvis Jalapæ in a large glass labelled Magnesia; most of the drawers were empty. When the medical attendant requires medicines he gives a list to the treasurer, who sends to Belfast for them and pays the bills. Medicines are not sold at the dispensary, and, except at the hours of his attendance, the shop is locked and the key kept by the medical attendant. No surgical apparatus of any kind belongs to the institution, nor are leeches used, owing to the deficiency of funds. There is no rule with regard to vaccination or inoculation, but the custom is to vaccinate gratuitously all who apply; the medical attendant has perfect confidence in vaccination, and in order to induce the public to entertain the same feeling, after vaccinating he inoculated his own children with small-pox, which produced no disease; the public confidence in vaccination is complete.

A register is kept of the date, name, age, residence, disease and termination of disease of each patient, it is kept by the medical attendant, but not sent to the grand jury. There were six new cases to-day at the dispensary.

All sick poor who apply are entitled to relief; and though the physician is not bound to attend the poor at their own dwellings, he does occasionally attend them; it is the same with lying-in cases, he occasionally attends though not obliged to do so. The servants of subscribers subscribers may be attended, but persons in circumstances not requiring gratuitous relief have not been known to seek it, at this dispensary. The number of tickets which each subscriber may give is unlimited, indeed no ticket is required, which circumstance operates injuriously on the funds of these charities, for as, under this plan, all are attended, any new subscriber would only give his money to the institution and not receive any privileges or increase the comforts of the poor.

All who apply at the dispensary are relieved, but the medical attendant is not obliged to visit them at their own houses. In cases of fracture or dangerous accidents the institution is destitute of the means of immediate relief, such as splints, bandages, &c. No prescription book is kept, nor is any practitioner entitled to have his prescriptions made up at the dispensary.

Neither wine or other extra is furnished to the sick from this charity, nor is there any other institution in the neighbourhood on which an order for such things can be given.

There are no intern patients; lunatics are sent to Belfast.

The principal management nominally rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, but the institution has really been left to the treasurer and the medical attendant, who, though not a governor ex officio, is one by subscription.

The committee consists of eight, who meet occasionally; they met the first year six times; the second year they met three or four times; but this year they have not met since the 1st of January. Minutes of these meetings are kept, but they are in the possession of the treasurer, who was at the period of this examination absent from the neighbourhood.

The treasurer collects the money, and keeps and passes all accounts, but gives no security.

There are no stores or articles of any kind belonging to the charity.

Reports are periodically made and printed.

The number of persons in the neighbourhood capable of taking charge of a more extended charity is quite ample, but the inclination is at least doubtful.

The subscription of this year (1834) amounts to only 17*l.* 3*s.*, and of this sum, two noblemen contribute 5*l.* each; so that the town and county of the town of Carrickfergus subscribe but 7*l.* towards the only charity for sick poor in the district, containing a population of 10,000 souls. This is owing partly to the manner in which the dispensary was got up, and in some degree to party feelings; unless some change take place, it is most likely the charity will not exist another year.

No medical students are attached, nor medical instruction of any kind given.

Persons who attended the Examination.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG.—Mr. M'CARTHY.—Hon. Colonel PAKENHAM, Langford-lodge; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

NEITHER the population nor extent of this district were given. The most distant point the medical attendant is liable to visit is four miles, and the only medical institution within six miles is the Antrim dispensary. The district is not considered too large for one person to attend to, but it is thought there is a deficiency in hospital accommodation, as the Lisburn infirmary is so far from the northern parts of the county as not to be of service there. The dispensaries are pretty well placed in the county; yet there is a district round Ballinderry, the inhabitants of which are too far from any medical establishment; Colonel Pakenham likewise thinks there should be two hospitals in the county. It is thought there should be attached to dispensaries suitable intern accommodation for cases of accidents or bad fever.

The dispensary is a good stone building, measuring 39 feet by 21, two stories high; the upper being divided into three rooms, sufficient to accommodate 10 patients. At present there are bedsteads and bedding for two, intended for fever or cholera patients; these wards were unoccupied, and there had been only one case of fever admitted. The situation is good and airy, with a sufficient supply of pure water, and a small garden to be used if required. The ground floor comprises a kitchen, with a room attached, and the shop where the medicines are dispensed. There are no baths. It is held under a lease for eight years, and is occupied at present by a family who take care of the premises. This house belongs to and was fitted up by Colonel Pakenham, who is also the chief support of the charity by his subscription and superintendence. If circumstances would permit, it would be better that the house was the property of the charity.

The sole medical officer, about 32 years of age, is a graduate in medicine and a member of the College of Surgeons at Edinburgh, and possesses a midwifery diploma; he resides at Crumlin, close by the dispensary. Previously to his appointment he practised in the town; he was appointed as general medical attendant at the foundation of the dispensary in 1833, and holds no other appointment, but is allowed private practice. In case of illness or absence he procures a substitute, chosen by himself. The days of attendance are Wednesdays and Saturdays, from 9 till 12 o'clock, and the duty is never done by proxy. Should the medical officer be irregular in attendance, the poor can complain to the subscribers, and are aware of the fact. In cases of accident, the medical attendant and his assistant can always be applied to. The medicines are dispensed by him and his assistant.

The medical officer is paid 50*l.* per annum from the general funds, without any allowance for a horse or conveyance, board or lodging. Should the committee or subscribers authorize salaries higher than are requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, the grand jury can limit, refuse or diminish the grant, which is the only control the county possesses.

possesses. An attempt was made at the last Lent Assizes at Carrickfergus, to obtain from the county a grant equivalent to a sum sworn to have been subscribed for the establishment of a dispensary near Broughshine. The grand jury, however, refused the grant altogether.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards; as yet, no vacancy has occurred. As the present medical attendant was known, testimonials were not required. There is not any limitation as to age either in appointing or displacing medical officers. At the last election there was no other candidate, and neither notice of the appointment, or certificates of qualifications, were sent to the grand jury. In this district there is only one medical man, eligible to the institution. The medical officers get no superannuation or retiring allowances, and there has not been any mortality among them here.

The room in which the medicines are kept is a small neat room, part of which serves for a waiting room. The more delicate and expensive medicines are not used, but the quality of all that are used is good, and the quantity sufficient; the medical officer orders the medicines of Mr. Walkington, chemist, of Belfast, and on his certifying to the treasurer that he has received them, they are paid for by him. The character of the medical man is the sole guarantee that inferior medicines shall not be introduced. The medical attendant has the medicines in his own care, as he locks the shop and keeps the key. Medicines belonging to the institution are never sold. There are not any surgical instruments, nor any apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c. belonging to the institution. The medicines for private practice are not kept at the dispensary. Leeches are supplied to the patients. The medical officer keeps the medicines of this dispensary in excellent order, and merits all the praise that can be bestowed.

There is an accurate register kept, which distinguishes the name of each patient whenever he comes, and the medicines furnished. Another register is kept, in which the patient's name is only entered once in the year. No persons under any circumstances are refused attendance. The number of patients on the books at the time of this examination was 23, of these two were new. There have not been any capital operations performed, nor any cases of midwifery attended from the institution since its establishment. The Assistant Commissioners cannot avoid observing that the prescriptionary department and register are most accurately kept, and not in the vague manner of many other charities.

All persons who can procure tickets are entitled to relief, and by a bye-law the medical attendant of the institution is allowed to afford assistance to any one at his discretion. Domestic servants may also have tickets. No attempt has been made by any to participate in the benefits of the charity whose circumstances do not require gratuitous assistance. Nor has it ever been known here that a contract has been made with individuals for the purpose of swelling a subscription list and obtaining large grants from the county. By rule, tickets of admission are necessary to enable applicants to avail themselves of the benefits afforded by this charity; one signature to such ticket is sufficient, but each subscriber is limited in the number which he can issue.

Extern patients are seen at the institution and attended at their homes. In case an accident should occur, such as a fractured limb, the institution does not possess the means (as splints, bandages, &c.) of rendering immediate assistance. The medical attendant does not refuse to make up a prescription for a poor person, though it may be written by a person quite unknown to, or unconnected with the institution, but there is no law on the subject. In lying-in cases, midwives generally attend the poor, but these women are not skilful, and accidents have been known to occur. The medicines entered in the prescription book are such as are usual. Vaccination is, by the rules, performed gratis to all who apply, and the medical officer has a good opinion of it, as preventive of the small-pox, and the confidence of the poor in its results is well established; there is no rule relating to inoculating with small-pox virus, but the medical attendant does not, and would not have recourse to it.

No wine or other extras are afforded from the resources of this institution, nor is there any charity established in this neighbourhood for distributing food, clothing or fuel on which an order can be given.

There is intern accommodation at the institution, and patients can be received in case fever or cholera should occur in the district.

The general management rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards; the medical officer is not a governor, nor has he been allowed any material participation in the management of the affairs of the dispensary, and there is no person ex officio in the principal direction. The fixed meetings are quarterly, and five constitute a quorum; these meetings have been regularly attended, and voting at them is not permitted by proxy. Minutes are kept of the proceedings.

There is a managing committee of eight, of whose proceedings, minutes are also kept, but no board of superintendence has been fixed by the grand jury.

The combined duties of treasurer, collector and secretary are performed by one individual, who acts without salary. There cannot be said to have been any sudden accession of governors previous to an election, as no election has taken place since the foundation of the institution. The treasurer is not required to give security, and no instance has occurred of an officer being suspended or removed.

There had not been any report yet made, but the register and accounts are inspected quarterly by the governors, and a list of the subscribers, with the number of patients attended and the expense, is sent to the grand jury. This neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, provided it hereafter be thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

Crumlin
Dispensary.

The funds are derived from private subscription, aided by the county presentment; the lowest subscription is 5s.; should one family withdraw its bounty, the charity would most probably cease to exist, still the continuance of it cannot be said to be precarious. Subscriptions have not been accompanied with a stipulation that the subscriber or any part of his family should receive medicine and medical advice gratuitously. There is not any capital stock in houses, lands, &c. belonging to the institution.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain with him until wanted. There are no title deeds, or papers, &c. nor any sums of money left in the hands of salaried officers or servants of the institution.

The income and expenditure of this charity was stated thus for the year 1833:—

Expenditure.	£.	s.	d.	£.	s.	d.
Subscriptions - - -	49	8	-	Medicines - - -	35	18 6
County grant - - -	49	8	-	Salary of medical attendant -	50	- -

				Rent - - -	8	- -

The bills are all examined by the committee and signed by the chairman, and the payments made through the treasurer.

The accounts are made up and audited once a year, and copies sent to the grand jury.

No medical or surgical instruction is given in this institution, which however, in the opinion of the Assistant Commissioners, comprises all the advantages which can be reasonably supposed to arise from such an establishment.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of this dispensary district was not ascertained, but its extent covers a surface of 15,000 acres, divided into 72 townlands; the most distant point of which, and the farthest which the medical attendant is liable to visit, being seven miles.* There is no other medical institution in the district; those within six miles are the Benburb and Loughgall dispensaries and the charities in the city of Armagh. There is a great deficiency of dispensaries in the county, and the district of the Blackwatertown dispensary is considered much too large, still there are no funds to support another. A district of five or six miles diameter, with an average rural population, is as much as one man can be expected to attend to, and it would be very desirable to attach wards for fevers and accidents to dispensary districts.

Building, Furniture,
and Grounds.

This dispensary is held in a commodious house in the town of Blackwatertown, and consists of a convenient shop (part of which serves as a waiting room), a board room, and a small closet, all held at will at an annual rent of 4l. 4s.; it would however be more desirable that the dispensary buildings should be the property of the charity.

Medical Officer.

The sole medical officer is a member of the College of Surgeons, London, and a practitioner in midwifery, for which he holds a certificate obtained at Dublin; he was elected to this dispensary by the subscribers as general medical attendant, and holds, at present, no other appointment, but is allowed private practice. In case of absence he provides a substitute with the consent of the committee. The days of his attendance at the dispensary are Monday and Thursday from 9 to 12 o'clock, and there is not any person continually in attendance for cases of sudden emergency. The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant, who receives a salary of 60l. per annum from the general fund; he has no other allowance whatever, nor any perquisites, except that he is permitted to receive 2s. 6d. for each midwifery case attended, but this must be paid by the patient. If the committee or subscribers should give salaries or allowances more than requisite to procure efficient medical aid, the grand jury could refuse the grant.

Payment.

Election.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of one guinea or upwards. At the last election notice was given by advertisement in the public newspapers, and every means taken to insure the greatest possible competition. Testimonials also were considered indispensable. At the election there were fourteen eligible candidates and seven others who did not send in testimonials. The conditions for voting were acted up to. No limitation exists at this institution with regard to the age of the medical officers, either in appointing or displacing them. This district does not contain persons in independent circumstances sufficient in number to support by their patronage a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument. In case of any neglect, harshness or ill treatment on the part of the surgeon towards towards the patients, they can (under sanction of the rules) complain to the person who gave them the tickets, but they are scarcely yet aware of this privilege.

* The population of the district are very poor, and fever is very prevalent. The dispensary district extends far into the parish of Armagh. The charities of the city provide no domiciliary attendance for the sick poor.

The room in which the medicines are kept is large and properly arranged; the medicines of good quality, and sufficient in quantity, with a proper supply of the more delicate kinds. All are supplied by Messrs. Leslie, Dublin, on the order of the physician, and are paid for by the treasurer, costing, at the establishment of the institution, 36*l.* 14*s.*; they are kept by the medical attendant under lock and key, and none of them ever sold; but the medical attendant is required to keep private medicines for sale. The institution possesses a few surgical instruments, viz. midwifery instruments, cupping apparatus, enema apparatus, tooth instruments, catheters and bougies; these are all in the best order, but not sufficient for the purposes of the institution; they are not used in private practice nor lent. Leeches are not supplied.

The medical attendant keeps a register which distinguishes the date of admission, the number, name, residence, and disease of the patient, recommender, and observations. Patients not bringing a ticket of recommendation would be refused advice, but in fact it never occurs that a poor person is unable to obtain the necessary ticket. There were about 23 patients at this dispensary when visited, and 12 new cases on each of the last two dispensary days. Two cases of midwifery have been attended since the opening of the dispensary. Persons have participated in the benefits of this charity who from their circumstances in life were able to pay for medical advice, but no subscriber has ever stipulated to receive medicine or advice gratis, nor has any other compact been made with any persons having for its object the fallacious increase of the subscription list in order to enhance the county grant. All patients must have tickets, to each of which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient to give it authority, and subscribers are not limited as to the number they may issue for advice and medicine at the dispensary; but 12 visiting tickets only are allowed for each subscription of one guinea; and except in case of an accident or other very urgent case, every visiting ticket must be presented by 10 o'clock in the morning. Splints, bandages, &c. are in readiness at the dispensary for immediate assistance should fractures or other accidents occur. No prescriptions but those of the medical attendant are made up at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are attended on payment of 2*s.* 6*d.* by the patient as above stated. A prescription book is kept, and the prescriptions therein entered appeared to be such as are usual. The medical attendant is not obliged by any rule to give away vaccine matter to other practitioners. He vaccinates at the dispensary any child with whom a ticket is brought, and a deposit of 1*s.* each to secure the return of the child. Although not restricted by rule as to inoculating with small-pox virus, he would not practise it. The results of vaccination are very satisfactory, and the public have confidence in its efficacy.

Wine or other extras are not furnished to the patients, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given by the medical attendant for a supply of food, clothing or fuel to the sick poor.

The subscribers of one guinea and upwards constitute the general management; neither the medical officer nor any other person is ex officio in its principal direction. The fixed meetings are quarterly, and voting is allowed by proxy; minutes of the proceedings are kept.

There is a managing committee, consisting of five, who meet when called on; their proceedings are laid before the quarterly board, and entered in that board's minute book. The zeal of the committee is conspicuous in providing for the wants of the sick poor.

The non-medical officers are the treasurer and secretary.

As this charity had been established only about four months previous to the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, no reports had been then made, but it was intended that such a document should appear at the end of the year. This district affords a sufficient number of persons qualified to form a board of superintendence to attend minutely to the wants of the poor.

The funds arise from voluntary subscriptions aided by the county grant; the first county grant (not yet received) amounts to 52*l.* 12*s.*; the existence of this charity cannot be said to depend on any one family or particular patron, although it has no property of any kind from which an annual income arises.

The funds are collected by the treasurer and kept by him till wanted.

The cost of this dispensary during the four months it has been in existence is 69*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.*, which includes the charge for a supply of drugs sufficient for the year. The surgeon's salary and cost of medicines are the principal items of expenditure.

THE district for which the Crossmaglen dispensary is intended contains about 12,000 inhabitants, and is supposed to extend over a space of 15,000 Irish acres of land, of these 13,373 acres are arable. The district is co-extensive with the parish of Craggan in which the town of Crossmaglen is situated. There are no medical institutions within six miles; the medical attendant is not obliged to visit patients at a greater distance than five miles from the dispensary, except that subscribers of 5*l.* 5*s.* and upwards are entitled to send him out of the district. Persons who are considered proper objects are never refused medical relief at the institution. The establishment of local district hospitals would confer a great benefit on the community, the county infirmary at Armagh being of little or no avail to the poor in this district.

The dispensary is held at one of the entrances to the village, at a house held at an annual rent of 10*l.* 10*s.*, paid out of the funds of the institution; the furniture belongs to the medical attendant; it would be much better, if practicable, that the house were the property of the charity.

The sole medical officer is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, and possesses a Dublin midwifery certificate; he resides at the institution, to which he was elected in June 1833, previous to which period he resided at Blarney; he has no other appointment; without the express permission of the governors he cannot absent himself, but is allowed to engage in private practice. The days and hours of his attendance are Tuesdays and Fridays from eleven until one o'clock, when he dispenses the medicines himself; this duty is never done by proxy, nor has he any assistant on the spot to afford aid in cases of accident.

The salary of the medical officer is 75*l.* per annum, besides lodging, which consists of two bed-rooms, a kitchen and the use of the board-room; he has not any other perquisite.

The grand jury now grant a sum equal to that subscribed, but it is supposed that this is compulsory on them.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of one guinea and upwards; when a vacancy occurs it is advertised in the newspapers, and the production of testimonials is considered indispensable; for the last vacancy there were four candidates, but there was not any notice sent to the grand jury of the appointment which ensued.

This neighbourhood is not capable of supporting a medical man independently of the dispensary, although there are two resident in the district, but they keep shops for the sale of medicines.

In case the medical officer should exercise harshness to the patients, they can complain to the subscribers from whom they have received their tickets, and they are aware of this mode of seeking redress.

The room is large in which the medicines are kept, part of it serving as a waiting-room, but it was not found in a neat or clean state; the medicines, however, appear to be of good description and in sufficient quantity; they are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, and are ordered by the treasurer, who pays for them. They cost for the year

None are ever sold; they are always placed under the care of the medical officer, who neither sells nor furnishes any in his private practice. The institution possesses some surgical instruments, as an amputating case, stomach pump and cupping apparatus, and they may be considered sufficient for its purposes, the medical officer providing himself with small pocket instruments. Leeches are not supplied to the patients. The instruments would be lent in case of emergency.

Patients' Registration.

There is a register kept which distinguishes the date of admission, number, name of patient, age, disease, parish, townland, by whom recommended, and observations; but as this register does not contain the names of all who receive medicine, it cannot be used as a basis from which to calculate.

Who entitled to Relief.

Those only who have tickets are entitled to advice and medicine, but it is customary to relieve all applicants. Domestic servants are not to be visited, but they may have tickets. The abuse of persons participating in the benefits of the charity whose circumstances do not require it has been attempted, but is guarded against as much as possible. There are no poor subscribers. A ticket is not absolutely necessary, and the signature of one subscriber is at all times sufficient; the number of tickets is limited, each subscriber of 1*l.* 1*s.* being privileged to distribute only 25 advice and one visiting ticket.

Extern Patients.

All patients who apply at the institution are supplied with advice and medicine, but those only who can procure a visiting ticket are attended at home. In case of accidents, such as a fractured limb, the institution can provide splints, but neighbouring practitioners are not permitted to have their prescriptions made up at the institution. Lying-in cases are attended when the patient is provided with a visiting ticket; there is not any prescription book kept.

Vaccination is not performed regularly at this dispensary, and small-pox prevailed a few months previous to the visit of the Assistant Commissioners. The medical officer is not furnished with vaccine matter for neighbouring practitioners, and he would not inoculate with small-pox virus; he finds vaccination efficacious, and the confidence of the public in the operation is very great.

Nourishment.

Neither wine or any other extra is afforded from the funds of this charity, nor is there in the neighbourhood any charity for supplying food, clothing or fuel, on which the medical officer could give an order in behalf of the sick poor.

General Management.

For the last 15 months, since the appointment of the present medical attendant, there has not been any meeting of managers, consequently, the conduct of the affairs of the dispensary has, during that period, devolved on him, in conjunction with the treasurer, and the consequences are such as might naturally be expected. The register is so inaccurately kept, at least, the return of sick, &c., said to be founded on it, is so little in accordance with it, that that no reliance whatever can be placed on it; and the books, pharmacy and other arrangements of the medical attendant have never been inspected by the governors.

The only officer not medical acts as treasurer, collector and secretary: there has not occurred any instance of an officer being suspended or removed.

The rules for the regulation of this charity are printed, and a copy was exhibited to the Assistant Commissioners, but reports are not printed. It is thought this district would afford a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor.

The income arises from voluntary subscriptions and the county grant, amounting for each of the three last years as follows:—

Forkhill
Dispensary.

The Forkhill dispensary district contains a population of 7,081, and is co-extensive with the parish of Forkhill, comprising 1,260 acres. The bulk of the population which the medical attendant is liable to visit is within a radius of four miles; but there is a detached portion of the district containing from 200 to 300 inhabitants to which he is liable to be called. The medical institutions within six miles are the Meigh and Jonesborough dispensary, and the medical charities at Dundalk. There is no instance in this neighbourhood of a dispensary being placed where there is not an adequate population. No poor applicant has been refused relief. It would be more desirable to have district hospitals for fevers and accidents than one large central hospital. The Rev. Dr. Campbell, Rector of the parish, states, that he has for the last 17 years subscribed 3*l.* 3*s.* annually to the Armagh hospital, and has never sent more than half a dozen patients to it.

The dispensary is held in a neat small building, two stories high, each story containing one room; the lower room appropriated as a waiting room, the upper room used as the dispensary shop. The county hospital is of little or no use to the poor of this remote district, and the establishment of a small hospital with six or eight beds would, without materially adding to the expense, confer great advantage. This institution was founded on funds derived from the charitable bequest of a Mr. Jackson. This property, amounting to 1,800*l.* per annum, is at present in litigation, so that the good it is calculated to do is thus greatly restricted. It would be most desirable there should be a building expressly for dispensary purposes belonging to the charities.

The sole medical attendant of this institution is a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in Dublin; he resides at the institution, and was elected by the trustees in 1825, and had then just graduated; he also attends two days in the week at Ballymascanlan dispensary without salary. He has private practice also. In case of absence from illness or other cause, notice is given to the trustees. The days and hours of his attendance at this dispensary are Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, from eleven to three o'clock; his duty is never done by proxy; he has no pupil or assistant; the medicines are dispensed by himself.

The salary of the medical officer is 50*l.* per annum, paid from the general fund, and a house rent free; but without any allowance for a horse or other conveyance.

DISPENSARIES.	The medical officers of this dispensary are appointed by the trustees of the Forkhill estate charity. Testimonials are required from candidates. There is no other medical gentleman residing in this district.

County Armagh.	The patients, if neglected or treated harshly, can complain to the rector of the parish, and that mode of redress is known to them.
Examinations taken by Sir D. Barry, M. D. J. R. Corrie, esq., M. D.	The room in which the medicines are kept is neatly and conveniently arranged; the medicines are of good quality and in sufficient quantity, with an adequate supply of the more delicate kinds; they are purchased of Messrs. Boileau & George, at the requisition of the medical attendant; they cost about 40 l. 10 s. per annum. 1,474 sick poor were relieved during the last 12 months. The expense of medicine per head annually is about 6½ d. The medical attendant does not keep medicine for private practice. Leeches are furnished to the patients from the funds.
Forkhill Dispensary.
Pharmacy.
Patients' Registration.	A quarterly register is kept, which distinguishes the number, the name, the age, residence, disease, date of admission, date of discharge, result, observations, &c. The medicine prescribed is entered in a separate book. There were 20 patients at the dispensary when visited; the day previous there were 10.
Who entitled to Relief.	Any person who chooses to apply has advice and relief gratis ; but none of the subscribers are attended gratis . No order or ticket is required. When the case is too bad to admit of the patient attending at the dispensary, the medical attendant is required to visit at any part of the district, and at any hour of the day or night. Whenever accidents or fractures occur, the institution provides splints, bandages, &c. No neighbouring practitioners are authorized to have prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are generally attended by midwives; there are some experienced women in the district, and accidents do not often happen, but the medical attendant is expected to attend all difficult cases of parturition. The medical attendant vaccinates all that apply; he also gives vaccine matter frequently to neighbouring practitioners, but he does not, nor would he inoculate with small-pox virus. Vaccination is found very efficacious, and the poor have great confidence in it. Small-pox has not been frequent.
Nourishment.	Wine and other extras are furnished to the sick poor from the funds; in fact every thing necessary to recover a patient. There is also a charity in the neighbourhood on which the medical attendant can give an order for a supply of food, fuel and clothing.
Intern Accommodation.	There is no intern accommodation, but the want of it is so great and so much felt that the medical attendant has taken patients into his residence at his own expense.
General Management.	The general management is vested in a board of 15 governors, who are likewise the trustees of the Forkhill estate charity. The medicine, shop, books, &c. are frequently inspected by the resident trustees, and by the others occasionally. There is not any committee or board of superintendence constituted by the grand jury.
Officers not medical.	There are not any non-medical officers attached to this institution, its funds and accounts being managed by the Forkhill charity trustees.
Reports.	Reports are made quarterly by the medical officer to the above named trustees in fixed form, which specifies the townlands of the district, the description and number of diseases treated, &c. The gentlemen present at this examination think it probable that a sufficient number of persons could be found in this district qualified and willing to investigate the wants of the poor, but there is by no means any considerable number of persons so qualified.
Funds and Accounts.	The funds are derived from subscriptions and county grants; the subscriptions for the year ending 1st July 1834 were as follows:—

Keady Dispensary.

THE district of the Keady dispensary includes the parishes of Keady, Derrynoose and Annaghbraig, but the amount of population could not be ascertained. The medical attendant is not obliged to visit beyond a distance of five miles, and within a distance of six there is not any medical institution. The dispensaries in the county are not considered too few; and there was not any place in the county mentioned where there is a large population without a dispensary. At this institution no poor patient who is a proper object for relief is ever refused advice and medicine; the want of intern accommodation has been so much felt, that a building is about to be provided for the reception of cases of accidents or diseases not considered contagious: cholera and fevers are not to be admitted.

Population and
Extent of Country.

At present the dispensary medicines are kept in a small dark closet behind the medical attendant's own shop; but, as before stated, there has been a building provided which is conveniently situated, and is to be immediately altered; it is to comprise a dispensary shop and two small wards containing two beds each; the expense to be defrayed partly from the dispensary funds and partly by a gift of 30*l.* from the medical attendant, being half the amount of his salary.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The county hospital at Armagh, although not beyond six miles distant, is found to be of little or no benefit to the poor inhabitants of this place, yet all the fines levied at petty sessions at Keady are by Act of Parliament appropriated to the uses of the Armagh hospital; but there being now a small local hospital at home, this fund, it is considered, could be very advantageously applied to its purposes, the amount being annually about 25*l.*

The sole medical officer is a graduate in medicine of the University, and a surgeon, of Glasgow; he resides near the institution, to which he was first appointed in 1819; he resigned in 1833, but allowed himself to be re-elected in the following year; he has not any other appointment; should he be absent through illness or otherwise, there is not any rule as to supplying a temporary substitute, and he is allowed to pursue his private practice; the days of his attendance at the dispensary are Tuesdays and Saturdays, from 10 till 2 o'clock.

Medical Officers.

The salary of the medical attendant varies in inverse ratio of the other dispensary expenses, but he has no allowance for a horse or other expenses; he received 60*l.* for the year 1833.

Payment.

In case of vacancy notice is given in the newspapers, and testimonials from each candidate are considered indispensable; on the occasion of the last election 14 candidates presented themselves. This neighbourhood is capable of supporting medical men independently of the dispensary, and there are two resident in the town.

Election.

Should the medical officer be harsh to or neglect the patients, complaint can be made to the giver of the ticket, and of this fact the poor are aware.

The medicines are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co., Dublin, the character of the medical officer furnishing the only guarantee that they are not subsequently changed and inferior ones substituted. The medicines cost in

The stock is placed under the care of the medical attendant, and it is not permitted that any should be sold; those used by the medical attendant in his private practice are kept in his own house, and those belonging to the dispensary are in a room behind his shop, but this is only a temporary arrangement until the new shop is prepared.

There is no register kept which is of any value, nor any document by which the number of patients relieved, &c. could be ascertained.

to any great extent. An order is not on all occasions required, but when tickets are given the signature of one subscriber is sufficient to each, and the number each subscriber has privilege to distribute is unlimited.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary on two days in the week, and the medical attendant is liable to be called to any part of the district to visit a sick patient by day or night. In cases of accident, such as a fractured limb, calico for bandages is furnished by the dispensary. There is not any neighbouring practitioner authorized to have his prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Difficult lying-in cases only are attended from the dispensary by the medical attendant; the very poor women are attended by midwives, and accidents are seldom known to occur. The prescriptions are not kept or entered in any book. Vaccine matter is always to be had at the dispensary, where vaccination is also performed, and the results have been favourable, but there is not any rule as to the medical officer inoculating with small-pox matter; he has, however, cases of small-pox after vaccination, but not severe; however, the confidence of the public in the operation is pretty good, and small-pox is not now known in the district.

Some few extras are allowed, such as flannel and calico, for accidents. In the year 1834 there was 5*l.* expended on flannel, and this is not yet used, besides 2*l.* 9*s.* for calico. In this neighbourhood there is not any institution on which an order could be given to the sick poor for food, clothing or fuel.

The general management of the affairs of this charity is vested in the subscribers of a guinea and upwards; there is generally one meeting in the year, but the subscribers seem to pay but little attention: minutes are said to be kept of these meetings; however, the book could not be found. The management seems to be lodged entirely in the hands of the medical attendant.

The treasurer, who is likewise collector and secretary, is the only non-medical officer. The reports are made up annually, but the minutes there entered are so inaccurate that they cannot be taken as an authority, and in short are of no sort of use. This district affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

The receipts are derived from subscriptions and county grants. It is understood to have been decided by the twelve judges that the grand jury are bound to grant a sum equal to the sum subscribed.

The charity does not depend on any one subscriber, and its existence is not likely to cease, although it possesses no capital stock in houses, lands, &c. belonging to the institution from which any annual income is derived.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands until wanted.

The subjoined particulars of account are extracted from the printed reports of this charity for the years ending respectively on 1 July 1833 and 1834.

The Medical Attendant of the Institution.

Loughgall
Dispensary.Population and
Extent of Country.

THE greatest distance to which the district of this dispensary extends, and at which the medical attendant is liable to visit, is seven miles, and, within the district, there is no other medical institution; within six miles are the medical charities at Armagh, and the Blackwater and Seagoe dispensaries. These are considered to be insufficient for the purposes for which they are intended, and new ones are accordingly about to be established. The medical medical officer thinks that, with a population similar in number to that existing in this district, a radius of two miles is as great an extent as one medical man can possibly attend to; and that it would be very beneficial to attach wards for fevers and accidents to each dispensary. There is a dispensary at Rich-hill, but at present it is not available, the medical attendant having been dismissed; consequently, the poor in that neighbourhood now apply at Loughgill.

The house in which the dispensary is held is a suitable and convenient building, and the room in which the medicines are kept is commodious; there is also a waiting room for the patients, but without furniture. About one acre of ground is attached to the house as a garden. These premises are held on lease at an annual rent of 12*l.*

The sole medical attendant is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, about 35 years of age, who obtained a midwifery certificate from the Dublin lying-in hospital; he resides at the dispensary, to which he was appointed in 1827 by election of the governors; he now holds no other situation, but had, previous to his election, been attached to the Phoenix Asylum, Dublin, and is now engaged in private practice.

There is no bye-law or regulation with regard to providing a substitute in case of the medical attendant's illness or temporary absence. The days and hours of his attendance at this dispensary are Friday and Monday from ten till three o'clock, and every other morning till ten o'clock. The duty is not done by proxy. The medicines are dispensed by the medical officer, and there is not any pupil or other person to attend to the dispensary.

The medical officer is paid 50*l.* as salary and 2*s.* 6*d.* additional for visiting at a distance exceeding two miles. When the surgeon is required to visit a patient, a ticket, according to a particular form, must be procured, and certain conditions, specified in print on the ticket, as follows, must be complied with: "No patient can be visited by the surgeon unless 6*d.* be paid to the institution before each visiting ticket is given. If the distance should exceed two miles from the dispensary, 1*s.* will be required. If the distance exceed four miles, it shall be optional with the surgeon to attend the call or not; and he shall be entitled to demand 1*s.* additional for every mile exceeding that distance. When the surgeon is called to attend a midwifery case, he shall be entitled to demand 3*s.* 6*d.* from the person who requires his attendance." But these additional sums are never to exceed 30*l.*; (in report 22*l.* 10*s.*) The medical attendant has in addition the house, with a good garden, rent free.

The medical officer is elected by the governors. On the occasion of the last vacancy an advertisement was put into the public papers for candidates, and testimonials were considered indispensable.

* The medicines are kept in a properly arranged room, and the bottles and drawers appeared in proper order. The medicines are of good quality, but not in very great abundance; it was however stated that a quantity had been ordered and was daily expected. The more delicate kinds are kept, as quinine, &c. They are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin, on the order of the medical attendant, and paid for by the treasurer; none are ever sold. They are placed under the care of the medical officer, who does not furnish medicines in his private practice, and possesses therefore no stock of his own.

These numbers show that the average expense of each patient, in medicine (including wine) is a fraction more than 7*d.* a year. A similar calculation for the three previous years gives an average of 7½*d.* per head.

A register is carefully kept and checked by the governors, which distinguishes the date of admission, age and name of the patient, disease, recommender, the townland, and number of visits paid. Eighty-two midwifery cases appear by the reports to have been attended within the last three years.

Any

* Although the medicines are in the main bought of some well known druggist in Dublin or Belfast, yet there appear in each year's account, various items for spirits, lard, salts and other medicines, amounting to 10*l.* or 12*l.* purchased from time to time from neighbouring dealers. Moreover it was stated that spirits were procured to make tinctures on an emergency, and yet it takes fourteen days to prepare tinctures.

Extern Patients.

Any poor person, including servants of subscribers, is entitled to relief, if they procure tickets, to which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, and no limitation exists to the number each subscriber is authorized to give. A ticket remains in force for three months from the date of its issue, but must be renewed then. The tickets are regularly filed, and the register checked by the governors. The abuse of the charity caused by persons getting advice or medicine, who are able to pay for it, seldom, if ever, occurs.

Patients are seen at the dispensary; and if too ill to attend there, are visited at their homes, on sending the proper ticket; and on the condition already stated, attendance, if necessary, would be afforded at night. If an accident or fracture should occur, the institution is provided with splints, bandages, &c. to render immediate assistance. Difficult lying-in cases only are attended; poor women are generally attended by unskilful midwives, and consequent loss of life sometimes occur. There is no prescription-book kept, nor can any neighbouring practitioner have prescriptions compounded at this dispensary. The medical attendant does not distribute vaccine matter to neighbouring surgeons; but he vaccinates all children brought, on 1s. for each being deposited to insure the return of the child. Vaccination is found efficacious, and small-pox seldom occurs; but it has been more prevalent this year than for many years before: the poor have great confidence in the efficacy of the operation.

Nourishment.

General Manage-

ment,

Certain extras, as wine, &c. are occasionally furnished to the patients, and flannel afforded from the funds of this charity. Trusses are also sometimes given away, and sometimes sold at reduced prices. But there is no charity in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given for food, clothing or fuel.

The management is vested in the subscribers of one guinea and upwards; but there is not any officer or other person ex officio in the principal direction. The fixed meetings of the governors take place quarterly, at which eight or ten generally attend, and minutes of the proceedings are kept. [The treasurer was absent when the dispensary was visited by the Assistant Commissioners; but afterwards stated to them, that he had great difficulty in getting any of the subscribers to attend the meeting.]

Reports.

There is not any managing committee appointed for this institution.

The Rector of the parish is collector and treasurer, and the only non-medical officer. There are no printed bye-laws for regulating the election of officers.

* An account of the yearly receipts and expenditure, with a list of the subscriptions, is added to the reports printed, and distributed among the subscribers.

Funds and Accounts.

Receipts.

This is a populous and wealthy neighbourhood, with many resident gentry, and if the system of dispensary relief should be hereafter extended, it would afford a sufficient number of persons qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor. It was stated by the treasurer, that there were in this district many poor persons residing on large properties, the owners of which did not contribute to the funds of this charity, and that he did not feel sure that he could justly refuse a dispensary ticket to such poor, as part of the funds was contributed by the county.

The income arises from the subscriptions and county grant, and does not depend on the bounty of any one or two subscribers. Its existence, although it does not possess any capital or other property from which a permanent income is derivable, cannot be considered precarious.

Expenditure.

Reports of the income and expenditure of this and the Richhill dispensaries united in one statement of account are annually made; from which the following particulars are taken, for the year ending 1st June:—

Lurgan Dispensary.

* THIS dispensary district extends over the whole parish of Shankhill, part of the parishes of Seagoe and Maralin, containing together a population of about 9,700 in the county of Armagh, and about 1,000 in the county of Down. These limits comprise on an average two miles round the town of Lurgan. If medical charities throughout the country are desirable, the mode of allocating might be greatly improved.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The dispensary is held in a room adjoining, and opening out of the medical attendant's residence, for which no rent is allowed. The furniture, bottles for drugs, drawers, &c. all belong to the medical attendant. There is no waiting room, and very little space in the shop for the patients to stand in. As a general principle, it would be preferable that dispensary buildings and appointments should be the property of the charity.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The sole medical officer, a gentleman of about 33 years of age, is a graduate in medicine of the University of Edinburgh, and a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London, who also possesses a midwifery certificate from Dr. Hamilton of Edinburgh; he resides in the house where the dispensary is held; he was appointed in 1832, by election, having previously been living at Bangor, in the county of Down; he holds no other appointment.
The days for his attendance at the dispensary are Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays, but he is in the habit of seeing dispensary patients daily, and visiting them at their own homes. He is allowed to engage in private practice. There is no rule as to the appointment of a substitute, in case of his absence or illness, but hitherto he has not absented himself. The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant in person; he has no assistant constantly on the spot to afford aid in case of sudden accident, &c.

Medical Officer.

The medical officer receives 60 l. per annum from the general funds of the charity, without any perquisites or allowances whatever. If the committee or subscribers authorized salaries or allowances higher than requisite to procure efficient medical attendance, the grand jury can control such, by refusing or diminishing the grant.

Payment.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of one guinea and upwards. In case of vacancy, notice is given in the newspapers, and care taken to insure competition. Testimonials are considered indispensable to candidates; there were five candidates at the last election; the conditions for voting were acted up to; at present there are five medical gentlemen residing in the town, eligible, to the dispensary appointment. If the medical officer should be inattentive or harsh to the patients, they can, without fear, complain to any subscriber, and are aware that this privilege exists.

Election.

The

* A dispensary had existed here since 1804, of which a Dr. Miller was the medical officer, and through his care and that of the treasurer the funds had accumulated in 1820 up to 600 l. At that period subscribers all discontinued their contributions, so that Dr. Miller's salary of 40 l. per annum was paid up to 1832 out of the capital, which then became reduced to 30 l.; Dr. Miller then resigned; the dispensary was recognized in its present state, and the present physician elected.

Lurgan Dispensary.

The room in which the medicines are kept is neatly and properly arranged; the medicines are ample in quantity and of good quality, including a sufficient supply of the more delicate and expensive descriptions. The medicines are supplied by Mr. Wolkington, of Belfast, to the order of the medical attendant, and are paid for by the treasurer. A contract was entered into for one year with an apothecary in the town, to compound the medical attendant's prescriptions at 10 per cent. above prime cost, but it was soon found that the expense of this mode of proceeding would be ruinous to the institution. The medicines cost the year ending

The medical attendant of the institution does not keep any medicines for private practice. There are neither surgical instruments, or apparatus for preparing decoctions belonging to the institution. Leeches are not supplied to the patients.

Patients' Registration.

A register is kept of those patients only who are recommended, which register distinguishes the date, name of patient, disease, recommender and number, and for the last year the residences are stated. This register is kept in a slovenly manner; tickets are not demanded, and if presented are not filed. Persons who are fit objects are never refused medicine or advice, whether with or without a ticket, not even strangers. There were three new cases at the dispensary when visited, and eight or nine the last dispensing day. For the last three years, but one case of midwifery (a difficult one) has been attended.

Who entitled to Relief.

One of the rules specifies that no assistance should be given without recommendation, but this is not attended to. Domestic servants of subscribers get tickets. Persons able to pay for advice have attempted to impose on the charity, but such abuse is guarded against as far as possible. The attempt to swell a fictitious subscription list, so as to obtain a larger grant from the grand jury, has never been known in this county. The number of tickets which each subscriber can issue is limited to 20 for one guinea, but there is no distinction between a ticket for medicine and advice merely, and one for a visit; one signature to each ticket is sufficient. The number of tickets allowed each subscriber has been found sufficient, but it must be recollected that tickets have not been always required.

Extern Patients.

Patients are attended to at the dispensary, and when illness prevents their coming there, are visited at their houses in any part of the district, and in the day-time, but not at night, except in extreme cases. When fractures or accidents occur, the institution supplies splints, fracture-boxes, bandages, &c. &c. Lying-in cases are attended from the dispensary on a ticket of recommendation, and on payment of 10s. 6d. by the recommender for each case. Poor women are for the most part attended by midwives, and accidents are seldom heard of. No medical practitioner can have his prescriptions compounded at this dispensary. There is no rule or stipulation regarding vaccination. It has not been hitherto performed at the dispensary; the medical attendant has a good opinion of it, and the confidence of the poor is great; but small-pox has been and is at present prevalent in the district; several died of that disease during last summer. The medical attendant would not inoculate with small-pox matter.

Nourishment.

Wine or such other extras are not furnished to the sick from the funds, but a sum of money is placed, by an affluent and charitable individual, at the medical attendant's disposal for such purposes.

General Management.

The general management is vested in the subscribers of one guinea and upwards. The medical officer is a governor, but has never voted, nor has the institution been essentially under his management. No person can be in the principal direction merely ex officio. The fixed meetings occur once in the year; five is the general number who attend them. Ladies are allowed to vote by proxy at the meetings, and minutes of the proceedings are kept.

Managing Committee.

The managing committee consist of 12, who meet quarterly, and minutes of their meetings are recorded. The governors are not very attentive to the concerns of this charity.

Officers not medical.

The officers non-medical are, the treasurer, collector and secretary, now united in one person, who acts gratuitously. No instance has occurred of any officer being suspended or removed. The following are the principal rules established for the guidance of the affairs of this charity, being in the form of Resolutions passed at a meeting of the Subscribers, at the period of the re-establishment of the institution after the resignation of the late medical attendant:—

1st. That for each guinea subscribed annually to the Lurgan dispensary, the subscriber shall be entitled to one vote.

2d. That the limits of the district to be supplied with medicines from the Lurgan dispensary, and to be visited by the medical attendant, shall include the parish of Shankhill and as much of the parishes of Seagoe and Maralin as are within the manor of Brownlowderry.

3d. That the dispensary doctor will be required to visit and prescribe for the sick paupers resident in the limits of the above district.

4th. That the doctor shall be continued in charge of the dispensary during the pleasure of the subscribers.

5th. That no medical gentleman shall be appointed to, or continued in charge of the dispensary, who shall compound medicines for sale in the town of Lurgan.

6th. That the candidates for the situation of doctor to the Lurgan dispensary, now vacant, shall produce proper certificates and testimonials of their qualifications as physician, surgeon and accoucheur, previous to the election.

7th. That

7th. That any subscriber who may require the dispensary doctor's attendance at the lying-in of a pauper woman, shall accompany such application with a fee of half a guinea, to be paid by the subscriber.

8th. That the salary to be paid to the doctor to be elected, shall be 60*l.* for the first year.

9th. That ladies, subscribers to the dispensary, shall be allowed to vote by proxy.

There are a sufficient number of persons resident in this neighbourhood, who are qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, if it be considered expedient to extend the present system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The income arises from subscriptions and the county grant solely; the charity has no other property or income.

The county grants for the same periods were for similar sums. The charity cannot be said to depend on the bounty of one family, or any particular patron, but if one family withdrew its support (a circumstance not at all probable) it would materially impair the funds. The principal proprietor of the town is very liberal in its behalf.

The treasurer collects the funds, and they remain in his custody till wanted; they are not in a flourishing condition.

The expenditure for the year 1833 amounted to about 126*l.*; for this year 105*l.* The principal items are, medicine and physician's salary.

Persons who attended the Examination.

LORD ACHESON, M. P.—MR. ATKINSON.—DR. BLACKER.—WILLIAM M'KEE, esq.—REV. MR. POTTS.—REV. MR. ROBINSON; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THIS dispensary district extends over the parish of Mullabrack, comprising 72 townlands, and a population of 14,800 souls; the most distant point at which the medical attendant is liable to visit is about four miles. There is no other medical charity in the district; those within six miles are the medical charities at Armagh, the dispensaries of Poyntz-Pass, Tanderagee, and Richhill. The dispensaries in this county are well placed as regards population, but it would confer a great benefit on the community if an hospital for accidents and fevers could be attached to each.

The dispensary is held at the surgeon's own house, for which accommodation he is allowed 10*l.* annual rent from the funds of the charity. A hall with two benches serves as a waiting room for the patients. As a general principle, it would be better that dispensaries should be held at houses belonging to the charities.

The sole medical officer, about 27 years of age, is a graduate in medicine of the University of Edinburgh, and a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of the same place; he also obtained a midwifery certificate at Glasgow. He was appointed to this dispensary in November 1831, previously to which he had been acting as substitute at the Castlebellingham dispensary in the county Louth; he holds no other appointment, but is allowed to pursue private practice.

There is no rule to provide for the event of his illness or temporary absence, but in such cases the committee must be applied to and a substitute provided. The duty is not done by proxy. The dispensary is open on Tuesdays and Saturdays from nine till eleven o'clock, and the medical attendant has an apprentice to assist and dispense the medicines.

The salary of the medical officer is 50*l.* per annum paid from the general funds; last year he was allowed 12*l.* towards the keep of a horse, and that allowance will be continued; but if a salary or allowances, higher than necessary to obtain efficient medical aid, were acquiesced in by the committee, the grand jury could refuse or diminish the grant. It is understood that there is always on the grand jury one patron of each dispensary, who vouches for its utility, and that the rest are satisfied with his assertion.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and every pains taken on occasions of vacancy to secure competition by advertisement in the papers, &c., and testimonials from candidates are considered indispensable. There were 26 candidates at the last election, and the fact of age of the present medical officer was taken into consideration; he is 26 years of age; notice of the appointment was not sent to the grand jury. There has not yet been any mortality amongst the medical attendants. If the patients be neglected or harshly treated, they can complain to the person who gives the ticket, and of this mode of redress they are quite aware. The physician whom the subscribers have elected, is a well educated and zealous young man, and a skilful observer of the diseases to which the poor are liable, as is evident from his well kept register.

The medicines are bought of Boileau & George, Dublin; the medical attendant ordering such as he considers necessary; he makes his own tinctures and ointments with lard and spirits bought in the village, and this plan he considers to effect a saving of one-third in the cost paid by the treasurer: the medicines supplied to this dispensary during the three past years, cost in

1832	21	13	7½	number of patients not known.
1833	29	11	0	1318
1834	26	8	5	1674

The average expense of medicine for the last two years thus appeared to have been nearly 4½d. per head per annum. The medicines are always under the care of the medical attendant or his assistant; those for his private practice are kept in the house, but not in the same apartment with the dispensary medicines, and none of the latter are ever sold. The instruments belonging to the institution are not sufficient for its objects; they would be lent to any neighbouring practitioner in case of emergency.

Patients' Registration.

A register of the patients is regularly kept by the medical attendant, distinguishing the date of admission, name and residence of patient, age, recommender, disease, medical treatment, when discharged, observations, &c; the patient's name is only entered once. No returns were furnished to the grand jury, of the number of persons relieved in a year, nor is such return ever required. Tickets are required, but no person is refused medicine and assistance, under any circumstances. These tickets are not filed, and the register is not checked by means of them at the end of the year. On the two last days that the institution was visited, there were 16 or 17 patients in attendance.

Who entitled to
Relief.

Poverty and residence in the district entitle any person who applies to relief; but no persons are allowed to impose on the charity, whose circumstances would enable them to pay for advice. The abuse of subscribers requiring gratuitous attendance from the dispensary medical officer has never existed here.

The signature of one subscriber is enough to each recommendation ticket, and the numbe is not limited.

Extern Patients.

Patients are seen and prescribed for at the dispensary, and such as are prevented by illness from attending there, are visited at their own homes, at any time, day or night. If an accident should occur, bandages and splints, with all the materials necessary in rendering immediate assistance, would be provided. Parturition cases are attended on a recom- mendatory ticket, when danger or difficulty is apprehended. No medical practitioner un- connected with the dispensary can have his prescriptions made up there. Some of the prescriptions have been kept, and on inspection were found to be such as are usual. There is no rule relative to giving away vaccine matter to neighbouring practitioners, but the medical attendant vaccinates gratis all poor children brought to the dispensary without a ticket, but a deposit of one shilling is required from each, so as to insure the return of the child for inspection. Small pox has not been frequent here, and the medical attendant approves highly of vaccination, in which the public have also good confidence.

Nourishment.

Wine or other extras are not given to the sick poor, and there is no charity on which the medical attendant can give an order for food, fuel or clothing, but he may recommend to the Rev. Dr. Blacker, the Rector of the parish, and his recommendation is always attended to.

ment.

The general management rests with the subscribers of one guinea and upwards. The medical officer is a governor, but does not attend the meetings, nor have the affairs of the charity been essentially under his management, nor has any person a right, ex officio, to the principal direction. The fixed meetings are only annual. Minutes of the proceedings are kept.

Managing Committee.

There is a managing committee consisting of eight persons, but hitherto they have not had occasion to meet.

Officers not medical.

The only non-medical officer is the treasurer, who is also collector and secretary. The office is permanent. No sudden accession of governors has happened immediately previous to the election of any officer.

Attendants.

There is a servant attached to this charity, paid 1l. 7s. 6d. per annum, whose duty is to attend on dispensary days, and to clean the shop and premises.

Reports.

Reports are made and printed annually. In case it is hereafter found expedient to extend the mode of relief afforded by dispensaries, the district contains an ample number of persons qualified and willing to investigate minutely the wants of the poor.

Funds and Accounts.
Receipts.

The income arises solely from the two sources of voluntary subscriptions and the county grant, the charity having no property or stock, funded or otherwise, from which annual income is derivable, but its continuance does not depend on the bounty of any one or two particular contributors, nor is it likely to cease.

Collection and Custody.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain till wanted.

The

The following are detailed particulars of the receipts and expenditure for the two past years, as extracted from the printed reports of those periods—

The accounts are audited and made up annually in May. There are not any students attached to the dispensary as such, nor lectures given. On the whole, the Market-hill dispensary is a most respectable well-managed charity, and highly creditable to all connected with its management.

Persons who attended the Examination.

HAMILTON WELCH CHAMBRE, esq.—PAUL FOXALL, esq.—BENJAMIN THOMPSON, esq., and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

The population of this dispensary district cannot be precisely stated, but is very considerable. The district itself is mountainous, comprising 14,000 statute acres, including mountain and bogs, being in fact the parishes of Meigh and Jonesborough.

The charitable medical institutions of Dundalk, Newry, Forkhill and Ballymascanlan are all situated within six miles of the Jonesborough dispensary, and yet cannot, from the limited means they at present possess, be considered equal to the wants of so great a population. At this dispensary a sick pauper is never refused medical aid, even if unprovided with a ticket of recommendation.

If a ward could be attached to the dispensary for fever patients and cases of accident, it would confer much advantage on the poor of the district.

The dispensary is held in a small apartment at one end of a thatched cottage, situate in the centre of the district, for which apartment a rent of 2*l.* per annum is paid. The accommodation is but ill-adapted for the purposes of a dispensary, and it would be desirable, if practicable, to have a proper house and requisites for the dispensary, the exclusive property of the charity.

The only medical officer attached to this dispensary is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London; he has also a midwifery certificate from Dublin; he resides at Dundalk, five miles distant from the dispensary, and was appointed by election of the subscribers at large, as general medical attendant, at the original establishment of the institution. At the period of his appointment he had been practising at Dundalk, where he still pursues his profession, but holds no other public situation. The days and hours of his attendance are Tuesdays and Saturdays, from eleven to one o'clock. His duty is never performed by proxy, and there is no arrangement to meet the emergency of his illness or temporary absence. When he is not in the dispensary, it is kept locked, and there is not any person always on the spot who could administer relief in case of accident or other sudden occasion.

The medical attendant is paid a salary of 30*l.* per annum from the general fund, which is the only allowance of any kind he receives. The funds do not admit a liberal salary, but if such could be granted, and that the committee or subscribers were inclined to make an extravagant grant of salary, the grand jury could refuse or diminish the county grant.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers, and proper precautions are taken to insure competition. At the last election, advertisements were put in the newspapers, and there were two candidates; on these occasions, testimonials are indispensable. This district has not a sufficient number of inhabitants who could support a medical gentleman independently of the dispensary emolument, nor is there any medical gentleman resident within it. If any harshness or neglect should be used by the medical attendant, the poor can complain to the subscribers who gave the recommendation, and they are quite aware of this privilege.

The medicines are kept in a press, tolerably well arranged. They appear to be of good quality, but in very small quantity, owing to the scarcity of the funds. The supply of essential medicines is bad, while those less required are in abundance. The stock of quinine was exhausted, though it is a medicine much used; there was a small portion of morphia. Leeches are not supplied to the patients. The medicines are supplied by Messrs. Leslie & Co. of Dublin, on the order of the medical attendant, and paid for by the treasurer. They are kept locked up, and the key remains in the medical attendant's possession. The medical attendant does not dispense any medicines in his private practice. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution.

The average expense of medicine thus amounts to about 8½d. per head per annum.

Patients' Registration.

A register is kept by the medical attendant, which denotes the number, the name of the patient, the residence, recommender, disease, visits paid and number of dispensations; this document appears to be kept very irregularly. There have not been any capital operations performed within the last three years.

Who entitled to Relief.

Any poor person who belong to the district is entitled to relief, but the servants of subscribers do not get tickets. The best care is taken to prevent imposition on the charity, which has been sometimes attempted by persons who could afford to pay for medicine and advice. There are no poor subscribers, nor any who receive gratuitous attendance. A ticket is not absolutely necessary, one signature is sufficient, and the subscribers are unlimited as to the numbers they may issue.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are visited at home in any part of the district at any hour of the day or night if requisite; but in case of accident, such as a fractured limb, &c. this charity does not possess the means of affording relief. During the last year the medical officer attended lying-in cases on a ticket being presented, but this duty was found too laborious, and a regulation has been adopted, that he should attend on cases only where the patient produces a ticket of recommendation, and pays him 5s. if he be sent for on a dispensary day, and 10s. on any other day. The poor women are generally attended by midwives, but there is not one in the neighbourhood possessing any experience, and accidents occasionally occur. The prescriptions at this dispensary are not written or entered. No neighbouring practitioner can have his prescriptions compounded here.

All children brought to the dispensary are vaccinated gratis. The results are found very favourable, and small-pox has been very little in the district; the public have great confidence in the operation; the medical attendant does not approve of inoculation with small-pock matter, and never uses it.

Nourishment.

No extras, such as wine, &c. are furnished to the patients; neither is there any adjacent charity on which the physician could give an order to the sick poor to obtain food, fuel or clothing.

General Management.

The affairs of the dispensary are managed by the subscribers of one guinea and upwards. Neither the physician nor any other person (ex officio) possesses the principal direction.

There is no fixed period for the meetings of the subscribers; two only have been held since the founding of the dispensary in the year 1822; it is found difficult to assemble a quorum. When meetings are held, minutes of the proceedings are entered.

Officers not medical.

In the person of the only officer not medical, are centered the duties of treasurer, collector and secretary.

Funds and Accounts.
Receipts.

The accounts are not conducted by means of any regular system of book entry, and no record is forthcoming from which an accurate account of the receipts and payments could be deduced. The charity has no capital stock or property producing income.

Collection.
Custody.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his keeping till required for the purposes of the dispensary.

Mullaglass
Dispensary.Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district for which this dispensary was established extends about seven miles in length and six miles in width, the population of which is not exactly ascertained. The most distant point of the district is fully five miles from the dispensary, and within six miles of it there are the medical charities at Newry, the dispensary at Poyntzpass and a private dispensary belonging to Lord Mandeville at Tullyhappis; there is no second medical institution within the bounds of the district, and the medical attendant finds the district, peopled as it is, too large for one man to attend, but he thinks he could manage such portion as might be included within a diameter of five miles; he is also of opinion that it would confer a great benefit on the community, if wards were attached to the dispensary, with beds, &c. for cases of fever and accident.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The Mullaglass dispensary is held at a small house (situate in the townland of that name) two stories high, and containing two small rooms, one of which serves as a board and waiting waiting room, the other as the medicine and dispensing shop; it was built by the proprietor of the estate, and a rent of 5*l.* 5*s.* is annually paid to him for it. The house is unoccupied, and is opened only during the dispensary days and hours, viz. on Mondays and Fridays from twelve to three.

The sole medical attendant (a gentleman of about 26 years of age) is a graduate in medicine, and a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, at Edinburgh; he possesses also a midwifery certificate from Dr. Hamilton of Edinburgh; he resides at Loughgilly, three miles distant; he was elected a general medical attendant to this dispensary in the year 1833, at which period he had just left Edinburgh; he holds no other public appointment, but pursues his private practice. In case of his illness or temporary absence, the governors would appoint a substitute; but he is, in fact, about to resign, the duties of the situation being too great, having injured his health by over exertion; he attends at the dispensary on Mondays and Fridays from twelve to three, and at a branch institution established at Camlough, on each Wednesday during the same hours. The establishment at Camlough is nearly similar to this, and is likewise closed, except during dispensary hours. The medicines at both places are dispensed by the medical attendant himself, who has no assistant or pupil; he stated, however, that he had been for the last three months unable to attend to his duties, and would cease to receive salary the next month after this examination.

The medical attendant receives a salary of 50*l.* per annum, but has no other allowance of any sort or kind; there was an understanding that he should have 2*s.* 6*d.* for each visit, but the funds proved insufficient.

On occasions of vacancy, measures are taken by advertising in the public newspapers, and otherwise, to insure the fullest competition, and in the selection of candidates, testimonials are considered indispensable; at the last election, there were six candidates.

The room before described, in which the medicines are deposited, is kept in a slovenly state, and a supply of medicine was scanty; but the more delicate and expensive kinds are used. The medicines are supplied by Mr. Jefferies, of Dublin, on the order of the treasurer, at the instance of the medical attendant, who is privileged to get any medicines he chooses. The medicines (none of which are ever sold) are all locked up, and the medical attendant keeps the key; he does not keep any medicines for his private practice.

There is no apparatus attached to the institution for preparing decoctions, &c., nor are there any surgical instruments. The poor patients are not supplied with leeches.

For the year 1833, the medicines cost - - - -	45	1	1½
Ditto - - 1834 - - - - -	36	3	9½

averaging per head per annum 1*s.* 1*d.* for medicines only.

The medical attendant keeps a register, distinguishing the date, the number, name and residence, age, disease and treatment of the patient, the name of recommender, and number of tickets each subscriber has issued. There have been several capital operations performed within the last year, in consequence of the frequent accidents in the spinning-mills.

All persons, of every class, who get tickets, and reside within the district, are entitled to have advice and medicine gratis, except the domestic servants of subscribers, who are by bye-law excluded. The compact in fact is, that the better sort of farmers are not to be refused, and the proprietor of the building wishes that all his tenants indiscriminately shall have medicine and advice from the dispensary gratis. Although the rule is, that every applicant must produce a ticket, to which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, yet such is not strictly acted up to. The subscribers are limited to ten tickets for advice, and five for visits, in the ratio of each 1*l.* subscribed; but this law is not rigorously enforced. There are no poor subscribers.

The Assistant Commissioners observe that it is a most injurious practice that the subscribers insist on medicine and advice being given from the dispensary to all persons presenting tickets signed by them, whether such persons be of the poorer class or not.

Extern patients are visited at home in any part of the district, and at any hour of either day or night, if necessary; but if an accident should occur, such as a fractured limb, &c. there is no supply of splints, bandages or other assistance at the dispensary. No physician but the authorized attendant of the dispensary can have prescriptions compounded there. The poor lying-in women of the district are attended from the dispensary by the medical attendant, on the production of a subscriber's ticket.

With respect to vaccination there is no rule; the medical attendant does not give away vaccine matter to any neighbouring physician, nor does he vaccinate any children at the dispensary. He has a good opinion of vaccination, but does not approve of inoculating with small-pock virus. The public have considerable confidence in the efficacy of vaccination, and small-pox has not been frequent of late years.

Extras, such as wine, &c. cannot be furnished out of the funds. The sick poor got wine when requisite last year, 1831, but by means of an extra subscription. There is not any charitable establishment in the district or neighbourhood on which the physician could give to a poor patient an order for a supply of food, fuel or clothing.

The institution is managed by a board of 21 governors, the medical attendant not being one of the number; nor are the affairs of the institution entirely managed by him, nor is any person ex officio in the principal direction. The general meetings of the board are only annual, and not more than about five attend them. Minutes of the proceedings are kept.

There is a committee of six, who meet quarterly, and receive a report from the medical attendant. Three persons generally come to these quarterly meetings; on these occasions the tickets which have been presented at the dispensary during the preceding quarter are inspected, and also the patients' register.

The sole non-medical officer is the secretary, collector and treasurer, the duties of which offices are combined in the person of one individual.
A very old man is at present employed to attend at the dispensary on open days, for which he is paid 1*l.* 10*s.* annually.
Reports are made up by the Committee in February of each year, printed, and furnished to the subscribers generally. Copies of those for the years ending 1st February 1833 and 1st February 1834 were furnished to the Assistant Commissioners. The reports enter into a full detail of the condition of the institution, its finances, receipt and expenditure, list of subscribers, diseases treated, and number of patients relieved, and on whose estate, &c.
The landed proprietors of this district are non-resident, and it is stated by the medical attendant of the dispensary that there are not a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.
The funds arise from voluntary subscriptions, and the county grant. The charity has no other income or property, and mainly depends on the bounty of its patron, the proprietor of the estate on which it is situated. The subscribers are all of a respectable class, and no stipulation is ever made to receive advice or medicine gratis.

Rev. THOMAS VESEY.—Rev. JOHN WEST; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.
THE district of this dispensary extends into seven parishes, but the number of the population included therein could not be given. The dispensary is intended for the poor on the estates of the gentlemen who subscribe. The medical attendant is not liable to be sent to a sick pauper at a distance exceeding six miles; the only medical institution within which distance is the Keady dispensary.
The want of intern accommodation is materially felt; and it would be a great benefit to the neighbourhood, if a small hospital were established for fevers and accidents.
The dispensary is held at a small well built new brick house, containing eight rooms; the shop is small, but neatly arranged, but there is not any waiting-room for patients. The house is rented at 16*l.* per annum by the committee, for the use of the dispensary. It would be much better if the dispensary building was the property of the charity.
A gentleman,

A gentleman, about 44 years of age, who is a graduate in medicine of the University of Glasgow, from which place he also possesses a diploma from the College of Surgeons, and a certificate for midwifery, is the only medical officer of this institution, in which he resides, and to which he was appointed in 1815, having been previously engaged in private practice at Banbridge; at present he has no other appointment, but continues to attend to his private professional pursuits. In case of illness or absence, he is obliged to give notice to the committee. The days of attendance at the dispensary are Tuesdays and Fridays, from ten till one o'clock each day, but the medical attendant is in the habit of attending daily, and at any hour, and is assisted by his son, who is an apothecary, and sells his own medicines for profit in the dispensary shop.

The medical attendant's salary is fixed at 40*l.* which is paid from the general fund, but in 1833, from the low state of the funds, he received only 36*l.* He is provided with unfurnished lodgings and a small garden and stable, but has no further allowance or perquisite; in fact, the amount of his salary depends on the finances of the charity. The gentlemen present, on being asked whether there was a sufficient guarantee against a man combining with friends to raise an institution for the sake of the medical appointment, answered, that "the grand jury, they understood, cannot refuse to grant a sum equal to the sum subscribed." They are not aware of any controlling power.

Since the appointment of the present medical attendant, there has not been any election; there was not any notice of his appointment sent to the grand jury.

The gentlemen present did not consider the neighbourhood sufficient to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary.

Should the medical officer be harsh to or neglect the patients, they can complain to the committee or to any subscriber, without fear of bringing on themselves the enmity of the medical officer or subscribers; and it is considered they are aware of having such a mode of reference.

The apartment in which the medicines are kept is neatly and properly arranged, and contains the usual medicines, which are now supplied by Messrs. Allen of Dublin, from whom they are ordered and paid for by the treasurer, at the requisition of the medical attendant, under whose care they are placed. The medicines used in private practice and those belonging to the dispensary are kept in the same room, but in separate cases. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution. Leeches are not furnished to the dispensary patients from the funds, but the medical officer provides them occasionally at his own expense.

There is a register kept of some of the patients, but it is of no value as a document. No register can be produced beyond May 1834. Persons requiring capital operations to be performed, generally go to Armagh; the medical attendant here has, however, performed a few within the last three years.

All the sick poor on the estates of the subscribers are entitled to relief on producing a ticket having the signature of one subscriber; yet many are attended without such a recommendation; of these no account whatever is kept. The subscribers are by rule limited in the number of tickets to be issued; the rule, however, is not attended to.

In this district, persons have been known to get tickets and obtain advice and medicine, who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance, but there are no poor subscribers.

Patients are seen at the establishment, and if unable to come there, are attended at their own homes in any part of the district, at any hour of the day or night, provided they are furnished with visiting tickets; and there is no extra allowance for visiting. Neighbouring practitioners are not authorized to have their prescriptions made up at the dispensary. The medical officer attends all midwifery cases, when the patient has a ticket, and sometimes without a ticket. The prescriptions are not now kept or entered. The medical officer supplies vaccine matter for the dispensary, but not for the neighbourhood; he also performs vaccination on any day the child is brought, but there exists no particular arrangement on this subject. Small-pock virus is not used, and there is very little small-pox in the district. The poor have perfect confidence in vaccination.

There is no wine or other extra furnished by this institution; and there is no charity in the neighbourhood for affording food, clothing or fuel to the sick poor, on which an order can be given by the medical officer; but the medical attendant occasionally recommends poor patients to the neighbouring gentry, for wine, flannel and some other comforts.

The general management rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, but the medical officer is not a governor. Until October 1832, the meetings were held only annually, and the affairs of this charity were left entirely to the management of the surgeon; there are in future to be quarterly meetings. Formerly, no minutes were kept. There is no person ex officio, in the principal direction.

At present there is a managing committee, consisting of six subscribers.

The only officer not medical is the gentleman who acts as treasurer, secretary and collector.

Some reports are made and printed, relative to the admissions, discharges, cures, relieved, deaths, &c. &c.

The gentlemen present are of opinion that this district affords a sufficient number of persons able to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, should it be hereafter thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

During the present inquiry the treasurer was absent, therefore the books of the institution could not be seen, nor the state of the accounts ascertained. The institution possesses no capital stock in houses, land, &c. from which any annual income is derived.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE Assistant Commissioners could not ascertain what amount of population the district, for which this dispensary is intended, comprizes; they were however informed that the most distant point which the medical attendant is expected to visit is about four miles. The medical institutions within six miles of Poyntzpass are the Mallaglass, Markethill, Tandaragee, and Banbridge dispensaries.

This dispensary possesses intern accommodation for general diseases, not contagious, consisting of two rooms up stairs, with four bedsteads and bedding. The bedsteads are of iron, with neat mattresses. This furniture was presented by a lady, to whom this part of the charity in fact belongs, and on whom it depends. The room is not supported by public subscription, there being no fund whatever to keep the ward open, and it is with the greatest difficulty that any patients can be taken into it. There was, at the period of the examination, one patient in it. Patients have been kept there at an expense of less than 4d. a day. The medicine is supplied from the dispensary. A woman lives in the house, who acts as nurse.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary is held at a neat small house in the town of Poyntzpass. The room in which the medicines are kept is small, but neat, and there is a good waiting room up stairs in the ward for the patients, described before. The house is held at will, under the proprietor of the place, who does not charge any rent for it.

Medical Officers.

The medical attendant (who is about 30 years of age) is a graduate in medicine, and member of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh; he resides near the dispensary, to which he was appointed about three years ago, having been previously engaged in private practice at Portadown; he holds no other public appointment, but continues to pursue private practice; he also holds a midwifery certificate from Dr. Hamilton, Edinburgh.

Payment.

The salary of the medical officer is 50*l.* per annum, without any allowance for lodging or board, or any kind of conveyance. He has had an annual allowance of 10*l.* for visits, but this is conditional. With the exception of the want of some experience in the management of the register, the charity seems fairly and honorably managed on the part of the medical man.

Election.

At the last vacancy, notice of an election was given in the newspapers, and testimonials were required. There were four candidates on that occasion. At present there is one other medical gentleman resident in the neighbourhood eligible to the dispensary.

Pharmacy.

The medicine room has been already described. The medicines appear to be in sufficient quantity and of good quality, and the more delicate and expensive kinds are used. The medicines are supplied by the Glasgow Apothecaries Company, on the medical officer's order, he having previously obtained leave from the quarterly meeting to order them. The medical attendant states, that he does not purchase any spirits for medicine, lard, salts, cream of tartar or sulphur, from neighbouring dealers, and he considers it cheaper and better to buy tinctures and ointments from the druggist with whom he deals. He forms this opinion from having inspected invoices, and having compared them with the prices at the different shops. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution.

Patients Registration.

A register is kept by the medical attendant, which distinguishes the number of patients who came to the dispensary on each day, the name of the patient, the name of the recommender, the disease, date, and prescription. The patient's name is re-entered every time he attends, or at least every time he gets medicine; by this means the number of dispensations of medicines are known, and the number of applicants are calculated by means of the tickets, which are not filed, but kept loosely in a desk. On the last dispensing day, there were 10 or 12 attending. The number who attended last year amounted to 450. The medical attendant not having been called on to submit to the grand jury the number of applicants at the dispensary, has never done so within the last three years. He has performed four operations for strangulated hernia; two of the patients died, and two recovered.

Who entitled to
Relief.

There is a rule, that each patient should have a ticket, but it is not absolutely necessary, as the medical attendant never refuses advice or medicine to any sick poor person, and it has occurred occurred that persons got advice and medicine at the dispensary, who from their circumstances were able to pay for such, but, as they brought tickets, the medical attendant did not refuse them.

Patients are seen at the dispensary, and when too ill to come there, are attended at their own houses, in any part of the district; but there are no bye-laws on the subject, and the medical attendant, at the period of his election, was not informed that it was imperative on him to visit patients in the night. No practitioner unconnected with the dispensary is authorized to have his prescriptions compounded there. Lying-in cases are generally attended by midwives, and whenever the midwife informs the medical attendant that the case is difficult, he attends, but not otherwise. The medicines prescribed here are such as are usually considered proper for the complaints. There is no rule as to vaccination, it is not administered at the dispensary, but the doctor is in the habit of vaccinating all children brought to his residence gratis; his custom is to insist that one shilling be deposited with him when he performs the operation, to insure the return of the child, and when the child is brought back, the shilling is returned; he never inoculates with small-pock virus, and would not do so. There were at the period of this examination many cases of small-pock about the town, but fatal cases are rare; it is believed that there are persons who inoculate with small-pock virus, and the confidence of the public in vaccination is greatly diminished.

No wine or other extras are furnished to the sick poor from the resources of this institution, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood which affords them food, fuel or clothing on the order of the doctor.

The nature of the only intern accommodation afforded by this establishment has been already stated.

The general management rests with the subscribers of one guinea and upwards, but a managing committee was appointed three years ago, and they have since undertaken to superintend the affairs of the institution. There has been no general meeting since the appointment of the committee, who meet quarterly, but it is with great difficulty that a quorum can be assembled, seldom more than two or three being present. Minutes of their proceedings are kept.

The sole officer not medical is the treasurer, an office at present filled by the Curate of the parish of Acton. The medical attendant stated, that he had informed the treasurer of the visit of the Commissioners, but he, the treasurer, went from home on the very day of the visit, and did not send any documents to the dispensary. The Assistant Commissioners being informed that the treasurer would be at home in the evening of the day on which they visited this dispensary, wrote a note saying that they would return on the following day, which they accordingly did, but he had not returned; they could thus obtain no further information relative to the management. The neighbouring gentry and the governors generally seem to take little interest in the dispensary. None of the governors were present at the examination.

Reports were made to the committee, but not printed.

The medical attendant was quite unable to give us any information on the subject of Accounts in the absence of the treasurer.

The funds lie in the treasurer's hands.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Col. BLACKER.—THOMAS CARLETON, esq.—Rev. Mr. FOOT;—Dr. MALLAGH, of Portadown;—Rev. Mr. MORGAN, P.P.—Dr. ROBINSON, of Portadown;—The Venerable Archdeacon SAURINE, of Dromore;—and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THE population of the district of this dispensary is roughly estimated at 7,000, spread over 6,125 English acres. The most distant point at which the doctor is expected to visit is about three miles. The medical institutions within six miles are the Lurgan and Tanderagee dispensaries, and a private dispensary belonging to Lord Mandeville, at Portadown. The prevailing opinion here is, that the dispensaries through the country are far too few in number, and it is thought that this district is such a one, in point of extent and other circumstances, as might be reasonably placed under the care of one individual; and that it would unquestionably be highly useful to attach properly sized wards for cases of fever and accident to all dispensaries.

The dispensary is held in an old school-house, granted for the purpose rent free, by the Archdeacon of Dromore, who is Rector of the parish. The accommodation consists of the shop and a large waiting room; the shop is properly and conveniently fitted up. The gentlemen present are of opinion that it would be desirable, if it could be so arranged, that dispensary buildings should in all cases be the property of the charity.

The only medical officer attached to this dispensary is a physician, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. He resides at Levaghry, about the centre of the district; he was appointed by election at the formation of the institution, previous to which period he had been practising in the parish; he holds no other appointment. The days stipulated for his attendance at the dispensary are Mondays and Fridays, from eleven to one o'clock, or till all patients in attendance are seen; he however keeps a portion of the dispensary medicines medicines at his own house, and prescribes for all who choose to call on him at any time. In case he should be obliged by illness or otherwise to absent himself, he would provide a proper medical practitioner to act for him. There is not any person resident at the dispensary. The medicines are all dispensed by the medical officer himself.

The amount of salary to be paid to the physician is not yet determined. Should he be harsh to or neglect the patients they can complain to a subscriber, and are aware of that fact. It was stated that the medical attendant has discharged his duty with great zeal, and has given general satisfaction.

The stock of medicines, which are well arranged in a cupboard, are of good quality and sufficient in quantity, including the more delicate and expensive kinds, as quinine, morphia, &c. The present stock was purchased from Mr. Walkington of Belfast, and paid for by the treasurer: it cost 41*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* They are all locked up by the medical attendant, who keeps the key, and none are ever allowed to be sold. The medical officer keeps medicine in his own house for private practice. There are no surgical instruments or pharmaceutical apparatus belonging to the institution, but, in cases of accident or fracture, splints and bandages would be supplied; leeches are not given.

A register is kept, which distinguishes the name, age, residence, recommendation, date of admission, disease, result and observations. Three midwifery cases have been attended since opening the dispensary. The institution was opened for the first time last February (1834) and has since (up to September) afforded relief to 343 sick poor.

Those entitled to relief are the paupers of the district who can procure tickets. The domestic servants of subscribers may have tickets also, but care is taken by the subscribers that none but proper objects should have relief.

No attempt has ever been heard of in this charity, of any compact having been made with individuals so as to swell the subscription list and obtain larger grants from the county. One signature to each recommendation is sufficient, and the subscribers are not limited as to number.

Extern patients are visited in any part of the district whenever the nature of their cases require that they should be seen at home, but if able to come, they must attend at the dispensary. No prescriptions are made up at the dispensary but those of the authorized medical attendant.

Extras, such as wine, will be furnished to the patients when required; and flannel, when absolutely necessary, would be given; but there is no charity in the neighbourhood on which the surgeon could give an order to the sick poor for a supply of food, fuel or clothing.

The management of the charity is vested in the subscribers, who take an active interest in it, and under their management it appears to be honourably and economically conducted; it is not in any essential particular left to the management of the doctor, neither is he or any other person ex officio in the principal direction. The fixed meetings of the subscribers are the first Mondays in January, April, July and October. Five are to constitute a quorum. Minutes of their proceedings are kept.

The treasurer is also collector and secretary: the election for these officers is annual.

The opinion of the gentlemen present being requested, they state that there are a great number of persons of all persuasions here highly intelligent, able and willing to assist in investigating the wants of the poor and administering to their relief, if it should hereafter be found desirable to extend the mode of assistance afforded by dispensaries.

The income is derived from subscriptions and the county grant, the former amounting to 52*l.*, the sum procured for the latter to 51*l.* The charity does not possess any funded or other property producing income; neither does it depend for existence on the bounty of any one or two individuals; and its duration is not likely to cease. The subscriptions are not attended with any stipulations that the subscriber or any of his family are to receive advice or medicine gratis.

All monies are collected by the treasurer, in whose custody they remain until wanted.

The principal item of expenditure has been medicine, amounting to 41*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* Every thing connected with this charity deserves approbation; and the whole appears to be honourably and economically conducted.

Dispensary.

Rev. JOHN COYNE, P.P.—JOHN CREERY, esq.—Rev. RICHARD DILL.—Rev. ROBERT HAWTHORN.
Mr. RICHARD TROTTER.—Rev. JAMES WILSON, Curate; and the Medical Attendant.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district of the Tanderagee dispensary is about five miles in diameter, and the most distant point about four miles from the charity. The population of the district is not exactly known, but the town of Tanderagee alone contains 1,600 inhabitants. The medical institutions of a similar nature within six miles are, the Poyntzpass, Banbridge, Markethill and Seagoe dispensaries, and a small private hospital at Tanderagee, and a private dispensary at Portadown, maintained at Lord Mandeville's own expense. There is no district near this without a dispensary. Applicants are never refused medical assistance who bring tickets to the Tanderagee dispensary; but it is the unanimous opinion that a very great benefit would result to the community if all dispensaries had wards attached for receiving cases of fevers and accidents.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary is situated near the centre of the town, and consists of two rooms; the front room contains the medicine, and serves also as a waiting room; the inner room is appropriated appropriated for a consulting room, in which the medical attendant sees patients. These rooms are hired at an annual rent of 6*l.* 6*s.*; but it is considered that it would be preferable that dispensary buildings should in all cases be the property of the charity.

The sole medical officer is a graduate in medicine of the university of Edinburgh, and a member of the Apothecaries Company in Dublin. He resides close to the dispensary, at the establishment of which in the year 1820 he obtained his appointment. He had been previously a medical practitioner in the town of Tanderagee; he has not any other appointment of a like nature, but he attends gratuitously a small private hospital. He also practises as a physician, and has two apprentices, who assist him in his dispensary and other duties; but as he superintends every thing himself, it cannot be said that the duty is ever done by proxy, although there is always an apprentice at hand to afford immediate assistance in cases of accident, or to dispense medicines, &c.

The salary of the medical attendant is now fixed at 50*l.* per annum, derived from the general funds of the charity. The original arrangement was, that he should receive 40*l.* salary, and 2*s.* 6*d.* for every visit paid, provided the distance did not exceed a mile, he keeping an account of those visits, and making a charge accordingly. It was in a few years found advisable to change this arrangement, and he receives 10*l.* in lieu of the payment for visits. He is not provided with board or lodging, or any other allowance whatever. If the committee or subscribers choose to authorize exorbitant salaries or allowances, the grand jury can diminish or altogether refuse the grant.

The medical attendant was elected by the subscribers, and appears to discharge his duty faithfully and efficiently. There is no limitation as to age, either in the appointment or removal of medical officers.

The room in which the medicines are kept is neatly and properly arranged. The medicines appear to be of good quality and in sufficient quantity; some few only of the more delicate medicines are used, such as quinine; they are all supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George, on the order of the medical attendant, and paid for by the treasurer.

The medicines, for the year ending

	£.	s.	d.
August 1831 cost	-	-	30 17 3
— 1832	-	-	49 8 10
— 1833	-	-	41 11 7
	-	-	42 17 11

Since the decease of the late treasurer, the accounts have not been kept in a business-like manner. The medicines for the private practice of the medical attendant are not kept at the dispensary, but in a shop just opposite.

The number of sick relieved, were

In 1832	1,599
1833	2,204
1834	1,913

As nearly as can be calculated from the above data, each patient costs 6½*d.* in medicines only.

There are no surgical or other instruments of any kind in the dispensary, neither are the patients supplied with leeches.

The quantities of some particular medicines charged against the dispensary in particular years seem to be remarkable; thus in the year 1831-1832 Jalap alone is charged in the druggists accounts 6*l.* 19*s.*, in the years 1832-1833 Æmg. 3*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.*

Two distinct registers of patients are kept; in one the name, disease and number only are entered; in the other, the number that attend each day, patient's name, recommender, disease, and prescription. Midwifery cases are not attended from the dispensary.

Any person who can procure a ticket is entitled to advice and medicine at the dispensary. Domestic servants have not been in the habit of having tickets. As much caution as possible is used to prevent impositions on the charity, which have been sometimes attempted.

Every applicant must have a ticket, to which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, and they are unlimited in the number. It has not yet occurred that a poor person was unable to get a ticket. Out of 63 tickets produced at the examination, as presented at the dispensary from the 26th August to the 12th of September, 57 are signed by the same name, viz. J. Mains, a grain merchant residing close by. The medical attendant states, that poor persons are never refused assistance, whether they have a ticket or not, for, as he himself is a governor, he can relieve as many as he pleases.

The sick poor are seen at the dispensary, and when unable to come there, the medical attendant is liable to visit at any part of the district, at any hour of the day or night; but he is very seldom called upon to go in the night. Assistance is occasionally afforded by the dispensary in cases of accident. Medical practitioners unconnected with the institution cannot have their prescriptions made up there. Lying-in cases are not attended from the dispensary, but by midwives; but accidents are seldom heard of. The prescriptions given here are written down, and the medicines are those usual for the cases.

Vaccination is not performed at the dispensary; but the medical attendant vaccinates all who call at his residence, on condition of each depositing 1*s.* to insure the return of the child, in order that the effect may be noted. The medical officer has a good opinion of the operation, and the public have much confidence in its efficacy. He states that, at the request of two neighbouring gentlemen, he inoculated seven of their children with pock virus.

virus. These children had been previously vaccinated, and none of them took the infection. Small-pox has not been frequent here of late years.
Wine or other extras are not furnished to the sick poor, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood on which the doctor can give an order for a supply of food, clothing or fuel; although by a resolution of one of the annual meetings, the medical attendant is empowered to purchase these articles for the poor, he has not availed himself of the power. Whenever lunatic cases occur, they are transmitted to the Armagh Lunatic Asylum.

The general management nominally rests with the body of subscribers of a guinea and upwards; but they meet only once in the year, and no minutes of their proceedings are kept. The medical attendant is a subscriber, but he rarely attends the meetings, yet the dispensary has been almost entirely under his management. He seems deservedly to possess the entire confidence of the governors.

The only officer except the surgeon is the treasurer, a tradesman in the town, who likewise acts as secretary and collector. The gentleman who had been previously treasurer was an agent of a neighbouring nobleman, and he held the office till his death. The present treasurer keeps two shops in the town, and occasionally supplies some articles to the dispensary.

There are not any stores belonging to the charity, except medicines. Those of the common kind, and to a small amount, such as cream tartar, sulphur, Epsom salts, &c. are occasionally bought from the treasurer.

Reports have been formerly made and printed; but the only documents of the sort to be seen by the Assistant Commissioners were some detached sheets, giving an account of meetings held in 1820, and one printed report for 1832. The gentlemen present state that this neighbourhood contains an ample number of persons qualified and willing to assist in investigating the wants of the poor and administering relief, if it should be hereafter found expedient to extend the system of relief to be afforded by dispensaries.

The income of this dispensary arises from subscriptions and the county grant, amounting in the following years to—granted by the county, from some informality in the application.

	1832.	1833.	1834.

Subscriptions	60 - -	60 - -	41 - -

A list of the subscribers for the years 1833 and 1834 was furnished to the Assistant Commissioners, by which it appears that in the former year a nobleman subscribed 21*l.*, but in the latter year only 5*l.* 5*s.*, in consequence of having established a private dispensary for his own estate.

The Tanderagee Dispensary does not depend for existence on the bounty of any one or two particular subscribers; and so far as the present subscriptions go, it is not likely to cease, but it possesses no other property yielding any income.

The principal items were, salary of medical attendant, and medicines. The accounts are passed once a year. Besides the dispensary, there was a house built at Tandaragee for a cholera hospital, which has been converted into a fever hospital, under the care of the medical attendant of the dispensary, who states that in the winter of 1832, there were forty patients in it at one time. There are at present two patients in it, one supported by the parish of Kilmore, the other by the medical attendant himself. Donations and the product of a charity sermon have been applied to the use of this hospital. It is a good commodious building, 42 feet by 21 in the clear, divided into two wards, and a kitchen between: the latter only is ceiled. The building cost 130*l.* The proprietor, a good resident landlord, gives the ground, about one acre, rent-free. The hospital is furnished with nine iron bedsteads, straw mattresses, and a good supply of bed-clothes.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Tynan Dispensary.

Rev. W. MAULEVERER, Rector of Tynan;—Rev. JAMES MAULEVERER, Curate; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THIS dispensary is intended for the parish of Tynan, the population of which amounts to upwards of 11,539 persons, and for part of the parishes of Armagh and Derrynoose, the population of which could not be given. The medical attendant is expected to visit patients at a distance of about eight miles.

The medical institutions of this description within six miles are, the Caledon dispensary, the Glasslough dispensary, and the Middletown dispensary, which latter is intended for the Middletown estate, a property held in trust for charitable purposes, the trustees of which property property deemed it right to establish that dispensary for it exclusively, withdrawing their subscription from this establishment.

A nobleman, who is a principal proprietor, finding it inconvenient for his tenantry to come so far as Tynan, has provided other medical assistance. The gentlemen present consider that it would be a great advantage to attach to all dispensaries a convenient ward for cases of fever or serious accidents.

The trustees of the Middletown estate have attached to their dispensary a fever hospital, capable of receiving at least 16 patients.

The medical institutions in this quarter are not considered too numerous; there is no district near this without a dispensary except Augnacloy. Indeed with the fever hospital and dispensary at Middletown on the one side, at about two miles and a half distant, and the well managed dispensary at Caledon on the other side, distant about one mile and a half, the necessity of the Tynan dispensary is not at present very apparent.

The dispensary is held in part of the house which the medical attendant occupies himself, and the governors pay him 3 l. per annum for the use of the apartment. The room is divided so as to provide a waiting room. The entire establishment was in a bad state of repair, but it was in contemplation to have it renewed. It is considered that in these cases, so long as the support of the dispensary depends on voluntary contributions, it would be better the dispensary building were held by lease.

The medical officer attached to this dispensary is about 36 years of age, an army surgeon of the Dublin College, and holds a certificate for midwifery from Dublin; he was appointed to this institution in 1819, by election, having been previously living at the fever hospital Dublin. He holds no other appointment, except the half pay as militia surgeon. In case of absence or illness the medical officer procures a substitute; he is allowed private practice. The days for attendance at the dispensary, are Mondays and Thursdays, from nine to twelve o'clock. The duty is not done by proxy. There is no one but the medical officer constantly on the spot to attend in case of sudden accident, and he dispenses all the medicines. The medical attendant is the only paid officer, he receives 50 l. per annum from the general fund. No allowance for horse or other conveyance, board or lodging, but in former years, when the dispensary had larger funds, he was allowed for house rent, and the keep of a horse, and likewise the wages of a porter. If the committee or subscribers awarded excessive salaries or allowances, the grand jury have a control to refuse or diminish the grant.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards; there is no limitation as to age, either in their appointment or removal. The grand jury does not get any notice of these appointments. Of late years there has not been any vacancy for medical officer, nor has any mortality occurred. This district does not contain a sufficient number of persons capable of paying for medical advice, who could support a professional man, exclusive of the dispensary emolument. If the surgeon should be harsh to, or neglect the patients, they can complain to any subscriber, and are aware that they can resort to that mode of redress.

The room in which the medicines are kept is neatly and properly arranged; the medicines are in sufficient quantity and of good quality, with a moderate supply of the more delicate kinds, as quinine, &c. The medicines are bought of Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin, through the treasurer, at the requisition of the surgeon, but the latter occasionally gets some drugs in the village, to the amount of 4 l. or 5 l. per annum; the stock (no part of which is permitted to be sold) is placed under the sole care of the surgeon, who has no stock of medicines of his own, and does not supply any to his private patients.

The institution does not possess any surgical instruments, nor apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c. Leeches are not supplied to the patients. The cost of medicines was, for the year ending—

The druggist's bill from 1833 to 1834 amounted to 21 l. 15 s. 6 d., but there are contingent expenses for medicines, such as salts, honey, sugar, lard, sundries, bought in the village, which raise the amount to 33 l. 8 s. 2 d. The practice of getting some medicines from the druggists, and some from persons on the spot, cannot be too strongly deprecated.

A register is kept which distinguishes the number of patients, their names, residence, date, names of recommendors, disease and observations. Tickets are required to be produced by the patients on applying, but they are never filed by the medical attendant, nor do the subscribers meet and check the register in any way. Neither is any copy or summary transmitted to the grand jury. There were not any capital operations performed here within the last three years. Within the same period, the medical attendant has attended 11 midwifery cases from the dispensary.

Any person to whom a subscriber chooses to give a ticket is entitled to advice and medicine at the dispensary, provided he resides within the district. The domestic servants of subscribers may have tickets, and it happens occasionally that some persons impose upon the charity and obtain relief gratis, who are able to pay, but subscribers are never attended gratuitously. Each patient must have a ticket as above stated, in obtaining which, there is no difficulty, and subscribers are not limited in the number either of visiting or home tickets.

Any patient having a dispensary visiting ticket, is entitled to be visited at any distance within the district, day or night, but in case a fracture or other accident should occur, the dispensary is unprovided with splints, bandages, &c., or such other necessary means of rendering immediate assistance.

No person, except the medical attendant of the institution, can have prescriptions made up at the dispensary. There is not any prescription book kept. Lying-in women are attended only in cases of difficulty; these poor women are chiefly attended by midwives, but accidents are not here known to arise.

There is no rule to oblige the medical attendant to give vaccination gratis, but the custom is, that all who apply are vaccinated on leaving 1s. to insure the return of the child; the medical attendant never does and would not inoculate with small-pox. This latter disease has not been frequent for some years, but four cases occurred lately. Vaccination is found efficacious, and the confidence of the poor in it, is good.

Latterly, extras, such as wine, &c., have not been allowed, and there is no charity in the neighbourhood, on which the medical attendant can give an order for a supply of food, fuel or clothing for the sick poor. Lunatics are sent to the Armagh district asylum.

The general management is vested in those who subscribe a guinea a year or upwards. They meet twice in the year, and minutes of their proceedings are kept. The medical officer is not a governor, nor is there any person ex officio, in the principle direction; although the affairs of the charity have latterly been left very much to the medical officer.

There is not any managing committee.

The treasurer is the only non-medical officer; there are no bye-laws printed with respect to the elections of these officers. No officer has as yet been suspended or removed.

The funds have been greatly diminished of late years, owing to the withdrawal of the Sterne bequest, and a neighbouring nobleman's subscription; the sums derived from both these sources being now devoted to other charities.

The amount of receipts in the three past years were as follows:—

	1831.			1832.			1833.
Annual Subscriptions -	76	8	—	72	9	—	76	12	—
Presentments -	32	—	6	36	4	6	36	12	—

The poorer classes do not subscribe. There are no particular subscribers or family, on the continuance of whose bounty the existence of the charity depends.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain with him until wanted.

The total expenditure was in the year—

	£.	s.	d.
1831 -	120	9	4½
1832 -	129	16	6
1833 -	131	16	2

The principal items of outlay are medicines and surgeon's salary.

Persons who attended the Examination.

McCarthy Colclough, esq., Chief Constable of Police—James Elliott, esq.—Captain Harrison—William Moore, esq.; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

This dispensary was originally established because there was not any institution in the town which provided domiciliary visits to the sick poor.* The most distant part to which the medical attendant is liable to visit, is one mile in any direction from the town. All persons who apply can have advice, but medicine is furnished only to those who bring tickets.

The dispensary is held in a small thatched house, held at a rent of 5*l.* per annum. The room in which the medicines are dispensed is small, but considered sufficiently large for the purpose; there is also a waiting-room.

The sole medical officer of this institution is a graduate in medicine of the University of Edinburgh, and a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London; he is about 33 years of age, and resides close by the dispensary, to which he was appointed at its foundation, having previously been engaged in practice in the town. He is also physician to a private dispensary, supported by a neighbouring nobleman, for which he is paid a salary; but as permission to inspect this dispensary was refused, the Assistant Commissioners can furnish no report on the manner in which it is conducted. The medical officer does not hold any other appointment, but is allowed private practice. In case of illness or temporary absence, he is bound to provide a qualified person as his substitute. The medical officer is expected to be always in attendance, to afford assistance in cases of accident or other emergency, and, on every Tuesday for the entire day.

The

* It is questionable why the fever hospital and county infirmary, both in the town, should not attend to the town portion of this duty.

The amount of salary formerly paid to the medical attendant, was only 30*l.* per annum ; he now receives 40*l.*, but without allowances of any kind whatever.

The medical attendant was elected by the governors, the vacancy having been advertised in the newspapers, but he was the only candidate. The Assistant Commissioners have reason to believe that the administration of this charity, so far as the surgeon is concerned, is zealously and ably managed.

The shop in which the medicines are dispensed was neatly and conveniently arranged, and the drawers, bottles, &c. in proper order. The medicines appeared to be of good quality, and in sufficient supply, including those of the more delicate descriptions, purchased of Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin, on the surgeons order ; the invoices are discharged by the treasurer.

The medicines are all under the care of the medical attendant. The institution is not provided with any apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c., nor surgical instruments. The surgeon does not keep or furnish medicine in his private practice. Leeches are not supplied to the patients.

A register is very carefully kept of every person who has been supplied with medicine, which distinguishes the name and residence of the patient, the nature of the case, the prescription and the name of the recommender. The tickets are all filed, and the register checked from them by the subscribers. Those only who have tickets, and live within a mile of the institution, are visited at home, but midwifery cases are not attended.

All persons having tickets are entitled to advice and medicine. No attempt has been made to participate in the benefits of this charity by persons whose circumstances are not such as to require gratuitous relief.

Patients are seen on any day of the week, but on the market day (Tuesday), the medical attendant is constantly in attendance ; the poor are also attended at night in cases of emergency. Neighbouring practitioners are not privileged to have their prescriptions made up at the institution. The prescriptions adopted by the surgeon, appeared to be such as are usual for the diseases treated. Vaccine matter is furnished to the neighbouring practitioners when inquired for, and vaccination is besides performed at the institution, and the public have great confidence in its results ; the surgeon will not inoculate with small-pock virus ; small-pock does not prevail in this district. The medical attendant states, that he had strong reasons for fearing that from some cause or other, the vaccine matter provided by the Dublin Vaccine Institutions is not nearly as good as that provided by the London Institutions.

Wine or other extras are not afforded from the funds of this charity, nor does there exist any charity for supplying food, clothing or fuel to the poor, on which the medical attendant can give an order.

The subscribers are the general managers, they meet twice a year to audit the accounts. There is not any person ex officio, in the principal direction. Minutes are not kept of these meetings.

The managing committee consist of 12 members, some of whom visit on most dispensary days ; of their proceedings minutes are not kept.

The gentleman who fills the situation of treasurer and secretary, is the sole non-medical officer. Should it hereafter be thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries, this neighbourhood contains an ample number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor.

The principal source from which the funds of the institution are derived, are private subscriptions, amounting to 40*l.* 17*s.*, and the County Grant, which amounts to 40*l.* 17*s.* The charity does not depend upon the bounty of any one individual, nor is it considered likely that it will cease to exist, although it possesses neither capital, stock in house, land, &c. or funded property, from which any annual income is derived.

The funds remain with the treasurer, who disposes of them as they are required.

The general heads of expenditure are—

	£. s. d.
Surgeon's Salary	- - 40 - -
Medicines, about	- - 25 - -
Rent and Sundries, about	- - 11 - -

There is no regular instruction given, but the medical attendant has pupils who assist him, and to whom he gives all the instruction the nature of the institution allows.

* Ballymacarrett
Dispensary.

THE population of the district for which this dispensary is intended, amounts to about 5,000, and the most distant point to which the surgeon is liable to be called, is not more than one English mile. In Belfast there is a general hospital, called a fever hospital, with a dispensary attached, and one other dispensary viz., the Chapel-lane dispensary. There are within a radius of six miles a Lying-in hospital and a Lying-in charity, Breda dispensary, Hollywood and Whitehouse dispensaries, and the Ballylesson dispensary. This district is too large for one medical man, but is not divided, because there are no means of increasing the funds. All applicants are attended, but the rule is, that every one shall have a ticket. Great misery has occurred to the poor from want of intern accommodation. It is very desirable to attach a building to each dispensary for the accommodation of bad fever cases and accidents.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary is established at a small house in one of the principal streets in the town, it is two stories high, but does not contain a waiting-room for patients; the shop is, however, so contrived that many can be accommodated at a time; there is no furniture belonging to the institution. The upper part of the house is reserved for the accommodation of the medical attendant; the situation is low and damp, and the water very bad. The house, with a small garden and out-house attached, is held at will, but it was considered that it would be much better, if the buildings belonged to the charity.

Medical Officers.

The sole medical officer of the dispensary (who is about 33 years of age) graduated in Edinburgh, at which place he also became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and possesses a license from the same University to practice midwifery; he resides at the institution, to which he was appointed as general medical attendant (except as accoucheur) by election, in September 1832, having previously been practicing in Belfast; he now holds no other appointment, but pursues private practice: he is not a master apothecary. In case of illness or absence, he would inform the committee, and provide a competent substitute, but there is no rule on the subject. He attends daily from nine till eleven o'clock in the morning, and from six till seven in the evening; his duty is never done by proxy, he is always on the spot, and dispenses the medicines himself.

Payment.

The salary of the medical attendant is 60*l.* per annum, and 10*l.* house rent, paid from the general fund, without any allowance for a horse or board. The control of the grand jury is amply sufficient to prevent the abuse of making extravagant allowances.

Election.

The medical officer is elected by subscribers of a guinea and upwards. The custom on occasion of a vacancy is to advertize, and testimonials are considered indispensable. No limitation exists as to the age of medical officers. There were only two candidates at the last election. There are neither notice of election or certificate of qualification sent to the grand jury. The district is not sufficient to support a medical man independently of the dispensary, nor is there any one resident within its limits, except the surgeon of this institution. No mortality has occurred amongst the medical men. In case of harshness or neglect on the part of the medical officer towards the poor patients, the latter can and do appeal to the subscribers.

Pharmacy.

The room in which the medicines are kept is in very good condition; the medicines good in quality and sufficient in quantity, as far as regards the more common medicines, but the tinctures and more expensive descriptions are in small quantity; the medicines are supplied by an established druggist in Belfast, who subscribes. The medicines are ordered by the committee, at the requisition of the medical officer. Up to March 1834, from the period of the original formation of the charity in September 1833, the medicine cost 16*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*; they are always under the care of the medical officer, as he resides at the dispensary; no medicines belonging to the institution are sold, but the surgeon is allowed to sell medicines on his own account. The dispensary is provided with all proper apparatus for making decoctions, &c.; medicines for private practice are not kept in the same apartment. There is not any surgical apparatus belonging to the institution. Leeches are not supplied, as the funds do not admit of it. There is no regulation relative to vaccination, but the medical attendant vaccinates all who present themselves; he never does nor would he inoculate with small-pock matter.

Registration.

There is no register† kept, the duty is described as so constant and urgent that one person could not keep a correct register and attend to his other duties. No patients are refused attendance; no books kept of the number of patients; cases of midwifery are not attended.

Who entitled to
Relief.

A ticket from a subscriber entitles a person to relief; and servants of subscribers are attended if they have tickets. It is the custom to afford relief to all who apply; persons not

* John Wallace, esq., who was present only for a few minutes, sent the following note to the Assistant Commissioners; and the witnesses present expressed their unqualified concurrence in the recommendation therein contained. "I would recommend that an infirmary or hospital should be established in Ballymacarrett, for the county of Down, under the provisions of the 54 Geo. III. c. 62, there not being any place of reception for poor patients nearer than Downpatrick, which is distant 21 Irish miles. Such an establishment is becoming daily more necessary, by reason of the increasing population of the county of Down, in the vicinity of Belfast; which latter town being in a different county, Antrim, the inhabitants in the county Down are not entitled to the advantages of its institutions.

19, July 1834.

John Wallace.

† The most remarkable circumstance connected with this dispensary is, that there is no written document of any kind kept, and that writing materials are never used, either in prescription, register or otherwise.

not fit objects for gratuitous assistance have attempted to obtain relief gratis, but this abuse is guarded against as much as possible. Attendance is not given to poor subscribers. The rule is, that all shall be provided with tickets, to each of which the signature of one subscriber gives ample validity; but no applicant is refused relief. Subscribers are unlimited in the number of recommendations which they are empowered to distribute.

The sick poor are attended at their own dwellings at all hours, in any part of the district. The institution does not provide splints or bandages in cases of accident. Medical men are not authorized to have their prescriptions made up at the institution; lying-in cases are not attended; the midwives are uneducated, but have some skill derived from practice; the medical attendant, however, has known cases of injury to have occurred. There is no prescription book kept: vaccination is performed at the institution on any that present themselves, and is considered efficacious. Since the medical attendant came to the parish at the formation of this charity, he has not known any case of small-pock, but in his opinion the confidence of the poor in vaccination is diminished.

Wine or other extras are never furnished from the funds of this institution, nor is there any charity in this district on which an order for such could be given in behalf of the sick poor.

The general management is lodged in the hands of the subscribers. The medical man is a governor in right of subscription and not ex officio. The committee are attentive. There is not any person entitled ex officio to participate in the principal direction; no rules exist for the guidance of general or other meetings; voting is not permitted by proxy. Minutes are kept of the meetings.

A committee of nine, five of whom constitute a quorum, is selected at the general meeting, and minutes are kept of their proceedings. The grand jury have not appointed any board of superintendence.

The offices of treasurer and collector are united in the person of one individual, who acts gratuitously and without giving any security; the accounts are audited by the committee. There are no bye-laws regulating the election of officers; the voting is, however, open, a method of proceeding which has been found beneficial. Particular religious belief does not exclude any one from becoming an officer. There have been eleven governors since the formation of the charity. An instance of an officer being suspended or removed has never occurred.

There are no attendants belonging to the institution.

This institution has not existed for more than a few months, consequently no reports of its progress and affairs have as yet been made up. The district affords a sufficient number of persons capable of making a more minute inquiry into the state of the poor.

The amount of subscriptions on which to establish the dispensary, in September 1883, was 71*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* The treasurer was absent at the period of this examination, but it is understood that the grand jury grant amounted to 25*l.* Some of the poorer classes appear in the list of subscribers, who contribute 10*s.* 5*s.* and even so small a sum as 2*s.* 6*d.* each. The existence of the charity does not depend on the bounty of any individual, and was said to be pretty firmly established, although it does not possess any property of a fixed nature. It does not happen that subscriptions are attended with any stipulations with respect to supplying the subscribers or family with advice and medicine gratuitously.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands until wanted, and there is not any money belonging to the institution in the hands of a salaried officer.

This institution, being still only in its infancy, there have not been any of its accounts yet examined or settled.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Rev. DANIEL DICKENSON.—JAMES FOOT, esq., J. P.—T. W. HAYES, esq.—Rev. HAMILTON MADDEN.—Rev. EDWARD RICHARDS.—MICHAEL SAMPSON.—JOHN WALSH; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THE population of the district, to the sick poor of which this dispensary is intended to afford relief, amounts to about 40,000, including four parishes and part of a fifth. The most distant point to which the medical officer is liable to be called is about eight miles, and, within six, there is no medical establishment, nor indeed within the whole district, which is considered too large, but the want of the necessary funds prevents the utility of the present establishment from being extended. This neighbourhood is pretty well supplied with medical charities, well placed with regard to the population. The poor, however, suffer from a total want of intern accommodation, which it is exceedingly desirable should be afforded for cases of bad fevers and accidents, and for this purpose twelve beds would probably be sufficient in this district.

The dispensary does not possess any building, but rents a house in the principal street, the situation of which is good, airy and healthy. The house consists of a waiting room for patients, a board-room, and shop (in which there are some articles of furniture), also a physician's consulting room. The rest of the house is occupied by a family, whose duty it is to keep the house clean and to attend upon the physician on dispensary days; the only premises attached is a small court-yard. It is decidedly desirable, that dispensary buildings should in all cases belong to the committee.

The principal medical officer, who is about 42 years of age, is a physician of Scotland, a licentiate of the King's and Queen's College of Physicians, Dublin, and a member of the College College of Surgeons, London; who also obtained, at Dublin, a certificate authorizing him to practice midwifery; he resides in the town about 100 yards distant, to which he was appointed in 1814 by the governors, having then just taken his degree. He holds also the office of coroner for the county, the income derived from which is but very small, as only 1*l.* 1*s.* is allowed for each inquest. He is also engaged in the pursuit of private practice, and in case of his unavoidable absence from his dispensary duties, he must give information thereof to the committee. He attends at the dispensary four days in the week, Sunday,* Monday, Wednesday and Friday, from ten o'clock till all patients are prescribed for, and the dispensary is besides always open to meet cases of emergency. The other medical officer is an apothecary, whose duty is to compound and prepare the medicine, and to be always ready in cases of sudden call till the physician can attend himself. There are not any students or pupils attached to the dispensary; the apothecary being always on the spot answers the purpose, and all medicines are dispensed by him.

Two medical officers are paid. The surgeon's salary is 74*l.*, without any other allowance. The apothecary's salary is 20*l.*, without perquisites of any sort. The grand jury can and do diminish the amount of the county grant, as they think proper.

The medical officers are elected by the subscribers of a guinea or upwards, all of whom are eligible to vote on occasion of a vacancy. Notice is given by advertisement in the newspapers, wherein it is stated that testimonials are considered indispensable, but there is not any limitation as to the age of a medical officer, either in appointing him, nor any superannuations or retiring allowances. At the election in 1814, there were no less than 27 candidates, and notice of the result of the election was not given to the grand jury, nor is it considered that there is any necessity for a controlling power on those who now exercise the right of election. This neighbourhood is capable of maintaining medical men independently of this institution, as is proved by the fact, that there are eight medical men resident in the district, who are all eligible to the dispensary; there has not been any mortality among the medical officers of this charity. In case of harshness on the part of medical officers towards the poor, the latter can appeal to the subscribers, whose authority is considered sufficient, and of this tribunal of appeal they are said to be perfectly aware.

The room in which the medicines are kept is very small; the fittings up are of 24 years standing, but are still in a useful state; there appeared to be a good and ample supply of medicines, including those of the more delicate descriptions. They are purchased of Mr. Jonathan Hill, a respectable druggist of Dublin, who is a subscriber; the character of the medical officer is the sole guarantee that the medicines are never changed or adulterated; they are ordered in the names of the surgeon and the treasurer jointly, and the bills after being audited by the committee, are paid by the treasurer on their order.

The expense for 1832 was - - - - -	62	11	6 $\frac{1}{2}$
for 1833 was - - - - -	71	15	10
for 1834 was - - - - -	73	15	7 $\frac{1}{2}$

The institution possesses the proper apparatus for preparing decoctions, and medicines for private practice are kept in the same house; but those belonging to the institution are never sold; the institution is not provided with surgical instruments of any kind, and leeches are not supplied except in extraordinary cases, when they are procured from town.

The number of patients attended in 1832 was - - - - -	5,230
" " " in 1833 was - - - - -	6,444
" " " in 1834 was - - - - -	6,582

It thus appears that in 1832, the patients cost in medicine nearly 3*d.* per head. In the years 1833 and 1834 about 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Surgeons in the neighbourhood are furnished with vaccine matter from the institution. Inoculation with small-pock matter is not performed by the medical attendant, who is decidedly averse to the practice.

Registration.

A register is kept by the medical attendant of the number of patients, the nature of their diseases, the prescription applied, and the number of families visited at their houses; but merely the result of the cases in the latter instance is observed; the register is printed annually and sent to the grand jury and judge of assize. Capital operations do not appear in the register, nor cases of midwifery.

Who entitled to
Relief.

All poor persons, being fit objects of relief, receive advice and medicine at the dispensary; but the number of persons who are visited at their homes, seldom exceed 400 in the year, because of the necessity of their being provided with visiting tickets, the number of which is limited; yet it is necessary that each poor person requiring to be visited at home shall be provided with such a ticket, to which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient; but each subscriber of 1*l.* 1*s.* and upwards has only power to issue nine visiting tickets; any additional number may be obtained, however, at 1*s.* each; the poor are never in any difficulty so often, as their cases really require home attendance. There are not any of the poorer classes amongst the subscribers, and the abuse of the purposes of the dispensary by persons obtaining relief who are not objects of charity, has seldom been attempted.

Extern Patients.

All the really poor who apply at the dispensary are supplied with advice and medicine. Those who can procure a visiting ticket are attended at their own houses, at any hour, day or night. In case of accidents, the institution is furnished with splints, bandages, &c. and medical medical assistance given. Practitioners are not permitted to have their prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are attended, only when accompanied by any particular feature of danger or difficulty, and then under the authority of a visiting ticket; poor women being generally attended by midwives, who are very unskilful, and through whose ignorance, injury is known frequently to happen. The prescription book contains an account of medicine usually considered proper for the cases treated. Vaccination is performed gratis once a week, subject to certain regulations. During the spring and summer months 1s. is deposited to secure the return of the child; this is strictly acted up to, and the results have been observed to be very favourable, not a single instance occurring of those vaccinated at the dispensary, afterwards taking the disease; the confidence of the public in vaccination is therefore great and increasing. The disease does not exist in the neighbourhood at present. The medical attendant stated that he has known cases of modified small-pox attacking persons who bore marks of vaccination; but the symptoms were not severe.

* The dispensary is open on the Sunday for the convenience of the sick poor who reside at a distance, and who can, on that day, more easily borrow a cart and horse of a neighbour.

There are no intern patients in the institution; but it has been occasionally the custom to induce persons to take lodgings in the town in order that they might be attended daily; and in some instances, the expenses have been defrayed from the funds of the institution, but generally from other sources, except so far as attendance and medicine. Lunatic cases are sent to the assylum at Belfast. Cholera did not prevail much in Banbridge.

There being no committee appointed, the whole management rests with the subscribers at large, who meet on the second Monday in January, April, July and October. The institution has not been left in any essential degree under the management of the surgeon, nor is there any person ex officio in the principal direction. At the meetings of the subscribers five constitute a quorum, and from eight to twelve generally attend, voting by proxy not being permitted. Minutes of the proceedings are kept.

There is a treasurer, and the situation is at present filled by a gentleman who acts gratuitously, and is not called upon to enter into any security; he is also collector: his office is permanent. There are not any printed bye-laws for the regulation of the election of officers, but the voting is always open, a system which is considered beneficial. Religious belief does not form a ground of exclusion against any one. The necessity of a veto over the elections is not experienced here; an instance has never occurred of an officer being suspended or removed.

The only attendants are the persons who reside in the house and keep it clean, they also go of errands, &c.; they reside in the dispensary house rent free, but receive no salary.

There are not any printed rules, nor has any alteration in the management of this charity been suggested by local authorities.

Annual reports are printed, and distributed to all the subscribers, and a copy is sent to the grand jury, together with one to the judge, and to all persons who it is considered ought, but who do not, subscribe. The district contains a sufficient number of persons capable of entering into a more minute inquiry into the wants of the poor.

As the treasurer was absent from home at the period of the visit of the assistant commissioners, the books could not be inspected. The following particulars were taken from reports, in presence of the gentlemen in attendance.

For the year ending in July respectively:—

The poorer classes do not subscribe. The existence of the charity cannot be considered precarious, as it does not depend on the bounty of any individual; but neither does it possess any capital or stock producing any fixed annual income.

The treasurer collects the funds, and they remain in his custody until required. No money remains in the hands of salaried officers or servants.

The amount of receipts and expenditure on account of this charity during the last three years, is extracted from the annual printed reports, as follows, for the year ending July:—

JAMES CLELLAND, esq.—Mr. THOMAS M'CULLOCK.—Rev. Mr. JOHNSTON.—Colonel WARD.—Mr. WILLIAM WARD; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

Bangor Dispensary.

Population and Extent of Country.

THIS dispensary is intended for the relief of the sick poor in the parish of Bangor, which contains upwards of 9,000 inhabitants; the most distant point which the medical attendant is liable to visit, is about four English miles. The only medical establishment within six miles is the Donaghadee dispensary, and there is no other medical institution in the district, which is not found too large for the management of one dispensary. All the poor of the parish are attended, and none refused; but it is thought that it would be a much greater benefit to the public to have small district hospitals, than one large hospital, as at present, at Downpatrick. The want of a local hospital, however, has not been much felt here.

Building, Furniture and Grounds.

The charity does not hold any house or apartments specially for its purposes, but under the present medical man a building is not required, as he holds the dispensary in his own house.

Medical Officers.

The sole medical officer of the institution is a licentiate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Glasgow, at which place he also studied midwifery; he resides in the town, in the house where also the dispensary is kept. Colonel Ward, to whom this charity is indebted for its original establishment in 1817, appointed him as general medical attendant at that period, previous to which he was practicing in the town; he is also surgeon to the South Down Militia, for which he receives the pay of 63*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* per annum, but is not now liable to be called by that appointment from his dispensary duties; he is also engaged in private practice. In case of his temporary absence or illness, this officer could make his own private arrangements. The fixed days for his attendance at the dispensary are Mondays and Thursdays, from nine till half-past twelve, when his duty is never done by proxy.

Payment.

There are no other medical officers, nor any one in the shop to afford immediate assistance when the superintendent is absent. The medicines are dispensed by himself.

The medical officer at his appointment was promised a salary of 30*l.*, but the funds have never, since the first few years, been sufficient to allow him that sum, and he has frequently been without any salary; he is not provided with a horse or other conveyance, nor any board or lodging.

The

The sums he has received during the past ten years were as follows:—

	£.	s.	d.		£.	s.	d.
In 1825	-	-	8 14 11	In 1830	-	-	10 - -
1826	-	-	nothing.	1831	-	-	15 - -
1827	-	-	10 - -	1832	-	-	10 - -
1828	-	-	nothing.	1833	-	-	10 - -
1829	-	-	nothing.	1834	-	-	15 - -

It is almost needless to add, that the grand jury are not likely to be called on to diminish the amount of the county grant, in order to control the salary authorized by the governors of this institution, on the ground of its being higher than necessary to obtain an efficient medical officer.

There has not been any election of medical officer since the first formation of this institution, nor are there any bye-laws for the regulation of such proceedings; the present medical man was known to the subscribers at the time of his appointment, on which occasion it was not deemed necessary to send to the grand jury any notice or certificate of his qualifications. There is not any rule with respect to the age of the medical officers, nor are there any superannuations or retiring allowances. The neighbourhood contains persons able to pay for advice and medicine, sufficient in number to support a medical man independently of the dispensary emolument; and there are two residing in the district, eligible to take the appointment to the institution. If the medical attendant should neglect his duty or abuse it, the poor are aware that they can complain to any subscriber.

The medical officer provides the medicine from his own private stock of medicines, and makes a charge against the subscribers.* The institution does not possess any surgical instruments whatever. Leeches are not supplied to the patients; there is no rule relative to vaccinating, but the surgeon is in the habit of vaccinating gratis, and never did inoculate with small-pock virus.

A register is not kept,† but a parishioner is never refused advice or attendance.

The being a pauper inhabitant of the parish of Bangor is a sufficient claim to entitle an applicant to advice and medicine; the servants of subscribers are also attended. The abuse of persons seeking aid from the charity who could afford to pay, has been attempted, but it is guarded against as much as possible; but considerable inconvenience has been felt from some subscribers having giving tickets to their farmers.

Extern patients are seen at the dispensary, or if necessary attended at their own houses, at any time of the day or night, within the limits of the parish. In cases of accident, the institution does not possess the means of furnishing assistance, but the medical attendant is in the habit of using his own instruments, &c. Practitioners are not authorized to have their prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Difficult cases of lying-in are attended from the dispensary, but in ordinary cases the poor are attended by midwives, some of whom possess some skill, and the medical officer did not know of any case of accident or injury occurring from their ignorance. Vaccination is performed gratis on all that come, and the results are very favourable, secondary small-pock being of a very rare occurrence; the medical attendant stated, that he had not seen a case of small-pox for several years; the public have very great confidence in vaccination.

Extras, such as wine, &c., are not given to the poor from the funds of this institution, nor is there any charity on which an order can be given to the sick poor for food, clothing or fuel.

Lunatic cases are sent to Belfast.

There have not of late years been any meetings of the subscribers. The treasurer receives the subscriptions and pays the bills.

The treasurer is the only officer not medical, and he fulfils the duties of his office (which is permanent) gratuitously. There has not occurred any case of removal or suspension of an officer.

The district affords a sufficient number of persons, able and willing to make a more minute investigation into the wants of the poor, if the system of dispensary aid were to be extended.

The amount of subscriptions and grand jury presentments received during the past three years, are as follows:—

	1833.	1834.	1835.
Subscriptions	34 5 -	37 8 -	43 15 -
Presentments	17 2 6	18 14 -	21 17 6
£.	51 7 6	56 2 -	65 12 6

In the instance of this institution, it will be observed that the grand jury have been in the habit of granting annual sums, equal to only half the amount of subscriptions. The subscriptions are not attended with any stipulations that the subscribers, or any of their families,

* In 1817 the medical officer proposed to supply advice, medicine, in fact every thing, for the whole amount of the subscriptions; the subscribers agreed, and thus the affairs have gone on since.

† Registry merely divided into items, to show the grand jury, and not to check expenditure.

families, are to get medical relief gratis. None of the poorer classes subscribe. If three of the subscribers, to the greatest respective amounts of contribution, were to withdraw their support, the charity must cease to exist; but the continuance, so far as subscriptions to 32*l.* annually, and the county presentment on that account, cannot be considered precarious. The institution has no permanent annual income arising from stock or otherwise.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose custody they are allowed to remain until wanted.

The amount of expenditure was, for the year 1832, 50*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*; 1833, 50*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.*; and for half-year, ending 30th June 1834, 42*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* The surgeon's charges against the subscribers are the only bills for examination.

The accounts are made up and sent to the grand jury by the treasurer twice a year.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Castlewellan
Dispensary.

Earl ANNESLY.—Mr. LAW.—Rev. Mr. M'KEE.—Mr. ALEXANDER M'MULLEN.—Mr. OWEN M'MULLEN; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district for which this dispensary is intended, could not be accurately ascertained; but it was stated that the medical attendant is not liable to go in the discharge of his duties beyond the distance of seven miles from the dispensary. The district is said to extend 14 miles in every direction. There is no other medical institution within a radius of six miles, that at Rathfriland being the nearest. The district is rather too large for one medical man, but the funds do not admit of the appointment of an assistant surgeon. The medical institutions in the county are thought to be well placed, as far as regards population. Advice and medicine are never refused at this charity, but as it possesses only one ward, sufficient for the reception of but one or two cases of accidents, it would be most beneficial if a building were provided specially for patients suffering under fever or accidents.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

There is no building of any kind belonging to the dispensary, but the charity now occupies a house in an open, healthy part of the town. The fitting up of the shop and the furniture of the board-room is all the furniture the charity possesses; the house is in good repair, except the roof, which is to be immediately improved at the landlords expense. There are two rooms above stairs, one belonging to the matron, and the other a ward for two beds, all expense attending which (with the exception of medicines), is defrayed at private charge, independently of any county grant; there is also a waiting-room; a small yard and stable, but no other out-buildings are attached. The house is held at will. There is not any prospect of change, but it were better in all cases that the dispensary building belonged to the public.

Medical Officer.

The sole medical officer of the institution, graduated in medicine at the University of Edinburgh, where he also became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and obtained a licence to practice midwifery. He resides at Bryansford, about two-and-a-half English miles distant, having been appointed in the united capacities of physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary to this dispensary at its formation in 1822, before which period he was practicing and continues to practice as a physician in the county; he has not any other appointment. In case of his absence, a substitute must be provided, subject to the approval of the governors. The fixed days and hours of his attendance at this institution, are Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 o'clock until all patients are attended, and this duty is never done by proxy. Should the medical officer be guilty of any harshness or neglect towards the patients, they can complain to any governor, and are aware of this mode of seeking redress. No student or pupil resides on the spot, the medicines are therefore dispensed by the medical officer.

Payment.

The surgeon is the only paid officer; his salary is 100*l.* per annum, which is paid from the general fund, without any allowance for a horse or other conveyance, board or lodging. The grand jury can refuse or diminish the grant, and have a controlling power in refusing funds; there is not any abuse known to exist, and the control of the grand jury and gentry is considered sufficient to prevent any such occurrence.

Election.

The medical officer is elected by the governors, being subscribers of a guinea or upwards, all of whom are entitled to vote, but the grand jury are not empowered to interfere. On the occasion of the last vacancy, notice was given by advertisement in the public journals in order to secure competition, and testimonials were considered indispensable. More than 12 candidates presented themselves, but there was not any notice of the appointment or certificate of the qualifications of the medical officer sent to the grand jury. This neighbourhood is able to support a medical man, independently of the institution, for the charge of which there are five professional men, eligible, resident in the town. The only limitation with respect to the age of the medical attendant is, that which his degree requires, and there are nor any superannuation or retiring allowances, nor has there been any mortality among the officers.

Pharmacy.

The room reserved for the medicines is clean and neat, and contains an ample supply, good in quality; they are purchased of the Glasgow Apothecary's Company, and paid for by the treasurer on the order of the physician, whose character forms the only guarantee that medicines are not changed or deteriorated; they are locked up and the key kept by the surgeon, who is not permitted, on any account, to sell any belonging to the institution, and who

who does not provide medicine in his private practice. The institution possesses the necessary apparatus for compounding medicine, but no surgical instruments. The medicines cost—

									£.	s.	d.

In 1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	67	-	-
In 1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	60	-	-

It appears from a calculation made by the governors, that the expense of medicine from March 1830 to March 1833, amounted to 99*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, and the number of patients relieved to 6,735, giving an average expense of 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per head. The medicine from March 1832 to March 1833 cost 60*l.* 9*s.*, and 2,338 patients were relieved, being an average expense of 6*d.* per head. Leeches are not generally supplied, but sometimes a few are used, which are bought of an apothecary in the town. The rules of the dispensary make it incumbent on the medical attendant to vaccinate gratis, and he is besides in the habit of supplying the neighbouring surgeons with vaccine matter. Although it is not specially forbid by the rules, the medical attendant has never had recourse to the operation of inoculation with small pox virus.

Registration is attended to by the surgeon, so far as to specify the nature and termination of each case. The entries are made at the time the patients are attended. There have been six capital operations performed within the last three years, all of which were successful; difficult cases of lying-in only are attended, and their number has been 15 for the last three years. Each applicant must be provided with a ticket. Servants of subscribers are attended, but the abuse of persons who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance, obtaining relief, has scarcely ever occurred, as it is provided against with as much caution as possible. Small contributions are received from persons not absolutely poor, as a compensation to the charity for the benefit derived, but such contributions confer no privilege. Every applicant must have a ticket, which there is no difficulty in procuring, and none are ever excluded from relief. There is no appeal from the governors to the grand jury.

Extern patients are seen at the institution, and are attended any time, day or night, wherever they reside, throughout the district. The institution is supplied with bandages and splints in case of necessity. Practitioners cannot have their prescriptions made up here. Poor women are generally attended in their confinement by midwives, some of whom have been educated in Dublin at the expense of a neighbouring nobleman's family; nevertheless injury has been known to occur through unskilfulness. The order book contains the usual prescriptions. Vaccination is performed gratis, and proved to be generally efficacious. Small-pox was epidemic two years ago, and sporadic cases still occur; but the confidence of the public in vaccination is considerable.

Wine or other extras are not afforded from the funds of this charity, but trusses are furnished at half price to any one presenting a governor's ticket. There is not any institution in the neighbourhood; on which an order can be given for the supply of food, clothing, or fuel to the sick poor.

It rests with the medical officer to admit any one under a recommendation, and patients are not confined to the institution, or required to work. Lunatic patients are sent to the district asylum at Belfast. Cholera cases were not admitted in the house; clergy of all persuasions have free access at any time, but they never interfere to distribute controversial tracts. There is not any chaplain attached to the institution, nor any rule as to the dietary of the patients.

The general management is vested in the governors, * amongst whose number there is not any salaried or medical officer, nor is any person ex officio, entitled to participate in the direction. The governors are very attentive to the affairs of the charity. Their general meetings take place annually; five of their number constitute a quorum, but there are never less than eight or ten present; all are equally entitled to vote, but only ladies by proxy. Minutes are kept of their proceedings.

Some of the governors meet quarterly, and minutes are also kept of their proceedings. The grand jury havenot fixed any board of superintendence, nor are there any visiting governors.

The only officer not medical, is the treasurer, who gives no security, but is elected by the governors annually. The election is not regulated by any printed bye-laws, but the voting is open, a system which has been found beneficial. The present surgeon is a protestant. There has not been any accession of governors at an election, nor has any instance occurred of an officer being removed.

There is one nurse attached to this dispensary who has been paid 1*l.* 10*s.* per quarter, but the grand jury do not seem to approve of this in the accounts.

Reports are annually printed which specify the number of patients attended, and the expence, &c. There are a sufficient number of persons in the district qualified to investigate minutely into the wants of the poor.

The amount of subscriptions and county presentments for the last three years was in—

There are 24 subscribers; the largest subscription is 25*l.* the smallest one guinea; but when persons above the labouring classes apply for tickets, the governors sell them to them for such sums as 2*s.* 6*d.* and 5*s.* These tickets only entitle to temporary benefit from the institution. The sums thus obtained by the governors are handed over to the treasurer. The withdrawal of any one subscription would not ruin, but would certainly much impair the means of the institution. Its existence cannot however be considered precarious, although it possesses no property of a fixed nature. The subscriptions are not attended with any stipulations. The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain, but there is not any money belonging to the institution in the hands of any salaried officer.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Donaghadee Dispensary.

DAVID DELACHROIS, esq.—Mr. WILLIAM GATTY.—Captain LESLIE, R. N.—GEORGE WEBB, esq;— and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

Population and Extent of Country.

THE population comprised within the district for which this dispensary is intended, cannot be stated; but the most distant point which the medical officer is bound to visit is three miles Irish. The only medical institution within six miles is the Bangor dispensary, and there is no other medical institution in this district, which is not thought too large for one dispensary. All applicants for relief must be provided with a ticket; some have been refused until they could get a ticket, which however, they have been always able to obtain. It is here considered, that it would be a very beneficial arrangement, to have a house capable of receiving bad cases of fever and accident.

Building, Furniture and Grounds.

A room has been hired to be used as a dispensary, but as yet, has not been fitted up; part of this room will be allotted as a waiting-room for patients. The house is in a good healthy, airy situation, near the centre of the town. It would be a desirable object to have a building for dispensary purposes, which would belong exclusively to the charity.

Medical Officers.

The sole medical officer of the institution is a member of the College of Surgeons at Edinburgh, where he also procured a licence to practice midwifery. He resides about 200 yards from the dispensary shop. He was appointed as general medical attendant in June 1834, by election, and now holds no other appointment, but is engaged in the pursuit of private practice. In case of his absence, it is understood that he should find a substitute. The days of his attendance at the dispensary are Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, from 10 to 12 o'clock, and his duty is never done by proxy. During his temporary absence there is not any person on the spot capable of affording assistance, in cases of illness or accidents. The medicines are dispensed by the medical officer.

Payment.

The medical man receives 30*l.* per annum, paid from the general fund, but is not provided with board or lodging. In case the members or committee should authorize a salary or allowance beyond what was reasonable, the grand jury could refuse their grant.

Election.

The medical man is elected by the subscribers of one guinea and upwards. On the occasion of the last vacancy, notice was given in the Dublin and Belfast newspaper, and testimonials were indispensable to the candidates. Three candidates offered themselves, and neither notice of the appointment or certificates of the qualifications of the individual chosen were sent to the grand jury. There is not any limitation defined with respect to the age of the medical officer, either in his appointment or otherwise. This neighbourhood is sufficient to support a medical man independently of dispensary emolument, to which, there are three medical gentlemen resident in the district, eligible. There are no rules or regulations as to superannuations. The last medical attendant died of some disease in the throat. In case the medical attendant should be harsh to or neglect the patients, they can and do complain to the person from whom they get a ticket.

Pharmacy.

The room intended for the drugs, &c. was not yet furnished at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners. The more expensive and delicate medicines are precluded from being used, in consequence of the smallness of the funds. The medicines are purchased from Mr. Walkington's, of Belfast, on the order of the medical superintendent, and are are paid for by the treasurer. The stock at the establishment two months ago cost 5*l.* 5*s.* The medicines are locked up, and the surgeon keeps the key himself, not being allowed to sell them on any account.

The institution does not possess any apparatus for preparing decoctions, infusions, &c. nor any surgical instruments. In the superintendent's private practice he keeps his medicine distinct, and in a different room from the dispensary medicines. Leeches are not supplied to the poor at the expense of this charity. There are no rules obliging the surgeon to dispense vaccine matter gratis, and he has not yet been called on to vaccinate; but this operation he intends to perform on all the poor gratis, and without requiring the production of a recommendatory ticket; but he states that he will not inoculate with small-pox virus.

A register is kept, which distinguishes the name, age and residence of the patients, the medicines prescribed, and the name of the recommender; but a copy of this register is not sent to the grand jury. There were at the period of this examination 22 patients under attendance, and not any have as yet failed in getting medical aid. Capital operations have not been performed at this dispensary within the last three years. Midwifery cases are to be attended only in cases of extreme difficulty, and the present medical attendant has never been sent for on any such occasion.

All poor, who can obtain tickets are attended; but these are not given to domestic servants, nor has any imposition on the charity occurred by persons being permitted to participate in its benefits, who are able to pay for medicine and advice. The poorer classes do not subscribe, nor has the subscription list been at any time improperly extended, with a view to obtain* large grants from the county. It is only necessary that each ticket should be signed by one subscriber, and the number which each subscriber is entitled to give are determined by rule. Thus a subscriber of one guinea, can issue eight tickets for advice and medicine at the dispensary; two guineas, 24 tickets; and five guineas 40 tickets. In the distribution of these it is presumed, that a poor person would not be likely to meet disappointment in getting one, although the withholding or giving it is at the pleasure of the subscriber; it might, however, happen that labourers on the estate of a non-subscriber might not be able to obtain a ticket. Patients are seen at the dispensary, and in cases of urgency are attended at their own homes, it is stated, even at night. If an accident, such as a fractured limb, should occur, the institution does not possess the means of rendering relief, such as bandages, splints, &c. Medical practitioners, unconnected with the institution are not entitled to have their prescriptions made up, at the dispensary. Lying-in women are attended only in very urgent cases; the poor are generally attended by midwives, and the dispensary officer never heard of any injury arising from their want of skill. The medicines prescribed are those usual in the treatment of similar cases. Vaccination is found successful, and one case only of small-pox has been heard of lately. The poor entertain very great confidence in vaccination. There is no allowance to the sick poor of wine or any other extra from the funds of this institution, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood on which an order in their behalf can be given for food, clothing or fuel. When cases of lunacy occur, they are sent to the district asylum at Belfast.

† The same gentleman performs gratuitously, and without giving any security, the united duties of treasurer and collector, an office, the permanency of which, is not regulated by any bye-law. At the elections of officers the voting is open, and this plan is found beneficial. No particular religious belief excludes any one. There is not any instance of an officer having been suspended or removed.

The rules for the regulation of the affairs of this charity are printed.

It is intended that reports shall be made twice a year, but there have not been any made as yet. It is considered that the district affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to attend to the wants of the poor, in case it should be found expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The funds for the support of this charity are derived from voluntary contributions, aided by the county grant, which for the last three years amounted together in—

* The Assistant Commissioners observe, that it is an invariable rule, that the presentments to the grand jury are liberal in an inverse ratio to the accuracy displayed by those who have the management of the dispensary funds. Thus when expense is carefully avoided, and much good cheaply and honourably done, the county grant is more closely pinched, than when the income of the preceding year had been extravagantly overrun.

† The treasurer's accounts are kept with extreme accuracy. The leading gentry of the neighbourhood seem to take great interest in the establishment. The towns in this province are furnished with various mendicity institutions. There are also here several private charities, such as a Sick Poor Charity Society and a Clothing Society, each managed by ladies. Two foundation charities, and a school for 20 male children who are clothed and apprenticed. There is also a most extensive manufactory of hand sewing or embroidery, at which females of from 10 to 40 years of age can earn from 6*d.* to 1*s.* 3*d.* per day.

This charity exists on precarious grounds; as should one family withdraw their subscriptions, or the other subscriptions fall off much, it must cease to exist, as it does not possess any capital or stock from which an annual income is derivable.

The subscriptions are collected by the treasurer, and remain with him until required for disbursement. Money is not allowed to continue in the hands of any salaried officer.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the town of Dromore amounts to 1,800, but that of the district for the relief of the sick poor, of which this dispensary is intended, could not be ascertained. The dispensary doctor is not obliged by any rule to visit at a greater distance than five Irish miles from the dispensary. Hillsborough dispensary is within six miles, but there is not any other medical institution within the district, which, however, is not considered too large. This institution does not afford any intern accommodation for patients, and it would therefore be highly beneficial, if a building were provided, which should contain about six beds for the reception of bad cases of fever or accidents.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

This dispensary is without a building of any sort or kind belonging to it, and the room in which it is held is a small apartment, at the end of a large up-stairs room in the market-house, for which rent is not required. The only furniture is, a large press, containing the medicines, a chair and a counter. The large room is a very excellent waiting-place, and is scarcely ever wanted for other purposes at dispensary hours. It is exceedingly desirable, that a proper building for dispensary purposes, should be provided as the property of the charity.

Medical Officers.

The sole medical officer of the dispensary is a member of the College of Surgeons of Glasgow, where he also procured a license authorizing him to practice midwifery; he resides in the town, in the immediate vicinity of the institution, to which he was appointed by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, as general medical attendant, in 1822, having then just concluded his labours as a student of medicine; he now holds no other appointment, but is permitted to engage in private practice. There is not any regulation on the subject of absence on the part of the medical officer, but care is always taken by him to provide a competent person on such occasions to be on the spot. The days of his attendance at the dispensary are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, from 10 A. M. till all patients are prescribed for. There is no other medical officer, student, pupil or other person on the spot to give immediate assistance in case of sudden emergency or accident. The medicines are compounded and dispensed by the medical attendant.

Payment.

The medical officer receives a salary of 30 guineas per annum from the general funds of the charity, without any allowance for a horse, or board or lodging, or other perquisite. The grand jury can and do diminish the county grant at their own discretion. According to the extent of the funds the surgeon receives a sum, never exceeding 3s. for every visiting ticket, provided the residence of the patient visited be at a distance greater than half a mile Irish, from the dispensary. An instance of a collusion between a medical man and subscribers, for the purpose of raising an institution in order to obtain a grant from the county, has never been known to occur here; and if such attempt were made, the control of the grand jury is considered to be sufficient to prevent it succeeding.

Election.

The right of election of a medical officer is confined to the subscribers of a guinea and upwards; all of whom are equally entitled to vote. When a vacancy occurs, notice is given in the newspapers, and testimonials are required, as indispensable; on the last occasion four candidates presented themselves, but neither notice of the results of the election, or certificates of the qualifications of the individual chosen, were sent to the grand jury; limitations with respect to the age of the medical officer do not exist, either in their appointment or otherwise. In the year 1818, owing to some disagreement amongst the subscribers to this dispensary, the county of Down infirmary governors interfered, and appointed the Dromore dispensary committee. This neighbourhood is sufficient to support medical men independently of the dispensary emolument; and there are three medical men resident eligible to this institution. There are no superannuation or resignation regulations. There has not been any mortality among the medical men. The poor are well aware, that in case the medical officer is guilty of harshness towards them, or neglect of their just claims, they can complain to a subscriber and have their charge investigated.

The

The only room exclusively used by the dispensary is the shop, which is small, clean, and neat, in which stands a press containing sufficient quantity of the medicine usually required, of apparent good quality, including quinine, &c. &c., and all kept in an exceedingly correct manner. The medicines are supplied by Mr. Walkington, Belfast, (who is a subscriber to the institution), and are paid for by the treasurer on the order of the committee. The number of patients relieved, and the expense of medicine amounted for the year ending in December

1831	to	-	1,088 patients,	-	-	-	-	39	12 11½
1832	-	-	984 patients	-	-	-	-	37	19 -
1833	-	-	996 patients	-	-	-	-	35	10 2½

Thus the patients appear to have cost in medicines in 1831 about 8½d., in 1832 9d., and in 1833 8½d. per head. The institution does not possess any apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c., or surgical instruments. Medicines for private practice of the medical attendant, are not kept in the same building with those, the property of the establishment. In extreme cases only leeches are supplied, and are then bought of a druggist in Belfast. The medical attendant is not bound by any rule to give vaccine matter gratis, or prevented from having recourse to inoculation with small-pox virus; but he stated that he never did, and never would resort to that practice.

A register is kept which specifies the date, name, abode, disease, and recommender of each patient. In another register the same plan is observed as in the first, with the addition of the medicines given; but these allude only to the patients visited at their own homes. The number of deaths among the whole number of patients visited, is likewise stated; those refused relief are not included in either register. There were four new patients on the last dispensary day, previous to this examination. Midwifery cases are not attended from the dispensary. Every person applying for relief must have a ticket, to which the signature of one subscriber however is sufficient; and the number each may dispense is unlimited; this rule is strictly adhered to; but the domestic servants of subscribers may obtain a ticket. Some persons have attempted to participate in the benefits of the charity, whose circumstances are not such as to require gratuitous assistance. There are not any poor subscribers in the list of contributors to the efficiency of this dispensary; from the benefit to be derived from which, the dependents of those gentlemen who do not subscribe are generally excluded.

Extern patients are seen at the institution; but when unable to come there, are attended at their own homes, any time of the day or night, within a radius of five Irish miles; provided always, the patient can procure a special visiting ticket, which, however, are as easily procured as the ordinary tickets. In case of accident the surgeon attends immediately, and splints and bandages are furnished at the expense of the dispensary. Persons unconnected with the dispensary, are not authorized to have prescriptions made up there, and those entered appeared to be such as are generally considered proper for the various cases treated. Lying-in women are not attended from the dispensary, but by midwives, who are not skilful, and from whose ignorance injury is known to happen both to mother and child. Inoculation with small-pox virus is not performed within the knowledge of any gentleman present, in this neighbourhood; but vaccination is performed gratis by most of the medical men in the town; not, however, at the institution. It is considered efficacious. Small-pox has occurred lately; but the confidence of the public in vaccination is good and increasing.

Wine is occasionally given at this dispensary for medical purposes only, and under the direction of the medical attendant; but there is not any charity in this district on which an order can be given in favour of the sick poor, for food, clothing or fuel.

Whenever lunatic cases occur, they are sent to the distict asylum at Belfast.

All subscribers of a guinea and upwards participate in the general management, and meet to the number of 10 or 12 annually. The institution has not been left, in any material degree, to the sole management of the surgeon, nor is any salaried officer concerned in the government of its affairs. The Bishop of Dromore is, ex officio, chairman, but is not in the principal direction. Voting is not generally allowed by proxy; exceptions being made in favour of a nobleman, who is one of the principal supporters of the charity, and the Bishop of Dromore, who are allowed that privilege. Minutes are kept of the proceedings of the governors in the same book as the committee meetings.

There is a managing committee of 14, elected by the subscribers, who meet once a quarter at the dispensary. Minutes are kept of their proceedings. A board of superintendence is not fixed by the grand jury.

The Rector or Curate of Dromore is, ex officio, treasurer and collector, an office from which no emolument is derived, and in which security is not given or required. The election of officers is not regulated by any printed bye-laws, but the voting on these occasions is open, and this plan, as adopted, has been found beneficial; religious belief excludes no one from being an officer. There has been no apprehension of improper appointments, and therefore no want of a veto has been felt to prevent such. The late surgeon, who acted jointly with the present, was removed, in the year 1822, for involving his private bill for drugs with the dispensary bill, as stated in the minutes of the proceedings of the committee.

From the paucity of the funds the rules could not be printed. There have not been any alterations in the general mode of management suggested.

A report is made by the surgeon to the committee at their quarterly meetings, and all tickets

The income, on which the continuance of this charity depends, was stated to the Assistant Commissioners to have amounted as follows, for the three years last past :—

	1831.	1832.	1833.

The largest contribution received from one individual is, 10*l.* 10*s.*—the smallest, 1*l.* 1*s.*

The existence of the charity does not depend on the subscription of any individual, nor can its continuance be considered precarious. The only property belonging to the institution is a sum of 100*l.* Irish, which is lodged in Messrs. Latouches' bank, and now produces 3*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* per annum.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his custody till wanted. Money is never deposited in the hands of salaried officers.

On the subject of the expenditure, incurred on behalf of this charity during the last three years, the following accounts were furnished to the Assistant Commissioners :—

All bills are audited by the committee, and paid by the treasurerer on their order. The accounts are examined and closed every quarter, and copies thereof furnished twice a year to the grand jury.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Mr. JAMES HUNTER, magistrates clerk.—Rev. CHARLES LETT, Curate of the parish.—HENRY MURRAY, esq.—THOMAS PARRY, esq.—WILLIAM EDMOND KEILLY, esq., Agent to the marquis of Downshire;—and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THE amount of population, and the extent of the district for which this dispensary was intended, are both very undefined; but the most distant point which the medical attendant is liable to visit, is now five miles; but should a subscriber live a greater distance, the medical attendant would be liable to be sent one mile beyond that subscriber's residence. An infirmary and a dispensary are established at Lisburn, in the county of Antrim; and at Dromore, in this county, there is also a dispensary. This district is considered too large for one dispensary, but there are not sufficient funds to support two. The medical institutions in the county are well placed, but there are still large, thickly peopled districts, too distant from any medical charity. A district of five miles radius, is as extensive as one medical man can properly attend to. Advice and medicine have never been refused to any applicant at this dispensary, which is moreover provided with intern accommodation, sufficient for about ten patients, which is considered adequate to the wants of the poor, accruing from serious accidents, or bad cases of fever. An opinion was expressed by those present at the examination, that it would be highly desirable that similar accommodation should be generally attached to each dispensary.

The dispensary is held in a stone building, two stories high, consisting of a good waiting-room, a small neat dispensary, a physician's consulting-room, a committee-room, and a kitchen on the ground-floor; a housekeeper and nurses-room, and three wards, capable of containing ten beds (all in excellent repair). On the second floor, the wards appeared however to be so low and confined, as to render it probable that when occupied, they would become so close as materially to impair their utility. They are kept very clean. The bedsteads are of wood, and the bedding consists of straw, with sheets, blankets and rugs. Each ward contains a good close-stool. The institution is provided with proper sewers, and an ample and convenient supply of good water; but no baths, except a slipper bath. The situation is rather low, and the only ground attached is a small back yard, with dust-hole and privy. The premises belong to the Marquis of Downshire, from whom they are held at will, rent-free. As a principle, it was thought better that dispensary buildings should belong to the committee or to the county.

The medical attendant is a physician and surgeon of Edinburgh, and possesses also a Glasgow and Edinburgh license for practising midwifery; but is not a master apothecary. He resides in the town, about one hundred yards distant from the institution, to which he was appointed as general medical attendant in November, 1822, by election, having then just taken his degrees. Should necessity arise for his temporary absence (which has never occurred) the medical attendant would feel it his duty to mention the circumstance to the committee, and to find a substitute, of whom they might approve; but there is no bye-law on the subject. The medical attendant is allowed private practice, but attends at the dispensary on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays from ten o'clock till all patients are seen. His duty is never done by proxy, and there is not any medical officer or other person on the spot, such as student or pupil, capable of affording assistance in case of accident or emergency; but the housekeeper and family live at the dispensary, and can procure the attendance of the medical attendant at any moment. Medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant. There are not at present any intern patients.

The sole medical attendant's salary amounts to 66*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, paid from the general fund, without any allowance for a horse or other conveyance, nor is he provided with board or lodging from the funds. The grand jury can refuse or diminish the grant in case of any collusion to raise funds fictitiously, in order to enhance the county grant, but abuses of that nature have not been known to exist here.

The medical officers are elected by the subscribers of a guinea or upwards, the conditions for voting being fully acted up to. When a vacancy happens, it is the custom to advertise, with a view to induce the greatest possible competition, and testimonials are indispensable to the candidates, of whom there were seven offered themselves at the last election; but neither notice of the appointment which ensued, or certificates of qualification of the successful competitor were sent to the grand jury. It was stated that a controlling power over these elections was not required in the instance of this institution, and there is not any limitation with respect to their age, either in appointing or displacing the medical officers. This neighbourhood is capable of supporting medical men, independently of the dispensary emolument; but it is not known how many of the resident professional gentlemen are eligible to the institution. There are not any regulations for superannuations or retiring allowances, nor has there been any mortality among the medical officers. Should the medical officer exhibit any harshness or neglect towards the patients, particularly the extern patients, they can complain to the person from whom they procured their tickets, and are aware that they possess that method of seeking redress.

The room intended for the medicines is small but neat; the medicines of good quality, but in very small quantity, this scarcity was accounted for by the fact that they are purchased quarterly, and the visit of the Assistant Commissioners occurred about the conclusion of a quarter: they were informed that a supply had been ordered for the next quarter. The more delicate and expensive medicines are included in sufficient quantity. The medicines

Hillsborough Dispensary. From a register which is considered to have been correctly kept, to February 1834, it appears that the following number of patients were attended in the year ending February—

1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	870
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	858
1834	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	318

Average expense of medicine, calculated from the above date, was per patient, for the year ending February—

											s.	d.
1832 about	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4 ½
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4 ¼
1834	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	6 ½

The medicines are always locked up by the medical attendant, who keeps the key himself; and it is not permitted that any should be sold: the medical attendant never furnishes medicines in his private practise. The institution does not possess any apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c. or surgical instruments, except an enema apparatus and stomach-pump. Leeches are supplied when necessary, and bought generally of a leech-dealer in Belfast. According to one of the rules of the institution, vaccination is performed, gratis, twice a month; but the medical attendant is not bound to supply neighbouring surgeons, although he never refuses it: inoculation with small-pox matter is not specially forbidden by rule, but the medical attendant never does inoculate with it.

Patients' Registration. Although one of the rules of this institution particularly directs, that "The surgeon shall keep a regular case book specifying the name of the subscriber recommending a patient, the name and residence of the patient, the disease, medicine prescribed, and event;" this essential to the good governance of the charity appears to be totally neglected, and consequently an account of the number of patients can never be furnished to the grand jury. It is imperative on applicants to present tickets—a regulation which it is said they can always abide by. There were not any patients on the books at the period of this examination; but the medical attendant conjectured that there were about 60 in attendance. Capital operations have not been performed during the last three years. Difficult cases of midwifery only are attended; and these amount in number to about fifteen in the last three years.

Who entitled to Relief. All sick poor, including servants, who can obtain a ticket are entitled to relief: attempts have been made occasionally by persons who were in circumstances enabling them to pay for advice and medicine, to avail themselves of the gratuitous aid afforded by the charity; but subscribers are never attended gratis. Efforts to swell a subscription list by improper means, in order to get a larger grant from the county, have never been known at this charity. All patients when labouring under illness so serious as to prevent their attending at the dispensary, are on the recommendation of a subscriber visited at their own homes. To all tickets the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, and they are so numerous that there is no difficulty in a patient, who is a fit object of charity, getting one; a poor person is not liable to be deprived of the advantage of the county presentment.

Extern Patients. Extern patients are seen at the dispensary or attended within the district at any hour of the day or night. The institution does not possess any splints or bandages; but the medical attendant provides them when required, and sends the bill to the committee. Medical men are not authorized to have their prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Difficult cases of lying-in are attended by the medical attendant, and ordinary ones by a midwife, selected by the dispensary committee, and paid 2s. 6d. for each case: the present midwife attends all poor who present a ticket: she has attended during the years ending in April—

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	24 cases.
1832	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	33 "
1834	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	36 "

All paupers who choose to apply can get tickets. There is no prescription-book kept. Vaccination (in which operation the confidence of the poor is great and increasing) is performed twice a month, gratis, and is found beneficial as a preventative of small-pox; which disease nevertheless has been prevalent latterly, and several deaths have occurred from it in the town where the persons have not been vaccinated, and several cases of modified small-pock, but no deaths after vaccination.

Nourishment. Wine or other extras, in the way of food, are not furnished from the funds of this charity; but splints, bandages and trusses have been given.

Intern Patients. The funds are so limited that at present there are not any intern patients, but the wards are still furnished with articles of furniture which belonged to the board of health, and was placed by it within the house. The wards, as before intimated, are exceedingly low and narrow, and would probably be very close and unpleasant, even to an unhealthy degree, if all the the beds were occupied. Cholera did not prevail in this district to a fatal extent in any one case, and only three cases that were suspicious occurred. The house has no lunatic ward.

The guinea subscribers constitute the governors, and the medical officer is also a governor, not ex officio, but in right of his subscription, and he has attended committees. The institution is not under the management of the surgeon, nor is any person ex officio in the principal direction. The fixed meetings occur quarterly, at which three of the governors constitute a quorum: these meetings are generally attended by three or four, but the name of the chairman only is entered. All guinea subscribers vote, but not by proxy. Minutes are kept of the proceedings.

There was formerly a committee selected from the subscribers, but this practice has been discontinued.

All officers are appointed by the subscribers. The office of treasurer and collector is filled by the same individual, who is neither paid for his services or required to give any security. There are not any printed bye-laws for the regulation of the elections, which is conducted by means of open voting, a method highly approved. Religious belief of any particular creed does not exclude any one from becoming an officer. The present medical officer is a Protestant; a sudden accession of governors has never occurred just previous to an election, nor has there ever occurred an instance of an officer being suspended or removed.

The sole attendant is the housekeeper, who does not receive any salary or perquisite, but occupies the house unfurnished, rent-free, for her services in keeping it in a proper state of cleanliness.

Reports are made to the subscribers annually, and were formerly printed, but the funds are now so scanty that the expense of printing is not incurred. The district supplies a sufficient number of persons qualified to make more minute inquiries into the wants of the poor, if it should be found expedient to extend dispensary relief.

The subscriptions and county presentments for the last three years amounted as follows:

Subscriptions - - - -	58	10	-	52	19	-	54	8	-
Presentments - - - -	29	5	-	26	9	6	27	4	-
£.	87	15	-	79	8	6	81	12	-

If one subscriber (a nobleman who is a principal landed proprietor in this country) were to withdraw, the charity would probably cease to exist, but as that event is not probable, the existence of the charity cannot be considered precarious; although the institution neither possesses capital or fund from which any annual income is derived.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands till wanted.

The expenditure for the last three years exceeded the income, and now the balance against the dispensary is about 20 l.

All bills are paid by the treasurer upon the order of the committee; the accounts are made up and verified on oath twice a year, and, as often, sent to the grand jury.

Persons who attended the Examination.

FRANCIS FURNLEY, esq.; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THE population of the district, to which this dispensary is attached, is estimated according to the census of 1831, at 4,617, extending over the parish of Holywood; the most distant point which the medical attendant is obliged to visit is about four Irish miles. The medical institutions within six miles, are those of Belfast, the dispensaries of Ballycarret, Newtown-Breda and Bangor; there is no other medical institution within the bounds of the district, which is not considered too extensive, but about as large as ought to be dependant on the attendance of one medical man. No poor of the parish are ever refused medical relief. The prevalent opinion at this place was, that it would be a very great benefit to have a building containing six or eight beds for the reception of cases of fever and bad accidents.

There is not any building or furniture belonging to the dispensary, but the medicines are kept on shelves at the end of the medical attendant's own apothecary's shop, for the use of which he is not allowed any rent; the medicines only are the property of the charity, not even the bottles in which they are kept. It would be very important that a building for dispensary purposes should be the property of the county.

The sole medical attendant on whom the appointment to this institution, in the joint capacities of surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary, was conferred, by the election of the subscribers in the year 1826, is a licentiate of the College of Surgeons at Glasgow; at which place he also obtained a license to practice midwifery, he was previously practising his profession in Bangor, and now holds no other appointment, but continues to engage in private practice. In case of his absence becoming necessary he would inform the committee, but there is not any printed bye-law on this subject; the fixed days of his attendance at the dispensary are Tuesdays, from 12 till two o'clock, but he is in the habit of furnishing medicines, &c. every day in the week; he has no assistant, but dispenses the medicines in person.

The sole medical attendant receives 40*l.* a year from the general fund, without any allowance for a horse or other conveyance. Should the subscribers be inclined to give exorbitant or unnecessary salaries or allowances to medical officers, the only control the grand jury can exercise is the withholding or diminishing the county grant. At the foundation of the dispensary in 1815, the following law stands second on the book, containing the proceedings of the dispensary; "that we shall forward to the governors of the county hospital a memorial, setting forth the sums collected by subscription, and praying their certificate to be presented at the summer assizes, in order that we may obtain that aid which the grand juries of each county are empowered to grant, by the 48th of His present Majesty's, for establishing dispensaries."

Election.

The right of election is vested in the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, all of whom are equally entitled to vote. When an election is to take place, it is advertised in the newspapers, by which means the greatest possible competition is secured. Testimonials are considered necessary and always required. There is no instance where a veto might have been considered necessary; limitations as to the age of medical officers do not exist; there were 12 candidates at the last election, and notice of the result was not sent to the grand jury. This neighbourhood contains persons in affluent circumstances sufficient in number to support a medical man, independently of the institution; there is one gentleman at present resident in the town who is eligible. Superannuation or retiring allowances are not included in the arrangements for the conducting the affairs of this charity, nor has there been any mortality among medical officers; the present officer's predecessor died on duty, but his death was occasioned by some confirmed chronic disease. In case of abuse or harshness on the part of the medical officer, the poor are well aware that they can appeal to the subscribers, who will inquire into the cause of complaint.

Pharmacy.

The medicines are kept in a part of the surgeon's shop, in a tolerably good place; the quality of the medicine seems to be good and the supply sufficient; the more delicate medicines can be also had when required. The medical attendant orders the medicine from Mr. Marshall, of Belfast, and the treasurer pays the bill on the medical attendant's certifying he has received the articles. The character of the medical man is the only guarantee that the medicines are not subsequently changed. The medicines cost,—

	£.	s.	d.
For the year 1831	30	6	5
For the year ending March 1833	18	16	11
Ditto " " 1834	11	13	6

And there is not any extra charge for spirits for tinctures, lard for ointments, &c. The dispensary year terminates in March; the year for reporting terminates in December. In 1831 the patients cost in medicine about 7½*d.* each; in the year 1832 about 2*d.* per head, and in the year 1833 rather less than 2*d.* per head. The medicines for private practice are kept in the same room with those belonging to the dispensary. An enema syringe and a stomach-pump constitute the whole stock of instruments belonging to the institution. Leeches are supplied, but only in very particular cases, and are had from Marshall, in Dublin; there is not any rule relative to vaccination, but the custom is to give and receive vaccine matter gratis; nor is there any rule relative to inoculating with small-pox matter, but the medical attendant never did and would not pursue that practice.

Patients' Registration.

There is an accurate registry kept, which distinguishes the name and disease of each patient; a statement of the number of patients attended is sent to the grand jury; all poor applicants are attended. On the last dispensary day previous to this examination, there were eight new patients, and about 23 were at the same period receiving medicine; the servants of subscribers are likewise attended and supplied with medicine; and it has been customary for five or six resident families to give the medical attendant two or three guineas annually for this attendance. Capital operations have not been performed here within the last three years; difficult cases of lying-in only are attended, and average in number to about five in the year.

Who entitled to Relief.

All pauper patients in the parish are entitled to relief, and persons capable of paying for advice or medicine do not participate in the charity; such an abuse has not been attempted. The poor may get an order, but it is the custom to attend them on their own application. Should an order be required, one subscriber's signature is sufficient, and there is not any limit to the number of recommendations each subscriber may issue. It is in the power of the subscribers to refuse assistance to any, but such a refusal never has happened and scarcely could happen here. Connected with this subject is given the following copy of a memorandum of proceedings of a committee, held on the occasion of a subscriber withdrawing his subscription:

"At a meeting of the committee of September 9th, 1819, it was moved and carried that a letter be written to ———, requesting him again to become a subscriber, and stating that in case of refusal his servants and labourers shall not hereafter have the benefit of the dispensary;" on which the following letter was accordingly written:

"Sir,—I have been requested by the committee of the Holywood dispensary, to represent to you the difficulty under which they are placed, as to the care and attendance bestowed on several of your labourers and their families by the surgeon, in consequence of the opposition you have hitherto given to that institution, by withdrawing your subscription, and to express their their anxious wish that you should become a subscriber to that charity, as it would be most repugnant to their feelings to be obliged to refuse any poor person applying for assistance, whether coming from a subscriber or non-subscriber.

Signed by the Chairman.

To the above an answer was returned, to the effect that he would become a subscriber, and sent to the secretary a donation of 2*l*.

Patients are attended at their own homes at any time, day or night, in any part of the district. The dispensary does not possess any means, such as splints, bandages, &c. of rendering assistance in cases of accident, but the medical officer has a supply of fracture-boxes, splints, &c., which he is in the habit of lending to the poor. Practitioners are not authorized to have their prescriptions made up at the institution. Difficult cases of lying-in are attended, for each of which the medical attendant is allowed 2*s*. 6*d*. Although the midwives on whose assistance poor lying-in women generally depend are very ignorant, yet the medical attendant is not aware of any injury having occurred through their want of skill; such midwives as are considered most skilful, are entered in the day-book. Vaccination is performed gratis on all applicants any day; the results are satisfactory, as it is almost always found preventive of small-pox; the confidence of the poor in vaccination is greatly increasing.

Wine, tea, bread, ale and fuel are given to the poor at the mendicity society of this place on the order of the medical attendant, who considers this a most important privilege, and greatly conducive to the speedy cure of disease. Lunatics are sent to Belfast.

The general management is vested in the subscribers of a guinea and upwards. The medical officer is not a governor. The direction of the business of the dispensary is chiefly managed by the treasurer and surgeon, but there is not any person ex officio, in the principal direction. There have been no meetings of the subscribers of late years.

There is not any managing committee. There is a book containing minutes of the proceedings at the subscribers meetings in 1825.

The sole officer, not medical, is the treasurer, whose office is unpaid, and who has never been required to give any security. Voting is viva voce, a mode which has been found beneficial. Particular religious belief excludes no one. There has never been a sudden accession of governors previous to the election of any officer. In the year 1818, as stated in the minutes of the dispensary, the then surgeon was informed, that his services were no longer required, and his successor was elected.

The reports are made out annually, and printed. This neighbourhood affords a sufficient number of persons, who are able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor.

The income derived from subscriptions, aided by presentment levied on the county, amounted during the past three years to—

	1831.			1832.			1833.

The existence of this charity does not depend on the bounty of any one individual; and unless the subscriptions materially fall off, (which is not probable), it cannot be considered precarious, although it possess no property of a fixed nature.

The treasurer collects and takes care of the funds until called on; but there is not any money in the hands of salaried officers.

The disbursements on account of this charity during the last three years amounted as follows: in

	£.	s.	d.

Population and
Extent of Country.

The population of this dispensary district amounts to upwards of 5,000, and the extent of country upwards of 7,000 statute acres. The most distant point which the medical attendant is liable to visit is full four English miles. The medical institutions within a radius of six miles, are those at Belfast and the dispensary at Ballycarrett; it is thought that the dispensaries are not sufficiently numerous in this county, but there are not any applicants refused relief. Mr. Batt, Mr. Haslett and Mr. Kinahan, are strongly of opinion, that a building containing six or eight beds appropriated to the reception of cases of fever or serious accidents, would be of great utility, and that it would be very desirable, and better for the county, that there should be several conveniently sized hospitals in various parts of the county than one very large one at Down.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

There is no building of any sort belonging to the dispensary. The drugs are kept in drawers and bottles, &c. belonging to the dispensary at the medical officers own house. There is no room for patients to wait in. It would be well if there were a building for dispensary purposes exclusively belonging to the charity.

Medical Officers.

The sole medical superintendent is a member of the College of Surgeons, London, who studied midwifery at Edinburgh; he resides at the institution, to which he was appointed by ballot of the subscribers (as general medical attendant), in 1823, previous to which period he was practising at Newtownards; he now holds no other appointment, but is a half-pay surgeon in the Royal Navy; in case of his temporary absence he provides an assistant, a friend of his own; he is allowed to pursue private practice, but must give his attendance at the dispensary on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, from 10 till 12 o'clock, when his duty is never done by proxy; these fixed periods of attendance are considered to be quite sufficient for the performance of the duties of the establishment. There is not any assistant constantly on the spot capable of affording immediate assistance in case of sudden accident; the medical superintendent dispenses the medicines himself.

Payment.

The salary of the medical officer is 50*l.* per annum, paid from the general fund, without any allowance for a horse or other conveyance, board or lodging. The grand jury regulate the amount of the county grant, and are thus supposed to possess a sufficient check to prevent any combination to raise an institution for the purpose of obtaining a grant from the county and a medical appointment.

Election.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards. When a vacancy occurs notice is given by advertisement, with a view to secure the greatest possible competition; and testimonials are considered indispensable, but no limitation as to age is observed; on the occasion of the last election there were nine candidates, and neither notice of appointment or certificates of qualification were sent to the grand jury. It is considered that the neighbourhood is scarcely sufficient to support a medical man, independent of the institution; nor are there any medical men resident in the district who are eligible to this dispensary. There are no rules as to superannuations or retiring allowances. In case of harsh conduct or neglect on the part of the medical attendant the patients are well aware that they can apply to the subscribers for redress.

Pharmacy.

The room in which the medicines are kept is a good and well-arranged shop; the medicines are of the proper description and quality, and in sufficient quantity. They are ordered and paid for by the treasurer, on the requisition of the medical officer, from Mr. Marshall, of Belfast; the character of the medical man being the only guarantee that they are not either subsequently changed or originally of inferior quality. The medicines cost for the year ending May 1834, 16*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.*, and are always under the care of the medical man, who is not permitted to sell any of them, and who does not keep medicines to supply his patients in private practice. The institution does not possess any apparatus for preparing decoctions, or surgical instruments; but the superintending physician supplies his own whenever required. The cost of the medicine for one year only is given, as Ballycarrett was previously a part of this district, but has now a separate dispensary. The medical officer is not obliged by any rule to practice vaccination, but is in the habit of vaccinating all who apply gratis; neither is there any regulation with respect to inoculating with small pox-matter; the superintending officer, however, never did or would pursue the latter practice.

Registration.

There is a register of the patients who are relieved at the institution kept, which sets forth the name and age of the patient, by whom recommended, and the nature of the disease; but there are not any means of checking this register, so as to ascertain its correctness. There are at present about eight or ten patients attended from the dispensary. There have not been any capital operations performed within the last three years. The medical officer attends about 20 lying-in cases annually.

All persons who can procure tickets of recommendation, to which the signature of one subscriber is sufficient, are attended, including the servants of subscribers, and the number of tickets which each subscriber can issue is unlimited. It has not occurred that persons, not objects of gratuitous relief, have been permitted to participate in the benefits benefits of the charity, nor has attendance been given to poor subscribers. Collusion for the purpose of swelling a subscription list, so as to obtain large grants from the county, has never been known to occur here. It has never occurred that a patient was excluded because he happened not be known or liked by the subscribers.

Patients are attended at the dispensary on the fixed days, and at their homes at any hour, day or night. In cases of accident, the dispensary does not possess any such accommodation as splints, bandages, &c. but the medical officer is obliged to use his own. No person, unconnected with it, is permitted to have his prescriptions made up at the institution. Lying-in cases are attended. The midwives here are not skilful, but few accidents have happened. There is not any prescription book kept. Vaccination is performed gratis. The effects are found to be good, and the confidence of the public in it is very extensive.

There is neither wine or any other extra given from this dispensary, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood on which an order for such, in favour of the sick poor, could be given. A lady in the neighbourhood allows the medical attendant to send any sick person to her, and she furnishes wine and food on his recommendation at her own expense.

The general management of the institution rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and has not been left, in any essential particular, to the surgeon, nor is there any one, ex officio, in the principal direction. A meeting of the subscribers takes place annually, at which about five usually attend; but no one can vote by proxy, and minutes are kept of the proceedings.

The committee of management is elected annually; minutes are kept of their proceedings. There is not any board of superintendence fixed by the grand jury.

The officers not medical, are the treasurer and secretary, the former of whom is elected annually, and fulfills the duties of his office gratuitously, and the latter in consideration of an annual salary of 1*l.*, neither being required to give any security. It is understood that the committee shall collect the funds; the voting at all elections under this charity is open, which plan has been found beneficial; religious belief of any denomination having no weight in the exclusion of any person from becoming an officer. There has not been any sudden accession of governors previous to an election, nor is there any want of a veto to prevent improper appointments. There has not been any instance of an officer being removed or suspended.

The reports are made out and printed annually of the different cases treated at the dispensary. The district affords a sufficient number of persons able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, should it be hereafter thought expedient to extend the system of relief afforded by dispensaries.

The existence of this institution (which possesses no fixed property), chiefly depends on the bounty of one or two individuals; but there is every probability that the charity will be well kept up. It has not occurred that subscriptions are attended with any stipulation as to rendering medical assistance gratis to subscribers and their families. The funds are collected by the committee, and remain in the hands of the treasurer until wanted; but no salaried officer of the institution has any thing to do with the funds.

The following appears to be as correct an account of the income and expenditure of this charity for the current year, as could be gathered from the particulars furnished to the Assistant Commissioners.

The bills are examined and paid by the treasurer, and the accounts are made up and sent, twice a year, to the grand jury.

The sick poor of a population, not less than 20,000 souls, inhabiting a district extending upwards of 12 miles north and south, and about eight east and west, receive advice and medicine at this dispensary. There is no medical institution within a radius of six miles; this district is not, however, considered too large, and none are ever refused advice. It is highly desirable to have a building proper for receiving a few cases of fever and accidents.

There is no building belonging to the dispensary, which is held at a small house in one of the principal streets, the situation of which is high and airy, possessing also the advantage of a supply of good water. The fitting up of the dispensary room comprises the whole of the furniture belonging to the charity; there are also waiting rooms for patients. The building, which is occupied by a woman who acts as care-taker, is held at will, and may be taken away from the institution at any moment, which renders it very desirable that a building should belong to the charity.

The sole medical officer of the institution (who is about 37 years of age) is a member of the college of Surgeons, Edinburgh, at which place he procured a license empowering him to practice midwifery; he resides in the town of Rathfryland, about 100 yards distant from the dispensary, to which he was appointed, in the united capacities of physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary, by the governors, in the year 1825, previous to which period he was a medical student at Edinburgh; he has no other appointment; but engages in private practice, and should his temporary absence become necessary, there are not any regulations as to his finding a substitute. He attends at the dispensary on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, from ten o'clock, till the patients are all attended to. This duty is never done by proxy. The patients, in case of neglect or harshness on his part, can apply to the governors, and are aware of this method of obtaining redress. There is no student or pupil resident on the spot. The medicines are dispensed by the surgeon.

The sole medical officer is paid 42*l.* per annum from the general fund; without any allowance for a horse or conveyance, board or lodging. The county can refuse or diminish the grant, and moreover, the Rev. John Dubourdieu states a case, on his own knowledge, in which the governors of the county infirmary interfered in the election of a surgeon at Dromore. Abuses have never been known to have taken place here; but it is supposed the grand jury could interfere to prevent any that might arise, by refusing or diminishing the grant.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and when a vacancy has occurred public notice was given by advertisement, with a view to insure the greatest possible competition. The grand jury have nothing to do with the appointment, to attain which, testimonials are indispensable on the part of candidates; but there is no other limitation as to age than such as their degree requires. There were two candidates at the last vacancy; but neither notice of appointment or certificates of qualifications were sent to the grand jury. The neighbourhood is sufficient to support a medical man independently of the institution. All medical men are eligible, and there are five at present resident in the town. There are no regulations for superannuations or retiring allowances, nor has there been any mortality among the medical men.

The room up stairs in which the drugs are kept is neatly arranged. The medicine seems to be of good quality and in sufficient quantity. The surgeon orders what medicines he wants of Mr. Hill, druggist, Dublin, and the bills are paid by the treasurer. The only guarantee that the medicines are not changed is the character of the medical officer. The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant, and he keeps the key of the shop, which is locked in his absence. The medicines are never sold under any circumstances. The medicines cost in—

1831	31	9	8
1832	84	5	—
1833	48	11	10

The medicines for private practice are not kept in the same house. There is a stomach-pump and a case of cupping glasses and two enema syringes; but these are not sufficient for the wants of the institution. These instruments may be lent, and they are allowed to be used in private practice. Leeches are not supplied. Vaccination is not enforced by any bye-law of the institution, nor is there any regulation against inoculation with small-pock virus; but the surgeon who performs the former operation gratis never did and never would inoculate.

A register of the patients attended, which is regularly kept, distinguishes the diseases and treatment; the entries are made at the moment the patients attend. There is not any summary sent to the grand jury. There have been three or four capital operations performed within the last three years, and all were successful. None but difficult cases of labour are attended. They amount, for the last three years, to five or six. Every applicant must be furnished with a ticket; servants of subscribers must likewise have tickets. Attempts are sometimes made to impose on the governors; it is not, however, easily done. There are no poor subscribers. There has not been any such abuse practised as a contract between individuals to swell a subscription list, so as to obtain a large grant from the county. Every pauper living in the town may have advice at his own home, provided he has a ticket signed by one subscriber; but should he live at a greater distance, two signatures are requisite. Subscribers are not limited in the number of their tickets, and the poor can always procure them. There is no appeal from the governors to the grand jury by a pauper who may feel neglected.

Extern Patients.

Extern patients are seen at the institution and at their own homes, at any time in the day or night, any where in the district. In cases of bad accidents, the dispensary possesses a supply of splints and bandages wherewith to render effective assistance. Practitioners cannot have their prescriptions made up here. Midwives attend among the paupers generally; they are not skilful, and injuries are often known to occur from their ignorance. The order-book contains a list of the medicines usually required: Vaccination is performed at the institution institution gratis. It is found a preventative of small-pox, which is scarcely known in the district. The confidence in vaccination is very great; almost every child is vaccinated.

Extras in the way of food are never given from the funds of this charity, nor is there any other institution on which an order can be given in favour of the sick poor. Lunatics are sent to the district asylum.

There is not any committee, and the general management is vested in the governors, amongst whom there is neither medical nor salaried officer; the management has principally devolved on the surgeon. There is no person ex officio in the principal direction. There are no fixed meetings; no rule on the subject of a quorum; nor any voting by proxy. Minutes of meetings have been kept, but not latterly.

The treasurer is the only non-medical officer, and he also discharges the duties of collector. His office is considered permanent, and his services are given without any pecuniary reward, and without being required to enter into any security. There are not any printed bye-laws regulating the elections, at which the voting is open, a plan which has been found beneficial. No religious belief excludes any one; the present surgeon is a protestant. There has not been any accession of governors at an election, and the grand jury have nothing to do with these proceedings. There is no instance of an officer being removed or suspended.

There are not any reports now made out. The neighbourhood can supply a sufficient number of persons, who are capable of looking after the wants of the poor.

The receipts derived from the subscriptions during each of the last three years, have amounted as follows:—

1831	50	12	10½
1832	70	13	7½
1833	78	4	10½

The grand jury presentments equalled the above sums in each year. The subscribers amounted in number at the period of this examination to 35; the largest subscription was 20*l.*, the smallest 1*l.* 1*s.*; the withdrawal of one or two subscribers would materially injure, but not destroy the institution; its existence is not considered precarious. Subscriptions are not attended with any stipulations. This institution possesses a funded property of 150*l.* vested in the four per cents.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, in whose hands they remain until required for disbursement; but no salaried officer ever has money in his hands.

The following is the expenditure for the past three years:—

	£.	s.	d.
1831	93	3	10½
1832	108	11	2½
1833	162	1	1

The accounts are made up twice a year, audited by the governors and sent to the grand jury. The principal items of expenditure, are surgeon's salary 42*l.*, allowance for visits, which varies, and amounted in 1833 to 22*l.* 5*s., druggist's bills and rent 8*l.* The surgeon receives 2*s.* 6*d.* for each visit outside the town and within two miles, and 5*s.* for each visit beyond that limit. The visiting tickets are examined by the governors and certified twice a year, they are entered by the governors in the register, and signed by the treasurer.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Rev. JOHN DAVIS.—Mr. HAMILTON.—Judge JEBB.—Mr. M'CORMIC.—Rev. Mr. MURPHY, R. C. C. Mr. ROBINSON.—Mr. WRIGHT; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THE population, the sick of which, the dispensary is intended to relieve, could not be stated, but the district was said to extend about 20 miles east and west, and seven miles north and south; the most distant point to which the medical officer is liable to be sent is about nine miles. The institutions within six miles are Newry dispensary and fever hospital, Rathfryland dispensary and Carlingford dispensary; there is not any other medical institution

* The medical superintendent of this dispensary keeps an open apothecary's shop in the town. He orders the dispensary medicines from a druggist in Dublin, whilst he purchases his own shop medicines in Glasgow, as he states. Besides the medicines from Dublin, the medical superintendent is in the habit of ordering some from a merchant in Newry: such articles as the following, more or less, every year.

Year ending January 1834:—	Sulph. and salts	-	-	-	-	£. 3	18	-
	Sulph. and cr. tarter	-	-	-	-	2	6	6
	Senna and cloves	-	-	-	-	-	17	-
	Spirits for tinctures	-	-	-	-	1	18	-
	Lard for ointment	-	-	-	-	-	-	-

The surgeon gave as reason for this, that the articles are heavy, and are bought in Newry to save carriage. The number of persons to whom medical aid was given in the year ending January 1833 was 802, and the cost of medicine to each, 2*s.*; in the year ending January 1834, the number of persons relieved was 803, and the cost of medicine to each 1*s.* 4*d.* It is worthy of attention to mark the strong contrast between this and the Castlewella dispensary, on the point of charges.

institution in the neighbourhood. The district is not considered too large; it is principally mountainous in the distant parts, and the population is much concentrated near the two stations. Recommendations from subscribers are necessary to entitle persons to obtain relief; proper patients are never refused a ticket, which is obtained without difficulty. It is very desirable that there should be a building capable of receiving a few patients in cases of fever or accident.

There is no building of any sort or kind belonging to the dispensary at Warrenpoint; but the medical attendant is allowed 8*l.* 8*s.* per annum, and provides a room in his own house for the dispensary drugs; there is no separate waiting-room for patients. It is very desirable that a proper building should be provided for the dispensary, and should belong to the county, the house it is kept in being held at will. The present dispensary is in a healthy well drained situation. The drugs at Rostrevor (a branch of this dispensary,) are kept in a room for which 4*l.* per annum is paid by the committee.

The sole medical officer is a graduate in medicine of Edinburgh, and a surgeon of the same place; he resides at the institution, to which he was appointed in the year 1828, at a general meeting of the governors; he has no other appointment, but pursues private practice as a physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary; in case of his absence or illness application must be made to the governors, and a written permission obtained. He attends on Monday and Friday at Warrenpoint, and on Wednesday at Rostrevor; his duty is never done by proxy. In cases of negligence the poor can and do apply to the person from whom they obtained a ticket, and it is the constant practice of the governors to inquire if they have been properly attended to.

The surgeon's salary is 50*l.* per annum for dispensing the medicines, 2*s.* 6*d.* for each visiting ticket, and 7*s.* 6*d.* for each labour ticket, all which is paid from the general fund. He has no allowance for horse, and is not provided with either board or lodgings from the funds. The grand jury can either refuse or limit the grant, and the control of the grand jury is found sufficient to prevent abuse, in case the committee or subscribers should make excessive allowances for salaries, &c. The salary and money received by the surgeon, taken together, averages in amount, from 90*l.* to 100*l.* per annum.

The medical attendant is elected by the governors; notice of the election is not given to the grand jury, who have not any influence in the appointment; but pains are taken to ensure, by advertisement, the greatest possible competition. There are no regulations with regard to superannuation or retiring allowances; nor has there been any mortality among the medical officers.

The room which contains the medicines is about 20 feet long by 10 broad; it is damp, having nothing but an earthen floor; it contains a number of old drawers, and the requisite number of bottles for medicine; the stock of medicine was small at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners, the quarterly allowance being nearly exhausted; they are supplied in any quantity and of good quality, at the request of the medical attendant, and to the order of the treasurer; and the medical attendant may be examined, on oath, as to the disposal of the medicines which are prepared and distributed by himself, and are always under his care, and never sold; those for private practice are not kept in the same room. The institution possesses an apparatus for compounding medicines, but no surgical instruments of any kind. The medicine for the year ending March 1833, including carriage, cost 64*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.*, and the number of patients attended during the same period was 1,858, which will be found to show an average expense of about 1*s.* 6*d.* per head for medicine alone; this appears very high, but the medicines are paid for by the treasurer. The medicine for the year ending March 1834 cost 68*l.* 2*s.* Leeches are not supplied. The medical attendant vaccinates all applicants gratis; there are no bye-laws relative to inoculating with small-pock virus, but the medical attendant never does, and never would have recourse to that operation.

A register is kept by the medical attendant, which distinguishes the disease, treatment and result; this is placed quarterly before the board of governors, but a copy is never sent to, or required, by the grand jury. On the day the Assistant Commissioners visited this charity there were 107 on the books, and about 30 new patients; this register is most accurately kept, and the details most creditable to the medical officer.

An order from a subscriber to which one signature is sufficient, and which there is no difficulty in procuring, entitles a poor person to be attended, but not the servants of subscribers. The abuse occasioned by improper persons obtaining assistance is guarded against as much as possible, but it is sometimes attempted. There are no poor subscribers. There has not been any contract or collusion to swell the subscription list, and thereby to obtain a larger grant from the county. The visiting tickets * are limited to four for each one pound subscriber; the clergy of all denominations receive double that number; the number of advice tickets is unlimited; the case of a pauper being denied relief has never happened. There is no appeal from the governors to the grand jury, in case a pauper shall feel aggrieved.

Patients

* The governors tickets are of three kinds, viz.:
1st. For advice and medicine at the dispensary.
2d. Ditto - - - ditto at home.
3d. Child bed or labour tickets.

These tickets are preserved and checked at the quarterly meetings, so that no subscriber may issue more than four. The Assistant Commissioners were present at one of these meetings, and observed that every thing was most satisfactory.

Patients are seen at the institution or visited at their homes, in the country, when they obtain a visiting ticket; but if the sick pauper resides either in Warren's Point or Rostrevor, he is visited, on dispensary days, without a visiting ticket; attendance would be given in the night, if required. The institution does not possess the means of supplying splints, bandages, &c. in case of accident; nor is any one unconnected with the charity authorized to have prescriptions made up at the dispensary. Lying-in cases are attended from the dispensary by ticket; the surgeon attends all difficult cases, for which he is paid 7s. 6d. from the dispensary funds; a properly educated midwife from Dublin, is employed by the charity at the rate of 5s. for each labour case; she was sent to Dublin at the expense of one individual, to be instructed at the lying-in hospital; but the midwives in general are very unskilful, and as injury has been known to arise from their ignorance, it is considered highly desirable that care should be taken to provide properly instructed midwives for the poor. Vaccination is performed gratis at the dispensary, and pains taken to insure the return of the patient; small-pox has been known to take place afterwards, but not in any case which the medical attendant considered to have passed properly through the vaccine disease, but some individuals who were vaccinated, but did not pass through the vaccine disease, had the small-pox, yet modified; the confidence of the public in the efficacy of vaccination is known to be diminishing in this neighbourhood. Extras are occasionally furnished from the funds of the charity, such as trusses, bandages, &c., but not wine or food. There is no charity in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given for such; but the surgeon is authorized by several of the resident gentry, more particularly by the gentlemen who are likewise subscribers, to give an order on them for any article of diet he considers necessary; and occasionally to take a lodging in case of accident.

The committee of management is elected by the subscribers, and the medical officer is excluded, neither has the institution been in any essential degree under his management, and the committee pay great attention to the institution; a salaried officer has not any participation in the management, nor any other person ex officio. The fixed meetings take place quarterly, at which five constitute a quorum; the meetings are regularly attended by seven or eight governors, all of whom are equally entitled to vote, but not by proxy. Minutes are kept of the proceedings. The grand jury have nothing to do with the appointment of the managers, and the treasurer is annually appointed by the governors by open voting, a method of proceeding which has been found beneficial. Particular religious belief does not exclude any one from becoming an officer. The present medical attendant is a protestant. There was no sudden accession of governors at any election. A controlling veto in a superior authority against an improper appointment is not here thought desirable.

The treasurer is not a paid officer, nor does he give any security.

The rules for the governance of the affairs of this charity are not printed, nor were any alterations suggested connected with the present management.

There are not any printed reports, but written reports are made quarterly to the committee. This neighbourhood contains a sufficient number of persons, able and willing to look after the wants of the poor, if it should be required, or the dispensary aid extended.

The annual subscription for 1832 was 116*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*; for 1833 81*l.* 19*s.* The presentment is the same amount as the subscriptions. The largest annual subscription is 10*l.* 10*s.*; the smallest is 1*l.*; none of the poorer classes subscribe. The existence of the charity does not depend upon the bounty of any one individual; but the withdrawal of the support afforded by one family would greatly impair its efficacy. If the subscriptions fell off, the charity must cease; but its existence is not precarious. There are no stipulations accompanying subscriptions to the effect that medical advice or attendance for the subscriber, or any of his family, should be given gratuitously. The subscriptions are brought to the treasurer, in whose hands the funds are lodged, and money is never left in any salaried officers' hands.

The following is an abstract of the accounts of this institution, for the year ending in March 1834:—

THE district for this dispensary extends over the parishes of Coleraine, Ballyrashane, part of Agherton, Killowen, part of Dunboe and part of Macosquin; or more exactly, the medical officer has to attend to the extent of three miles without remuneration, and eight miles with a remuneration of 5s., paid by the subscriber recommending. The town of Coleraine contains upwards of 6,000, and the liberties 20,000 or 30,000 inhabitants; and the medical attendant is expected to attend all the sick poor of Coleraine and its liberties, which extend to a distance of four miles and a half from the town. The dispensaries within six miles of the institution are those at Port-stewart, Port-rush and Aghadery. These are considered to be well placed, and sufficiently numerous, still there is great want here of intern accommodation for sick poor labouring under fever or bad accidents, the nearest intern accommodation being at Derry, which is 25 Irish miles distant.*

The dispensary is the lower story of a small house in the centre of the town, the upper part of which is let off. The lower story contains two rooms, one for the medicines and the other for stores, which latter is, however, now empty. There is very little space for a waiting-room for the patients. The dispensary, as it now exists, was formed in 1828; but there has been one here since the year 1819. However, owing to some misunderstanding among the subscribers, the original one fell to the ground, and the present institution was formed. The house is hired; but the subscribers, finding it bad, are about to remove. It would be better if the dispensary building were the property of the charity; but there are no funds that would establish or buy a building for the purpose.

The sole medical officer is a surgeon of Glasgow, and has a midwifery diploma from Edinburgh, besides a certificate from the Apothecaries' Company, Dublin. He was appointed by the subscribers as general medical attendant, in 1827, and resides near the dispensary. He is a practitioner in the town, and was so before his appointment. There are not any bye-laws relative to his absence; but when about to absent himself, he procures the assistance of medical gentlemen resident in the town, but otherwise his duty is not done by proxy. He is allowed private practice. The days of attendance are Tuesday and Friday from ten until two o'clock, and afterwards he is expected to visit all patients who are recommended. In case the medical officer is irregular in attendance, the poor can complain to the subscribers, and they are aware of this privilege. When cases of accident occur, there is not any person resident at the dispensary or on the spot to afford immediate relief. The medicines are dispensed by the medical attendant.

The medical officer† has no allowance for a horse, board or lodging; but for every visit he pays out of the liberties, he is allowed 5s., which is paid, as already stated, by the person recommending.

The election of medical officers rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards. In appointing or displacing medical officers, there is not any limitation with respect to age. There has not been any election since the revival of this establishment in 1828; and there was not any notice of appointment or certificate of qualifications sent to the grand jury. About eight or nine medical men reside in the town, who are eligible to the institution.

The room for the medicines is tolerably neatly kept, and contains an ample supply, which appear to be of good quality. The supply of medicine was most abundant, and the counter was covered with various articles, among others, with bottles of spirits to make tinctures; there was a large quantity of castor oil in the shop, and some quinine, &c. The medicines are bought from the Glasgow Company of Apothecaries. They are ordered through the secretary, and paid for by the treasurer; and the shop in which they are kept is locked up, and the key kept by the medical attendant. None of the dispensary medicines are sold, and those for private practice are kept quite separate. There are not any surgical instruments belonging to the institution, nor are leeches supplied to the patients.

A register is kept, which mentions the name and residence of the patients, and the name of the recommender. It is made by copying the tickets into a book; but from the want of superintendence, it is kept in an irregular manner, and is not of such a nature as to afford data on which to calculate.

All persons are relieved who can get tickets, but none others. The domestic servants of subscribers may get tickets. The ticket system prevents the abuse of persons, whose circumstances do not require it, obtaining gratuitous assistance; and such an abuse as the forming a contract for the purpose of obtaining large grants from the county, by swelling a subscription list, has not been known to have occurred here. One ticket is sufficient for a family

* There is a well managed mendicity institution and poor house in Coleraine, with an income of about 400 l. by voluntary contributions. There is also a poor loan fund. The loan advanced is 2 l. 2 s., to be repaid at the rate of 3 s. 6 d. a month, payable the second month after the loan.

† The salary of the medical attendant was raised from 45 l. to 50 l. per annum, and afterwards, in 1833, to 60 l. At which, by a general meeting of the subscribers, it was fixed, in case the excess of income above the expenditure affords that sum.

family, and the signature of one subscriber is sufficient to give it validity. Each subscriber of one guinea is limited to twelve visiting tickets, but is unlimited in the number for medicine from the dispensary. Smaller subscribers can also issue tickets at the rate of 1s. for each visiting ticket, and 6d. for the others. Attendance would be given at night if required. The institution, in cases of accident, does not possess the means of affording immediate assistance in the way of splints, bandages, &c. At present, no persons unconnected with the institution can have their prescriptions made up at it; but this was formerly the case. Difficult lying-in cases are attended by the dispensary surgeon, on the nurses certifying that instruments are required; but the poor are mostly attended by unskilful midwives, through whose ignorance accidents are known to occur.

The prescriptions used are not entered in any book. Vaccination is performed on all who are recommended, on their depositing 1s., which is returned on the child being brought the next week. The medical officer has a good opinion of vaccination, but will not inoculate with small-pock virus, and few failures are ever heard of. The confidence of the poor also, in its effects is good. Small-pox has not been frequent of late.

Neither wine or any other extra is ever furnished to the sick poor from the funds of the institution, nor is there any charity established in the neighbourhood for affording food, clothing or fuel to the sick poor, on which the medical man could give an order.

This establishment does not afford any intern accommodation. All lunatic cases are sent to the Derry District Asylum.

All persons subscribing one guinea and upwards, are entitled to participate in the principal management; but the medical officer is not a governor, nor has the institution been under his management. There is no person ex officio in the principal direction. The fixed and only meetings occur annually. Minutes are kept of the meetings. There is great difficulty in getting any one to attend to the institution, only two gentlemen seem to have attended regularly.

There is not a managing committee.

The officers not medical, are the treasurer and the secretary. The money is collected by various subscribers. There are no bye-laws. Since this dispensary was established, there has not been any sudden accession of governors at elections; but on the present medical attendant having been out-voted at the annual election to the office of surgeon to the Killowen dispensary in 1827, which he then held, by a young man who had purchased himself in, by creating votes, his friends seceded from the institution and established this, and thus the Killowen dispensary, unable to go on without the subscriptions of those who had seceded, united with the Coleraine, assumed the present denomination of both, and re-elected him as medical attendant.

The only report on the affairs of this institution is a statement of the number attended, which is found at the end of the register, but is not printed.

This charity does not depend on any one family; but there is great difficulty in keeping up the subscriptions, and the charity does not possess any capital stock in houses or lands.

The funds remain in the custody of the treasurer until wanted; but no money remains in the hands of the salaried officer.

Population and Extent of Country.

THE population for which this dispensary is intended amounts to about 19,620, and the district extends over 12,611 acres. The most distant point at which the surgeon is obliged to visit is about 3½ miles. The medical institutions within six miles, are the Derry county infirmary, the district lunatic asylum, the dispensaries at Muff, Glandermott, Faughanvale, Cumber, Donagheady and Upper Cumber; the only (strictly speaking) medical charity in this Dispensary district is the Derry county infirmary, and it does not afford extern relief. The grand jury and the inhabitants appear satisfied, both with the number and situation of the neighbouring dispensaries. There is no want of intern accommodation here, as the county infirmary is close by. It would, however, be certainly a great comfort and convenience to attach a ward capable of receiving bad accidents and fever cases, to dispensaries in rural districts.

Building, Furniture and Grounds.

The dispensary is placed at a house, about 20 feet in front, in a wide and airy street, (Bishop's-street) containing on the ground floor the shop, the consulting-room and a kitchen, which also serves as a waiting-room; on the first-floor is the board-room; the remainder of the house is occupied by the midwife and attendant, who live rent-free, and take care of the premises. The grounds consist of a back-garden. The premises are held on lease from year to year, but it would be better (if it were practicable) that the dispensary concerns should belong to the charity.

Medical Officers.

The only medical officer attached to the institution is 39 years of age; he graduated in medicine at the University of Edinburgh, where he was also educated in midwifery; he resides in the town, having been appointed to this dispensary as general medical attendant in 1820, previously to which he was practising in Derry; he is also inspector of the gaol at a salary of 90*l.*, and surgeon to the Gwyn charity, at a salary of 50*l.*, besides being a surgeon on half-pay. In case of absence, he gives notice to the committee; but his duty is never otherwise done by proxy: he is allowed to have private practice. In case of accident, there is not any medical person here, who is always on the spot to render immediate assistance; such cases being always sent to the county infirmaries. The medicines are dispensed by an assistant, who is appointed by the principal medical attendant, under sanction of the governors.

Payment.

The surgeon's salary is 100*l.* per annum, paid from the general fund; but he has no allowances or perquisites. His assistant receives only 3*l.* 3*s.* per annum from the charity. Should the subscribers choose to authorize salaries or allowances higher than are requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, the grand jury can curtail the grant; and in case of combination between a medical man and his friends to raise an institution and defraud the county by a nominal subscription list; the control also rests with the grand jury.

Election.

The medical officer is elected by the subscribers of a guinea and upwards. No vacancy has occurred since the establishment was formed when the present medical attendant was the only candidate, and neither notice of his appointment or certificates of his qualifications were sent to the grand jury.

Pharmacy.

There is not any limitation as to age either in appointing or displaying the medical officer. In Derry there are several medical men who are eligible to the institution; should the medical officer be harsh to or neglect the patients, they can complain to a subscriber, and are aware of this means of obtaining an investigation.

The room in which the medicine is kept is in the front. It is about 12 feet square, and is fitted up with shelves and drawers, &c.; the medicines are of good quality and in sufficient quantity; there is also a proper supply of the more delicate medicines: they are provided by P. Stanley & Co., Dublin, and by the Glasgow Apothecaries' Company; and the character of the medical attendant guarantees, that the medicines are not changed and inferior ones introduced; they are paid for by the treasurer on an order from the committee. The medicines supplied to this institution during each of the past three years, cost—

1831	70	9	10½
1832	50	11	10
1833	98	19	8

No medicines belonging to the institution are ever sold, and none but the dispensary medicines are kept at the institution, the shop is locked up, and the key kept by the assistant. There

There are not any surgical instruments, or apparatus for preparing decoctions belonging to the charity, nor are leeches supplied to the patients.

Four books are regularly kept and filled up to the day, in the first are entered the names of new patients and of their several recommenders ; in the second, the names of each person prescribed for, whether new or old, and an outline of the prescription ordered ; in the third, the names of patients visited each day ; in the fourth, the names of persons vaccinated. A monthly return is made of midwifery cases by the midwife to the committee, and a general return sent to the grand jury ; but there is not any register kept of those who are refused advice. The number of patients on the books during the last two days of visiting was 155 and 123, of these 11 and 10 respectively were new recommendations. All cases of capital operation are taken to the county infirmary. The number of midwifery cases attended by the midwife during the last three years were, in—

1831	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	141
1833	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	150

All persons to whom the subscribers present tickets are entitled to relief ; but care is taken that none are given to persons able to pay ; one subscriber's signature is sufficient, and the number of tickets which each may issue is unlimited : the subscribers are particularly cautious with the midwifery recommendations, every ticket for the services of the midwife, must certify that the recommender has ascertained from his or her own knowledge, that the woman recommended is not in circumstances to pay for such services ; this course is adopted in order to avoid injuring those properly educated medical men, who derive a larger proportion of their income from such cases. All applicants must absolutely have tickets, except those who apply to be vaccinated, none of whom are ever refused, although there is no rule to that effect ; but for other cases, tickets are not given to any living out of the district, Participation in the benefits of the charity, by persons whose circumstances do not require gratuitous assistance, is guarded against by the ticket system as much as possible, but no such plan has been ever heard of here, as a contract for the purpose of swelling a subscription list and thus obtaining large grants from the county.

The sick are attended at their houses at the discretion of the surgeon, but it is imperative on him to attend in the house all severe cases. All accidents go to the county infirmary. Practitioners unconnected with the institution cannot have prescriptions made up here. Lying-in cases are attended by a midwife appointed by the governors ; after each case the medical attendant certifies in the ticket to the fact of the midwife's attendance ; this ticket is laid before the committee at the next monthly meeting, and they order payment at the rate of 4 s. for each case.

The present midwife is self-instructed. There have been two properly instructed midwives from the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, but both turned out ill. The midwife is provided with fuel and lodging at the dispensary besides the 4 s. for each case. The poor are generally attended by unskilful midwives ; but accidents are not known to happen, as there are so many medical men at hand. There is a prescription book at the institution in which are entered those remedies, which appeared usual in the cases treated. Vaccination is generally efficacious, and the confidence of the public in the operation is good and increasing. Small-pox has been very little known here of late years ; the medical attendant does not and will not inoculate with small-pock virus.

Wine or other extras are never furnished to the sick, nor is there any charity on which the surgeon can give an order, except a penny society to which he is a subscriber, and on which he can give an order for clothes or food, but this is a very limited charity as to means.

All lunatic cases are sent to the Derry District Asylum.

The general management is in the subscribers of a guinea and upwards, and the Institution is not essentially under the management of the surgeon who is not a governor, nor is any person ex officio in the principal direction ; the meetings are annual, at which five governors constitute a quorum, from 15 to 20 is considered a good attendance : voting is not allowed by proxy, except on the part of ladies. Minutes of the proceedings are kept. There is a managing committee, consisting of nine elected annually, who meet the first Tuesday in each month ; minutes are also kept of their proceedings ; the weekly reports of the medical officer are examined, checked for the preceding month, and entered under the following heads : new orders during the month ; number of prescriptions, or medical dispensations ; number of vaccinations ; number of visits paid by surgeon ; number of midwifery cases ; the diseases are not specified, except in the cases visited at home.

In the year 1833, the Grand Jury of the county of Derry appointed a board of superintendance of all the charitable institutions to which the county money was presented. This board consisted of certain of the grand jury of the county, and certain other individuals not of the grand jury, but who took an active interest in these charities.

The officers, not medical, are the treasurer and the secretary. The committee audit the accounts. There are no printed bye-laws. Religious belief does not exclude any person from being an officer. The non-medical officers are not paid, and no instance has occurred of an officer being suspended or removed.

There is a female servant who takes care of the house, and who is paid 3 l. per annum.

A short report is made out annually, and printed in the newspapers. This district affords sufficient number of persons, who are qualified and willing to assist in a more minute investigation

This charity does not depend on the bounty of any one individual, and its existence is not likely to cease. It has not been known here for subscribers to stipulate, that themselves and their families are to receive medicine and medical advice gratuitously. There is not any capital, stock, &c., belonging to the institution.

The subscriptions are collected by gentlemen appointed by the governors at the annual meetings ; these gentlemen are unpaid, and are subscribers.

The principal items of expenditure are medicines, salaries and rent. The disbursements for the year 1833 amounted as follows :—

Muff Dispensary.

This charity was established by the Grocer's Company of London, to whom the village and immediate neighbourhood belong, for the benefit of the poor of their own estate exclusively. The gentleman who was then and still is surgeon to the establishment, resided in Derry, at a distance of four or five miles, and attended but for four hours on one day in each week. His salary was 52*l.* 10*s.* without a house. He has at present no idea of the number of his daily or annual patients at that time.

In 1829 or 1830, the company took in additional subscribers to their dispensary and applied to the county for the usual grant of an equivalent, which they obtained, on condition that the poor of the whole parish should have access, when recommended, to the benefits of the charity. The medical attendant from that period has been obliged to reside on the spot ; his salary having been increased to 60*l.* per annum, (still without a house), and his attendance two days in the week.

The names of new patients only are registered, 39 of whom applied on the day of this examination. Medicines are never given to any person who does not present a ticket of recommendation : this ticket the patient is obliged to keep ; but prescriptions are not written, nor is medicine ordered by numbers, nor can former treatment be referred to in any manner.

The medical attendant stated that he is convinced (and he showed his register of diseases in proof of his statement) that the poor sub-tenants of the company often come to the dispensary when they really do not require medicine, in order to strengthen their claims on the company's poor fund. The authorities of the company give money to the sick poor, without the certificate of the medical attendant.

Rev. R. DILL, Presbyterian Minister.—Rev. ROBERT GAGE, Curate of Newtown.—MARCUS M'CAUSLAND, esq.—Rev. WILLIAM PORTER, Unitarian Minister.—Rev. WILLIAM SMYLY, Rector of Aughaloo.—The Medical Attendant of the Institution, and his Nephew, who usually acts for him.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district for which this dispensary was intended extends over a large portion of five parishes. The only medical institution within six miles is the Ballykelly dispensary, distant three miles, (which dispensary belongs to the Fishmongers' Company). The medical attendant here is expected to visit within three miles without additional remuneration, and at a distance of upwards of six miles Irish, at the requisition of a subscriber, who pays an additional 5*s.* The county is pretty well supplied with dispensaries, and applicants have never been refused medical relief here ; but all who apply must be provided with tickets. The want of internal accommodation for fevers and bad accidents is much felt, and it would be very beneficial if a small infirmary could be attached to the district.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The dispensary is held at a small house behind the main street, the front room of which serves as a waiting-room, and the back room as the dispensary. The upper story is occupied by a midwife, who takes care of the building for which she resides rent-free, she is besides employed by the subscribers to attend the poor, the patient paying her 2*s.* 6*d.* and the recommender recommender 2 s. 6 d. on each case. The present midwife has been instructed in her duties by the medical attendant. The building is hired by the year at a rent of 6 l., but if circumstances admitted it would be more desirable that the building should belong to the charity.

The medical officer is a graduate in medicine of Glasgow, and surgeon of London; he is a naval surgeon, and has a midwifery diploma from Glasgow; he resides at Ballykelly, distant about three miles from this institution, to which he was appointed 10 or 12 years ago; he is likewise medical attendant to the Ballykelly dispensary, for which he has 100 l., and a house rent-free, without other perquisites; he attends daily at Ballykelly from nine to eleven o'clock; he is besides allowed private practice. The duty at this dispensary is done by a nephew of the medical attendant, who attends daily from eight till eleven o'clock; he is also a physician of Glasgow and a surgeon of the London college, and the arrangement with regard to salary is a private matter, with which the subscribers do not interfere. The regular medical attendant is always liable to be called upon, and is answerable to the subscribers. If the medical officers be irregular in attendance, the poor are aware that they can complain to a subscriber. The midwife's family live at the dispensary, and the gentleman who usually attends instead of the medical attendant within a few paces, so that if a sudden accident should occur he is within call. The medicines are dispensed by the physician attending.

The sole recognized medical officer receives a sum proportioned to the income and outlay, his salary therefore fluctuates, and depends upon the amount and quantity of medicine expended: during each of the last two years, he has received 50 l.; the previous year 36 l. only. The 5 s. each for extra attendances have produced 4 l. 4 s. for the same period, and this latter sum has always been paid by the same person. If the committee or subscribers choose to authorize salaries, allowances or perquisites much higher than are requisite to obtain efficient medical officers, it is felt that the grand jury would prevent such abuse.

The medical officers are elected by the subscribers of one guinea and upwards. There has been no vacancy of late. There are no rules as to the age of the officers, either in appointing or displacing them. Notice of appointment, with age or certificates of qualification is not sent to the grand jury. There are three medical gentlemen in the neighbourhood eligible as medical attendants of the dispensary. There are no rules as to superannuations or resignations of medical officers.

The room, in which the medicines are kept, is in good order, the supply of medicine most ample and of good quality, including the more delicate descriptions, such as quinine, croton oil, &c. There is a great and unnecessary supply of some particular medicines, as corrosive sublimate, red precipitate of mercury, Senna, Quassia, Gentian, while there is a total deficiency of others, such as castor oil. The medicines are supplied by the Glasgow Apothecaries' Company. The surgeon* draws up the list of medicines required, and submits it to the treasurer and secretary half yearly. The medical attendant pays for the medicines, and gives a receipt for the amount to the treasurer of the charity, who thus indirectly discharges the amount, which was—

In 1831	54	4	6
1832	18	18	8
1833	30	18	5½

The medicines are kept locked up by the physician, who keeps the key. None of the dispensary medicines are sold to any one. The physician, who usually attends, keeps an apothecary's shop in the town; but this is quite distinct from the dispensary. The institution does not possess any apparatus for preparing decoctions, &c.; and a stomach-pump is the only surgical instrument which it possesses. Leeches are supplied by the medical men, who furnish them at cost price, which they charge to the dispensary funds.

A register† is kept, which distinguishes the name, residence and disease of the patient, the medicines prescribed, and by whom the patient was recommended. This register is made from the subscriber's tickets; but formerly one ticket frequently stood for a whole family. Now, for the last three months, a separate ticket of the following form for each individual is absolutely required:—

NEWTOWN LIMAVADY

* The medical attendant orders medicines for the dispensary of Ballykelly, and for his own shop, as well as for this institution, from the same druggists. He prepares neither tinctures nor ointments, nor medicines of any kind for the Ballykelly Dispensary, and therefore makes no charge for lard, spirits or crude mercury to that institution, while there are occasionally items to the amount of 5 l. or 6 l. for such materials charged to the Limavady Dispensary. Thus, for the one he orders all the medicines ready prepared, while he takes the trouble of preparing several for the other. Yet, the whole expense for medicine at Ballykelly for the last year, for 1,869 patients prescribed for, was from 35 l. to 40 l. While for the year ending March 1, 1832, the outlay of medicine and medical sundries at the Limavady Dispensary was 54 l. 4 s. 6 d., for 1,127 patients.

† This register is kept with extreme accuracy, and is filled up every day. There is one column in it not usually found in such documents, headed "Number of each disease." In this column is seen at one view, the number of cases of any given disease that may have occurred, from the beginning of the year up to the time of inquiry.

Newtown Limavady
Dispensary.

The fixed attendance at the dispensary is on Tuesdays and Saturdays from eleven till two o'clock. Any person absenting himself for three successive days of attendance, will be struck off the books, unless he sends an intelligent person to state his reasons for so doing. The signature of one subscriber to each ticket is sufficient, and subscribers are unlimited in their number. There was only one new patient at the dispensary when visited. There is no register kept of the midwifery cases.

Who entitled to
Relief.

All who can procure a ticket have a right to obtain medicine. Domestic servants of subscribers do not hold tickets. The abuse of persons participating in the benefits of the charity, who are not in circumstances to require gratuitous assistance, is supposed to exist, but not to any great extent; but it never has been heard of in the county, that a contract has been made with individuals for the purpose of swelling a subscription list, and thus obtaining large grants from the grand jury.

Extern Patients.

In case an accident should occur, as a fractured limb, the institution does not possess the means; splints, bandages, &c. of rendering immediate assistance. No medical person, unconnected with the institution, can have prescriptions made up there. The poor lying-in women are most generally attended by ignorant midwives, and accidents are known to occur thereby. The prescription-book, on inspection, appeared to contain the prescriptions proper for the cases. All are vaccinated who apply, with or without a ticket; but inoculation with small-pock virus is never performed. The results of vaccination are found efficacious, and the confidence of the people in it is pretty strong. Two years since, small-pox prevailed in this neighbourhood; and every now and then a case occurs. There was a temporary fund raised when the cholera prevailed in the county, and which furnishes some assistance to the families of those who have perished from that disease.

Nourishment.

Wine or other extras are not furnished to the sick from the funds of the dispensary, nor is there any charity in the neighbourhood on which an order can be given in behalf of the sick poor, for food, clothing or fuel.

Intern Patients.

When lunatic cases occur, they are sent to the Derry asylum.

ment.

The sole management is now with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards. The surgeon is a governor in right of his subscription, but has never voted. There is not any person ex officio in the principal direction. The fixed meetings are annual, and five constitute a quorum, eight or nine generally attending. Minutes are kept, but signed only by the chairman. None can vote by proxy.

Officers not medical.

The officers not medical are the secretary (the Rector of the parish) and the treasurer.

A sudden accession of governors or governesses immediately previous to the election of officers was attempted, but prevented by a bye-law. There is not any instance of an officer having been suspended or removed.

Reports.

Annual reports are made out and sent to the subscribers, but none of the reports for a later period than 1832 could be procured. The district affords a sufficient number of persons, able and willing to assist in a more minute investigation of the wants of the poor, in case the system of relief by dispensaries be extended.

Funds and Accounts.
Receipts.

The income amounted as follows for each of the last three years ending March:—

	1831.			1832.			1833.

This charity does not depend on the bounty of any one individual, and it is not likely to cease to exist. Stipulations have never been entered into here that the subscriber, or any part of his family are themselves to receive medicines, or medical advice gratuitously. The charity possesses neither capital or stock producing income.

Collection.
Custody.

The subscriptions are sent by each subscriber to the treasurer, who retains the money in his custody till it is wanted.

Expenditure.

The expenditure amounted for the year ending March:—

	£.	s.	d.
1832 - - - - -	92	10	11
1833 - - - - -	96	11	4
1834 - - - - -	97	16	- ½

Accounts.

The bills are examined and passed at the annual meeting, and then paid. An account of the expenditure is sent to the grand jury. The principal items are medicine and salary.

Person who attended the Examination.

The Medical Attendant of the Institution.

The medical attendant does not know the amount of population in this dispensary district, which is not confined to the parish, but expects that he shall have to visit patients at a distance of seven or eight miles round. There is no public medical institution within six miles; the establishment of a small fever hospital and ward for cases of accident would not be of much service here, as they would be quite inadequate to the wants of the district.

A part of the surgeon's house was about to be fitted up as a dispensary room, it was well adapted for the purpose, and a portion of the room would serve as a waiting apartment for the patients.

The sole medical officer of the dispensary is about 28 years of age; he graduated at the University of Glasgow, and is a surgeon of the London College; he also holds midwifery certificates from London and Dublin. He resides in the house where the dispensary is held, and has just been appointed as general medical attendant; he holds no other situation of a similar kind, but is allowed private practice; before his appointment he was a surgeon in the navy. The days and hours for his attendance at the dispensary are on Tuesday and Saturday, from ten till two o'clock. There is not any rule for providing a substitute in the event of his illness or temporary absence. The medicines are dispensed by himself, he has no pupil, assistant or attendant to be on the spot or assist in cases of sudden accident.

He is to have a salary, but the amount is not yet fixed; he has already received 40 l. on account.

He was elected by the subscribers; there was no advertisement on the occasion, but notice was given in the parish for a week before, he was the only candidate; the neighbourhood is not adequate to support a medical man well, independently of the dispensary emolument.

The dispensary room is to be neatly and conveniently fitted up. The medicines for establishing the dispensary are received, but not yet deposited in their places; they were purchased from Messrs. Boileau & George, Dublin, on the order of the surgeon, and were paid for by the treasurer; they cost, including bottles, &c. 22*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* The medical attendant thinks that he will not supply leeches to the patients. The medicines are kept under the surgeon's care. In his private practice he does not provide medicines. There are no surgical instruments belonging to the institution.

Patients have not as yet been attended, nor arrangements made for keeping a register.

Any person bringing a ticket from a subscriber is to receive advice and medicine, the subscribers being unlimited in the number. The medical attendant intends to insist on every patient having a ticket.

Patients are to be attended to at the dispensary, but the medical attendant is expected to visit any patients confined to their homes by illness, at any part of the district, and at any time of day or night, and also all lying-in women who send a ticket; they have been mostly attended, however, by midwives. If a broken limb or other accident should happen, the institution is not provided with splints, bandages or other requisites, to render assistance. Practitioners, unconnected with the dispensary, cannot have their prescriptions made up there. There has not been any rule laid down with regard to vaccination, or to oblige the dispensary doctor to give vaccine matter, gratis, to other practitioners; he intends, however, to vaccinate, but will not inoculate with small-pock virus.

No wine, or other such extras, are to be furnished; and there is not any charity in this neighbourhood on which the medical attendant can give an order to the sick poor for food, clothing or fuel.

There is not to be any intern accommodation. If lunatic cases occur they will be sent to the Derry Asylum.

The general management is with the subscribers. No periods have been fixed for the meetings; there have been two meetings for the purpose of forming the institution; about 14 subscribers attended; the resolutions agreed to at these meetings constitute all the rules and laws to govern this charity. Minutes of the proceedings are kept.

The officers, not medical, are the treasurer and the secretary.

The income is to arise from subscriptions, a list of which exhibited an amount of 53*l.* 11*s.*, and the county presentment which is 40*l.*, but not yet received. There is no other property or source of income.

The treasurer is to collect the subscriptions, and retain the amount till wanted.

As this dispensary was at the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioners scarcely in operation, there is not ground for observation. The list of subscribers shewed, that persons of all persuasions contribute; and a large population, among whom fever is always present, render the existence of a dispensary a source of great comfort to the poor.

Lord CALEDON.—Rev. JAMES COLLINS.—Rev. JAMES MACRAIGHT.—Mr PRENTICE.—Archdeacon STOPFORD; and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THIS dispensary district extends over 11,593 Irish acres, and, contains upwards of 10,000 inhabitants. The most distant point at which the surgeon is expected to visit is about nine miles. The medical institutions within six miles are the Tynan dispensary, in the county of Armagh, to the south-east; the Glaslough dispensary, three miles to the south, in the county of Monaghan; Benburb to the north-east seven miles; to the north and north-west there is no medical institution within ten miles. The dispensaries in the county are considered to be well placed as regards population, but the inhabitants of some parts are very distant from medical relief. The medical officer thinks that a district six or seven miles in diameter, with a rural population, such as is here, would be the most to which one man could attend.

The formation of properly sized establishments, with intern accommodation for bad accidents and fever cases, in various parts of the county, would be highly advantageous.

The dispensary is held in a well-built conveniently arranged room in the market-house; there is a part divided off for the medical attendant, and a part as a waiting-room for the patients; the room is held rent-free, but at will; it is thought, however, that so long as dispensaries depend upon voluntary contributions, it is more desirable that the dispensary should be held at lease.

The sole medical officer of the charity (about 47 years of age), is a graduate of the university of Glasgow, and a surgeon of the London College, who possesses also a midwifery certificate from Glasgow; he resides in the town of Caledon, having been appointed to this dispensary by the subscribers in 1816, previously to which he had been practising in the town; he holds no other appointment, but has private practice; the times stipulated for his attendance at the dispensary are Mondays and Thursdays from nine to twelve o'clock; the duty is not done by proxy, but in cases of his unavoidable absence, there is not any rule for providing a substitute, he would, however, mention the circumstance to the treasurer, and get some one to discharge his duty; but at present, he has no assistant or pupil who could be constantly on the spot for sudden emergencies.

The medical attendant's salary is 42*l.*; he has no allowance for board or lodging, keep of a horse or other conveyance, nor any perquisites; but in addition to his salary, he is allowed such sum for distant visits as the committee may award; this sum amounted in the years—

1831	-	-	12 10 4
1832	-	-	19 8 4½
1833	-	-	24 15 3

If the committee or subscribers should allow salaries, &c. higher than are sufficient to obtain efficient medical relief, the grand jury have a check over any such extravagance.

The medical officer is elected annually by the subscribers. There has been no vacancy. The neighbourhood is scarcely sufficient to support a medical man, independently of the dispensary emolument. If the medical officers should be harsh to, or neglect the patients, they can complain to any subscriber, and they know they have that privilege.

The dispensary room is neatly and properly arranged, with a sufficient supply of good medicines, including the more delicate kinds; they are supplied by Messrs. Boileau & George of Dublin, on the order of the medical attendant, and are paid for by the treasurer; including wine for fever patients, the medicines cost about 24*l.* per annum. The average expense of patients relieved is something more than 3¼*d.* per head, annually, for medicine. The medicines are kept under the care of the surgeon, and none of them are ever sold; he does not keep any medicines for his private practice. Leeches are not supplied to the patients.

This institution does not possess any surgical instruments or apparatus for preparing decoctions.

The surgeon keeps a register denoting 1st, the name of the patient; 2d, the age; 3d, date of attendance; 4th, townland; 5th, disease; 6th, the event; 7th, observation. (The event and observations are seldom filled up.)

In 1831	-	-	-	1,870 patients were admitted.
1832	-	-	-	1,812 ditto.
1833	-	-	-	1,490 ditto.

There have been some capital operations performed during the last three years, and several midwifery cases attended; these tickets are filled and checked against the register by the treasurer and committee at the quarterly meetings, so that no error in the number relieved can occur; they are also produced at these meetings by the medical attendant and their number stated in the minutes, as they are made the basis of any gratuity for extra visits which the governors may award him.

Every poor person residing in the district and bringing a ticket is entitled to have advice and medicine; but no person can have either, even with a ticket who does not belong to the district. Subscribers do not give tickets to their domestic servants. And it can scarcely happen, that any one should participate in the benefits of the charity who was in circumstances stances to pay for advice; nor has it ever been known that a fictitious subscription list was made up so as to obtain a large grant from the county. Subscribers are unlimited in the number of their tickets, and one signature to each is sufficient.

Extern patients come to the dispensary unless too ill, in which case they are visited at home, but not at a greater distance than nine miles. Attendance would be given in the night if required; but if a broken limb or other accident should occur, the institution could not afford assistance, not being provided with splints, bandages, or other necessary apparatus. Lying-in cases are attended on the patient sending a ticket, or more exactly speaking, the medical attendant attends the difficult cases only.

There is no prescription-book kept here; the prescriptions of any medical practitioner cannot be made up here.

With respect to vaccination there is no rule; but the medical attendant vaccinates all children brought to him upon a deposit being made of 1 s. with each, to insure the return of the child; he never inoculates with small-pock virus. He has a very good opinion of the effects of vaccination, and the public have much confidence in it: small-pox occurs here about every third year, and there is a good deal in the neighbourhood at present.

In very urgent cases wine is occasionally furnished to the sick; and where proper objects occur, the surgeon can give a recommendation for relief on a mendicity fund, principally provided by a neighbouring nobleman. The church collection fund also provides some clothing for the poor.

Lunatic cases are sent to the Derry Asylum.

The general management rests with the subscribers of a guinea and upwards; and there is not any person ex officio in the principal direction, neither has the charity been essentially under the management of the surgeon.

The general meetings are held quarterly, and the following business then gone through, viz.—The surgeon's tickets are checked; the number of patients admitted stated; and the tickets counted. Of the four meetings thus held in the year, three are for these general purposes, and one annually to settle the accounts, prepare the report, &c. Minutes of the proceedings are kept. There is no voting allowed by proxy.

The only non-medical officer is a clergymen, who collects the subscriptions, and acts as treasurer, &c. There is no instance of an officer having been suspended or removed.

The rules and regulations are not printed, they are entered in the book containing the minutes of the proceedings.

Reports are made annually, and printed; they contain an abstract of the cases treated, the subscriptions and expenditure for these periods.

The district is peculiarly fortunate in possessing persons, able and willing to assist in ascertaining minutely the wants of the poor, should it be hereafter found expedient to extend the system of dispensary relief.

The income arises from subscriptions and the county grant. The charity has no property producing income, and depends chiefly on the bounty of one family; but it is not likely such would be withdrawn or that the charity will cease. It may be considered to rest on secure grounds.

It never happens that subscriptions are accompanied with a stipulation on the part of the subscriber that he or any of his family are to have medicine or advice gratis.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his hands till wanted.

The following is an abstract of the printed reports of receipts and expenditure for period from 6 February to 31 December—

Omagh
Dispensary.

Population and Extent of Country. The dispensary district is in fact unlimited, but the institution was intended for a population of about 11,000.

Building, &c. The dispensary is held in a room belonging to the Tyrone County Infirmary, and there is a good waiting-room for the patients, but the institutions are perfectly distinct.

Medical Officer. The sole medical officer is a surgeon of London, about 55 years of age, appointed at the establishment of the institution in the year 1831. He is also surgeon of the gaol, for which he receives a salary of 80*l.* per annum, and of the County Infirmary at 100*l.* per annum, besides which he is allowed private practice.

Payment. The surgeon's salary consists of the balance of the income above the expenditure of each year: and in—

1831 amounted to - - - -	67	3	7
1832 " - - - -	60	-	-
1833 " - - - -	58	-	-

Election. The medical officer is elected by the subscribers: there has been no vacancy since the establishment of the institution, and there is no eligible medical man resident in the town.

Pharmacy. The room in which the medicines are dispensed is small and neatly kept; it contains the drugs of the infirmary also. Separate shelves are said to be allotted to each, but there was no superscription to mark the limits of either. A large stock for both institutions is kept by the common medical attendant, in a cupboard in his apartments, but the same remark applies here also, as the shelves, though separate, are not distinguished from each other. The medicines are furnished by Messrs. Leckey & Moore, of Dublin, on the order of the surgeon, and paid for by the treasurer; they cost,

In the year 1831 - - - -	35	4	2
1832 - - - -	21	-	-
1833 - - - -	37	-	-

None are ever sold; the surgeon keeps those intended for his private practice separate. Leeches are supplied to the patients, and are procured from Dublin. There is no apparatus for preparing decoctions, and the surgical instruments belong to the County Infirmary.

Patients' Registration. A register is kept of all extern patients, who are provided with tickets (and of these only is a return made to the grand jury), and of the medicines prescribed, but of none others. Midwifery cases are not attended.

Who entitled to Relief. All applicants receive advice and medicine, and some are attended at home, whether they may have presented tickets or not. Thus there is no hope held out to the charitable that additional subscriptions would have any other effect than that of increasing the surgeon's salary.

Nourishment. Wine or other extras are not furnished from the funds of this charity, nor does there exist any other charity on which an order can be given for food, clothes or fuel.

General Management. The general management of the affairs of this institution is said to be vested in the subscribers. At dispensary elections voting by proxy is permitted.

Managing Committee. There is not any managing committee, but there is a board of superintendence appointed by the grand jury for all the charities in the county.

Officers not medical. The secretary and treasurer has no salary attached to the performance of his duties; nor are there any bye-laws regulating the appointments, and no sudden accession of subscribers previously to an election has been known.

Funds. The continuance of this dispensary does not depend on any one family, nor is it likely to cease to exist.

Collection. Custody. The funds are collected by the treasurer, and remain in his possession until required. The surgeon is in the habit of advancing to the treasurer the subscriptions of any friends who may be absent just before the assizes, to be repaid to him by such subscribers. This sum cannot be ascertained for any one year, but it has been as much as 5*l.*

Expenditure. The only items of expenditure are medicine and stationery; for the three years that the institution has existed, these have amounted to 93*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.*; thus leaving the balance to the surgeon 185*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*, a sum always exceeding the amount of the county grant.

The Medical Attendant.

The Ballinasloe Fever Hospital consists of a cottage divided into two wards on the ground floor, each holding four beds, and one small ward on a boarded loft, extending over about one-third of the cottage, holding two or three beds. The Assistant Commissioners found the premises, for which an annual rent of 14*l.* is paid, in a very ruinous condition. The floor of the loft ward is falling to pieces; one of the walls is cracked, and the thatch lets in the rain in more than one place. The bedding is damaged, worn-out, and much reduced from its original quantity.

The sole medical officer of the hospital is the individual of whose double connexion with this institution, and with the Ballinasloe Dispensary, the particulars will be found detailed in the account of the latter establishment.

No medicine is kept in the hospital, although it is nearly half a mile from the residence of the medical attendant, who is engaged in business as an apothecary.

At the date of this account there were in the house three patients, namely:

1st. A woman who had been living on the funds of the charity for a period of six years, during which time she had been absent from the house during an interval of not more than five or six months, when she had been sent to the sea-coast for the benefit of bathing, at the expense of the funds. She laboured under a cutaneous eruption apparently of a syphilitic origin, which had been aggravated by an injudicious use of mercury.

2d. A youth labouring under dropsy. He had been in the house about five or six weeks.

3d. A man said to be in low fever.

There was no written evidence either in the shape of register, prescription, diet-roll or memorandum of any kind, that any other patient than the three just enumerated, had ever been admitted into or treated in this hospital; nor indeed was there any written record to be found connected with these individuals as patients. The Medical Superintendent, upon being asked how many persons he thought, or could guess, had been treated in the establishment during the preceding twelve months, stated, after a great deal of vague conjecture, that 40 patients, at least, had been admitted; but upon examining the account kept by the nurse of the milk and bread purchased for the consumption of the patients by her, it appeared, and it was admitted by the first named individual, that at no time during the last two years had there been more than three, seldom more than two patients in the house at the same time. The syphilitic woman mentioned above was always one of this number, and she was sometimes the only patient. The nurse, who seemed to be a conscientious truth-telling person, stated, that four persons had died in the house since Christmas, but these deaths had not been recorded. Some cholera patients had also been treated during the prevalence of that epidemic, and several deaths had taken place; however, no account could be obtained of the number of deaths, recoveries or admissions. The cholera patients had been maintained by a separate fund, but the present institution was the only asylum for the persons attacked, and no other professional assistance was engaged for the emergency than that of its ordinary medical attendant. The nurse also informed the Assistant Commissioners that, under ordinary diseases, each patient remained on an average six weeks in the hospital.

The diet of the inmates was represented to consist daily of milk, two quarts; bread, two pennyworth; oatmeal, one pint.

The nurse before alluded to is the only attendant; she receives as wages five shillings per week without diet, and acts as washerwoman to the patients, being allowed 1*s.* 8*d.* a month for soap and candles. She is frequently obliged to sit up for several nights in succession with patients who are particularly unwell.

The fever hospital of Ballinasloe has existed since the year 1828, as a public charity, supported by the county. In that year the grand jury granted, and the treasurer received, 198*l.*, being double the amount of subscription sworn to, viz. 99*l.*, which gave a fund of 297*l.* at once for its maintenance. Owing to the bustle of the great annual cattle fair of Ballinasloe, which fully occupied all the inhabitants of the town, the Assistant Commissioners were unable to learn from the treasurer whether the institution had received any grant of a more recent date. That gentleman, however, was good enough to place his books at their disposal, and from them it appeared that the expenditure up to March 1832 had nearly equalled the original funds, viz. 297*l.*, and that the outlay from that period to December of the same year was about 90*l.* But as no entry had been made subsequent to that of the last-mentioned date, there were no means of judging what was the actual condition of the funds of the charity.

The absence of every thing tending to control the working of this charity, is fully explained by the fact, that the very name of fever hospital generally acts as a bar, in this country, against all effective superintendence even of those who are most zealous and liberal in their support. The immediate charge, therefore, of these institutions should always be given to persons of known humanity and conscientious feelings; but above all things, the most precise and ample written details of their internal government and discipline should be insisted upon and enforced. The absence or gross neglect of records to show that everything had been adequately and effectively managed, should for ever disqualify the medical superintendent, as it would assuredly prove him to be unworthy of being entrusted with so important a charge.

The Assistant Commissioners were given to understand that two individuals, of a high class in society, were most munificent and zealous supporters of this charity; but it is difficult to believe that they can in any degree be acquainted with the manner in which it is actually carried on.

THE Galway Fever Hospital is intended for the relief of the poorer classes of the inhabitants of the town and of the county of the town of Galway, the population of which amounts to between 35,000 and 40,000 souls. It also contains two other medical charities, namely, the County Infirmary and the Galway Dispensary. The establishment at present under consideration has been appropriated nearly exclusively to the reception of those who have been attacked by fever whilst residing in the town; the only exception to this legitimate application of its resources having taken place in the year 1832, when public and pressing necessity compelled that its doors should be opened to those who suffered under the epidemic cholera.

The charity is carried on in a well-built, strong stone building, divided internally into four wards, which are capable of affording adequate accommodation to about 42 patients. This is the number of beds at present registered as being occupied, but on some occasions, notwithstanding the very great inconvenience and disadvantage to the sick resulting therefrom, it has been found necessary to dispose as many as 72 patients in the above-mentioned beds; and this not taking into consideration the years 1817 and 1822, in which an unusual amount of sickness prevailed. The building is too small in proportion to the number of those who seek admission into it; and it further labours under the disadvantage of being unprovided with several of those offices which are usually considered indispensable to the comfort of the sick, and the regular conduct of all similar establishments. The situation is good and airy, with a rocky foundation, and altogether unconnected with the town. The house is well provided with furniture.

The principal medical officer is a gentleman, aged 26, a graduate of the Edinburgh University, and in possession of a midwifery ticket from the same school. He resides in the town, and is engaged in private practice. He was appointed about five years since, and does not hold any second situation. He is required to attend at the institution every day, at 12 o'clock, and has never had occasion to discharge his duty by proxy. The dispensing of medicines is entrusted to an apothecary who holds the degree of master from the Apothecaries' Hall, and is likewise obliged to give his attendance daily, at the same hour as the physician.

The two medical officers are paid in full by a salary from the general funds of the charity, 52 l. a year to the physician, and 30 l. to the apothecary.

In order to invite competition, it is customary to insert an advertisement, calling on candidates to present themselves at each vacancy that occurs in the medical department. There are in the town of Galway six practitioners who are eligible to the situation of Surgeon.

The Assistant Commissioners found the room in which the medicines were kept to be neat and well arranged. The list of medicines included many of the more delicate preparations, and the others appeared to be of the best kind, and in sufficient quantity. All had been procured from Leslie & Company, druggists in Dublin, at the order of the medical attendant, sanctioned by the president. The charity does not possess surgical instruments of any description, not even cupping-glasses, although at the same time it was stated, that leeches are very rarely applied to the patients.

The registration of patients is conducted with much attention and regularity; their names, the date of their respective admission, together with the mode in which each case terminates, is carefully preserved, and, together with a summary of every thing, is transmitted to the grand jury. At the date of the Assistant Commissioners' visit to the charity, the number of patients on the books was, as has been already intimated, 42; but the following abstract of the register will show the extent to which relief has been granted during each of the last three years:—

YEAR.	Number admitted.	Cured.	Died.
1831 - - -	225	206	19
1832 - - -	250	224	26
1833 - - -	253	239	14
728	669	59

The diffusion of the benefits of this charity is not limited by the necessity of all applicants being provided with orders or recommendations. No part of the funds is derived from subscribers, and all poor persons who may happen to be attacked by fever in the town are alike entitled to be immediately admitted.

The institution does not undertake the treatment of fever, except the patient be an inmate of the wards. Whilst he remains so he is not called upon to perform work of any kind, and his friends are only allowed to visit him when any symptoms of danger have manifested themselves. The prescription book was examined, and the remedies appeared to be of the class class usually adopted in practice. The testimony of the witnesses goes to establish that the religious feelings of the patients have not ever been exposed to improper interference, and that they have at all times been able to avail themselves of the services of the clergymen for whose attendance they have expressed a desire. On the other hand, the clergy of all denominations are freely permitted to visit whenever they think proper, and there has not been any instance of controversial tracts introduced into the wards so as to disturb or offend the sick.

The food of the patients is regulated according to a fixed dietary, which is distinguished into fever diet, and convalescent diet. The former consists of two quarts of new milk and two quarts of flummery. Those who are placed on convalescent diet receive—

For breakfast: one pint of milk; eight ounces of stir-about.

For dinner: half a pound of beef; half a pound of bread; one quart of broth.

For supper: one pint of flummery; one pint of milk.

In addition to these fixed articles, wine and other extras are freely given when occasion demands their use.

The general management of the affairs of the charity is vested in a corporation deriving their authority under the Act 58 Geo. 3; certain persons, namely, the bishop of the diocese, the Member of Parliament, the recorder, and the magistrates of the town of Galway, are constituted governors in virtue of their respective offices, and with them resides the election of the remainder of the necessary number of governors. The principal direction of the institution has, however, during the last fifteen or sixteen years, devolved almost entirely on a medical gentleman of the town, late a distinguished military physician and surgeon, to whose unpaid and purely gratuitous services Galway is indebted, if not for the very founding of this admirable charity, certainly for its continuance, and for all the good which has resulted from it during many past years. The establishment does infinite credit to his philanthropy, his professional zeal, and his eminent sanitary experience.

The managing committee consists of nine gentlemen, who were appointed in January 1834. Minutes are kept of all their proceedings, and they act altogether independently of the grand jury; nor do any of the governors, with the exception of the medical gentleman just mentioned, and a clergyman, ever visit the hospital officially.

The only non-medical officers are the treasurer and the president.

The following attendants are permanently engaged for the service of the institution, namely:—a head nurse, at a salary of 1s. 6d. per diem; two under nurses, at 1s. each per diem; a gate-keeper, at 10l. per annum.

The rules for the conduct of the several officers, and for the regulation of the establishment, have never been printed. They are contained in the minute-book of the committee.

It is not customary to prepare any reports for printing, but a written statement of the affairs of the charity is at stated periods prepared by the president, and laid before the members of the grand jury. Owing to the number of intelligent individuals in the town and neighbourhood of Galway, it would at all times be easy to obtain an accurate acquaintance with the wants and conditions of the poorer classes of its inhabitants, and any investigation having such an end would be sure of the co-operation of several well-qualified persons.

The funds for the support of the institution are derived exclusively from grand jury presentments, under the authority of the 54 Geo. 3. c. 112, which empowers grand juries to present the sum of 500l. annually for the maintenance of fever hospitals. It will appear from the subjoined statement of the several presentments which have been made on the behalf of the Galway hospital during the last three years, that the amount of annual revenue placed at the disposal of the governors of the institution has fallen far short of the sum mentioned in the statute referred to; a circumstance much to be deplored, as it has necessarily confined the beneficent operation of this, the only asylum for the sick poor of this most populous town and neighbourhood, within a narrowness of system incommensurate with the claims of humanity and the views of an enlightened policy.

STATEMENT of Annual PRESENTMENTS from the 12th of August 1830 to the 12th of August 1833, together with the Expenditure during the same period.

YEAR.				Sum Presented.			Expenditure.
1831	1	8	3	350	—	—	366	2	10½
1832	1	8	3	350	—	—	415	1	4½
1833	1	8	3	375	—	—	370	7	9

In this account of the expenditure is included the sum of 156l. 7s. 6d. paid in salaries and wages. The remainder has covered the expenses incurred for the subsistence of patients, medicine, wine, straw, fuel, candles, washing, &c. The accounts of daily expenditure in diet, and of the quantity and amount of extra comforts allowed to the sick, are kept with exactitude, and are highly satisfactory. If less than the standing diet be consumed, less is charged.

The money of the charity is placed in the hands of the treasurer, who pays nothing except to an order signed by the president of the committee. These orders are kept as his vouchers.

THE building in which this charity* is now established was formerly the county gaol, and in its present state is not particularly well calculated for its present purpose. The rooms, or rather cells, used as wards, are small, inconvenient and out of repair; but every thing that the most judicious arrangement could effect has been done by the physician in charge, to render it as fully useful as circumstances will admit. There were at the period of the Assistant Commissioners' visit eight patients in the house, five of whom were in bed; there are 18 beds standing, for which there are 26 pairs of sheets, 26 blankets, eight of which latter are double, and 13 rugs. The Assistant Commissioners cannot but consider the above as an inadequate supply, more particularly as on examining the accounts for the last year (1833) they found the following entry, "Paid Ladies' Industrious Association, blankets and sheets, 13l. 8 s." There is no established dietary, nor any register of the daily expenditure of provisions, no diet table; and therefore the number of days' support, or of daily diets issued for any given period, cannot be ascertained.

It appears by the printed report of this institution for the year ending 18th March 1834, that the number of individuals admitted in the preceding twelve months was - 98

Discharged cured	-	-	80
Died	-	-	7
Remaining in hospital	-	-	11
			98

but the number of days' food and medicine given to each, or to all, cannot be ascertained; the ordinary diet is bread, gruel, milk, or milk-whey; excepting to convalescents, to whom six or eight ounces of flesh meat (weighed when raw with bone) are given for dinner with potatoes. A benevolent person who is a member of the managing committee acts as caterer, or purveyor, without any remuneration, and appears to manage that department with great economy and sound judgment.

The medical attendant who is also physician to the Lunatic Asylum, and to a Dispensary some miles from Carlow, has an annual salary from the funds of this charity of 60l., of which he pays to an apothecary per annum, 10l.

Patients are admitted into this hospital chiefly at the recommendation of the physician of the Carlow Dispensary, and by the selection of the medical attendant of this institution himself, who has an unlimited power of recommending. Fevers only are admissible; but when cholera prevailed here, those of the poor labouring under that disease were admitted, and with considerable benefit to the town generally.

This hospital was first established during the great epidemic of typhus in 1817, was afterwards shut for 13 years, and re-opened in 1831. In the course of the last three years 167 fever patients have been admitted; of these only 11 came from a distance exceeding 10 miles.

There are three Fever Hospitals in this county, each of which had 200 l. presented in aid of their funds this year by the grand juries of the Spring and Summer Assizes.

It is rather a remarkable circumstance connected with the medical charities of this county, that although seven dispensaries obtained their usual grants this year, from the county, the grand jury of the Summer Assizes have resolved to acknowledge only five for next year, and "that the annual sums granted to those respectively shall not exceed 50l. to the Carlow Dispensary, and 40l. to each of the other four, provided the physician be resident in each place; also a sum not exceeding 50l. per annum to each of the Fever Hospitals established at Carlow, Tullow and Bagnalstown." Some other resolutions follow, with a form of register for dispensaries, not expressive of the most implicit confidence in their mode of administration.

The above is, in the opinion of the Assistant Commissioners, most strongly illustrative of the inefficiency and imperfection of a system of charity which establishes no superintendence, no immediate control over its administrators, and exacts no responsibility from those employed as the medium of conveying that charity to the poor; yet gives the power to an irresponsible body, having only a momentary existence twice a year, to punish, or rather to extinguish, the only charitable institutions existing in the country, by annihilating their supplies, because some of those abuses have occurred which are invariably found to accompany the want of properly regulated superintendence. What can the Carlow county authorities expect from a fever hospital whose income they have reduced from 200l. to 50l. per annum*? The asylum for their lunatic poor is most creditably managed; but for that institution the supplies are compulsory. Charity, to be efficient, to be permanent or to be reckoned

* Names of the persons attending the examination not stated.

† The annual expense to the County Carlow of all its medical charities (including the county infirmary) is this year (1834), 969l. 1 s. 9 d.: next year the whole county expense of these charities cannot be more, and may be less, than 560 l.

reckoned on, must be placed beyond the arbitrary control of irresponsible individuals, and must be closely watched in its administration.

Fever Hospital and
Dispensary.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE population of the district for whose benefit the Celbridge Fever Hospital and Dispensary are intended, is computed by the witnesses at nearly 20,000; the extent of the district is rather undefined, from the circumstance of its being in some measure dependent on the distance at which the several subscribers reside. At present that distance is not limited; but it is stated that the average diameter of the district is nearly ten miles. No application for relief has been refused during the last three years. There are seven medical charities within the distance of six miles from that at present under consideration. Their respective distances from Maynooth, and their positions with regard to that town, are as follows:—

Maynooth	-	-	-	-	3½ miles to the West.
Leixlip	-	-	-	-	3 " North.
Dunboyne	-	-	-	-	6 " North.
Newcastle	-	-	-	-	2½ " South.
Lucan	-	-	-	-	3 " —
Clondalkin	-	-	-	-	5 " East.
Kilcork	-	-	-	-	6 " —

The building appropriated to the purposes of the institution possesses the advantage of an excellent situation with respect to the supply of pure water and of a perfect circulation of air. It stands upon about an acre of ground, and is three stories in height. It has been constructed of stone and other sound materials, and is in a state of very tolerable repair. Part of the grounds has been laid out as a garden. The lower part of the house is occupied by the servants, and the upper is divided into five wards, containing altogether beds for the accommodation of 25 patients, for whose use a slipper-bath has been provided. The entire premises are held under an agreement for a lease of lives renewable for ever, subject to a rent of one pound per annum, which is paid by the steward. The sewerage is excellent.

The medical attendant of this hospital is also attached, professionally, to the charities which have been already mentioned as existing at Maynooth, Leixlip and Lucan. He is obliged to attend at the latter of those places on two days in each week for the space of two hours each day; on Mondays and Fridays he is obliged to attend at Maynooth for the same space of time. He receives 50*l.* a year for his services at Lucan, and 44*l.* at Maynooth. Although he is not required to give any notice of his intention to be absent from his post at Celbridge, he has never on any occasion since the establishment of the institution failed in the performance of his duties there, or even delegated them to a substitute. His hours of attendance at Celbridge Fever Hospital are from ten until twelve on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; an attendance considered sufficiently long for an efficient performance of the duty. The present medical attendant has held the appointment since the year 1819, when he was elected by the governors, having previously been a practitioner in the county of Kildare; but his residence is at Leixlip, where he continues to be engaged in private practice in the several capacities of physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary. The dispensing of the medicine which he prescribes is entrusted to a graduate apothecary, who is supposed to be always ready to act in cases of emergency occurring during the absence of the principal medical officer.

Medical Officer.

Both the physician and the apothecary receive salaries from the general funds of the charity. The physician receives 80*l.* Irish yearly on account of the Celbridge, and 20*l.* on account of the Leixlip institutions, at which latter place he is expected to supply the necessary medicine. Neither of the medical officers receives any allowance for the maintenance of a horse.

ment.

The subscribers have the privilege of electing the medical officers, in conformity with the provisions of the Act of Parliament; and whenever a vacancy occurs, notice of the day of filling it is given in the newspapers, together with an invitation to candidates to present themselves, and a statement of the qualifications which they are expected to possess, namely, a degree from some university, without any limitation as to age. At the last election of an apothecary there were three competitors for the situation. It is stated that no pensions would be granted to the medical officers in case of their retirement.

The room in which the medicines are kept is arranged with much regard to neatness, and contains a good supply of all the more delicate and expensive preparations, such as quinine, morphia, &c. The Messrs. Leslie, druggists, of Dublin, supply all the drugs that are required, which (the invoices being discharged by the treasurer) are placed under the care of the apothecary, whose duty it is to make up the prescriptions of the physician, and to see that they are administered to the patients by the matron or nurses. Every thing that is necessary in the way of pharmaceutical apparatus has been provided, but the supply of surgical instruments is confined to those used in the extraction of teeth. The medical attendant is obliged to have recourse to his private stock when there is occasion for any others. The application of leeches is frequently resorted to whenever symptoms render them expedient. The medicines which the apothecary adopts in his private practice are kept altogether distinct from those which belong to the charity. Inoculation with the matter of small-pock, although not forbidden at this institution, is never practised by the medical officer, who is bound to give vaccine matter gratis to the neighbourhood as far as he is able. He states that he considers vaccination to be decidedly preventive of small-pock, which has very seldom appeared in the district of late years. The confidence of the public is gradually increasing in its efficacy.

A register is very accurately kept, which particularizes the disease under which each patient labours at the time of his admission, and its termination. No account is, however, kept of those who are refused relief, but some persons are admitted who pay 10s. 6d. each. When the Assistant Commissioners visited the establishment, they found in it four intern patients, and they were informed that no capital operation had been performed during the last three years, and that no case of midwifery had occurred during the same interval.

Those who have obtained the recommendation of a subscriber are alone entitled to relief. Each subscriber is, however, permitted to issue an unlimited number of orders, so that no person can, under ordinary circumstances, be excluded from the benefits of the institution, which there is no reason to believe are extended to any others than those whose circumstances place them really in need of gratuitous assistance. The lower servants of subscribers are considered to come within the latter description, but neither advice nor medicine is ever given to a subscriber, as such.

Extern patients are received at the dispensary, and poor persons, when unable to attend there, are visited at their own houses whenever medical or surgical aid is required. This attention, it is stated, would be rendered to the extent of two or three visits during the 24 hours when necessary, and it is considered that daily attendance is indispensable when a patient labours under any disorder of an acute kind. The institution also undertakes the treatment of fractures and other accidents, and is provided with the splints and bandages required for the purpose. The females of the labouring class are entitled to call in the services of the medical attendant whenever it appears to the midwife that their accouchement is attended with circumstances of danger. The midwives of the district have, however, the character of being a tolerably well educated set of women, and being in general possessed of sufficient skill, the accidents which occur to those who are placed in their hands are very few.

The institution supplies its patients with every thing that is considered necessary in the way of extra nourishment, such as wine, &c. which are administered under the superintendence of the matron; and there is, besides, another charitable establishment in the district on which the medical attendant is permitted to give orders for food, clothing and fuel to the extern patients.

Persons seeking for admission as intern patients are also obliged to provide themselves with a recommendation, but they do not experience much difficulty in procuring it; so long as they remain under treatment they are never allowed under any circumstances to go beyond the bounds of the institution, in which they are not required to perform work at any period. Their friends are not permitted to see them except when convalescent. The hospital does not contain a ward for lunatics; but during the prevalence of cholera accommodation was provided for patients attacked by that disease. They were, however, kept distinct from the other patients. The clergy of all persuasions are considered to have a right to visit those persons of their respective communions who may be confined in the institution, so that a patient can always see his own clergyman, particularly in dangerous cases. There have been no instances of an improper interference with the sick, either on the part of clergy or of laity, nor have any theological or controversial tracts been circulated in the wards.

With respect to the clothing which the patients bring with them to the hospital, every precaution is adopted to prevent the extension of infection, by cleansing and purifying.

The principal direction of the affairs of the charity is vested in a managing committee, whose weekly meetings for the transaction of business are attended with sufficient regularity, from three to five members being usually present, but the former number is sufficient to constitute a quorum. Minutes of the proceedings are very carefully kept. In addition to the attention bestowed by the committee, and during the intervals of their meetings, the establishment establishment is frequently inspected by the gentlemen who have been appointed to act as visiting governors.

The non-medical officers are selected without any reference to sectarian prejudices, and there has been no instance of late years of any of them being removed for improper conduct.

The attendants consist of the steward and his wife, the latter of whom acts as matron. There is, in general, only one nurse, but when the number of patients exceeds eight, another is engaged, and at other times, when the assistance of a second is required. All reside in the house, and are provided with fuel, &c. The steward and the matron are paid 40*l.* a year, and the wages of the nurse are 1*s.* a day. The appointment of the attendants is annually made at a meeting of the subscribers, and in the same manner only can they be dismissed. They draw their payment from the treasurer.

There cannot be said to be any stores, as all articles, with the exception of milk, are purchased as occasion requires. Milk is supplied by contract at the price of 1*d.* per quart. There is an express rule that nothing belonging to the institution shall be ever lent or used by any governor or officer.

A report is prepared every year respecting the number of admission and of discharges, and containing a statement of the proportions of the cured, the relieved, and of the rate of mortality in the house. The witnesses observe on the advantage which would result from the formation of a permanent board of health, to consist of the clergy, medical men and of individuals selected from the gentry and from the middle class of farmers.

The subscriptions which are collected for the support of this charity are given in every instance unconditionally, and without any stipulation that the donor shall receive either advice or medicine in return.

The funds are collected by the treasurer and remain in his hands until wanted.

Previous to payment all bills are examined by the treasurer, through whom alone money is paid.

Once in every year the accounts are audited and made up; copies are then laid before the grand jury and circulated among the subscribers.

The bodies of those who die in the house are never examined, except for the purpose of a coroner's inquest.

JOHN BARKER, esq.—W. H. CARTER, esq. J.P.—Rev. JOHN HARDY;—and the Medical Attendant of the Institution.

THE Kilcullen Fever Hospital and Dispensary is intended to afford medical assistance to the poorer inhabitants of a district which extends about eight miles in most directions, but of which one point is nearly 13 miles off. Several medical charities occur in the country adjoining to the district in question, and their positions are,—at Naas, six miles to the north; Ballymore, eight miles to the south; Newbridge, four miles; Kildare, six miles; Ballymore, county Wicklow, five miles; Blessington, ten miles; Baltiboys, County Wicklow. The witnesses are of opinion that no institution of the present kind should be required to extend its benefits to a greater distance than four miles. However, it is stated that on no occasion has any application for relief been refused during the last five years.

The hospital is carried on in a stone building two stories in height, which stands on an inclosure of about one acre in extent. The house contains six wards, and beds for the accommodation of 20 patients, and it is occupied exclusively by the latter and the nurses. It enjoys an abundant supply of pure and wholesome water, and is provided with excellent sewers. It also possesses arrangements for administering baths, and a proper supply of furniture has been purchased for the waiting-room, which is set apart for the reception of patients. The premises used for the purposes of the hospital and of the dispensary are held under different tenures, the former under lease from one of the governors of the institution at an annual rent of 10*l.* 10*s.*; the latter without lease at a rent of 15*l.* 15*s.* per annum.

The same gentleman discharges the duties of medical attendant at the fever hospital and at the dispensary. He is obliged to give daily attendance at the hospital and also to receive the poor at the dispensary, on every day except Sunday, between the hours of 10 and 12. When circumstances require him to be absent, he is accustomed to obtain permission from the committee to avail himself of another practitioner as his substitute. He received his appointment to the situation at a general meeting of the governors, which took place in the year 1812, and although he is required to act in the several capacities of physician, surgeon, accoucheur and apothecary, it appears that he has not received any testimonials which would authorize him to pursue any of those branches of the profession, with the exception of the latter; his sole qualifications being the degree of master apothecary, and certificates of having been a pupil at the Lying-in Hospital in Dublin during a period of six months. He resides within a few doors of the establishments, and has not any other engagements than those of his private practice. Medicines are dispensed by himself personally, but there is always some assistant who is qualified to afford immediate aid in case of emergencies occurring during his temporary absences. As to the security possessed by the governors that the medical attendant shall observe the proper regularity and attention in the performance of his duties, it is stated that the committee possess all the control necessary for effecting such, and it is added that it is well known that poor persons who have reason to complain of harshness or neglect on his part, can easily obtain redress by making application to one of the governors. The Assistant Commissioners have to remark, that they had abundant reason to believe that the gentleman in question discharges his duties with great assiduity and attention, in which he is assisted by an elderly practitioner also residing in Kilcullen, and who seems to have been in the habit of continually co-operating with him. Testimony to this effect was borne by two witnesses of the highest respectability.

The salary of the medical attendant is 70*l.* a year, payable out of the general funds of the institution. He is not entitled to any allowance towards the expenses of a residence, or of maintaining a horse.

The appointment of the attendant resides with the subscribers of 1*l.* 1*s.* per annum, and is not in any degree whatsoever under the control of the grand jury, to whom not even notice of the election need be communicated. None of the medical men who are settled in this neighbourhood would be willing to undertake the charge of the institution gratuitously, and on the occurrence of the last vacancy four candidates presented themselves to the electors, whose claims were considered, without any limitation as to their respective ages. It is stated by the witnesses that no allowances would be granted to the medical officers of the institution if they should think proper to resign. No death has taken place among them.

The medicines which are required for the purposes of the dispensary are procured on the order of the treasurer, from Messrs. Allen & Co., Druggists of Henry Street, Dublin. This firm is a contributor to the funds of the charity, from which it has received the following sums in payment of the annual accounts during the last four years:

1830	-	-	24 5 5
1831	-	-	-
1832	-	-	26 18 10
1833	-	-	18 2 10

All prescriptions are prepared and distributed to the patients by the medical attendant, to whose charge the stock of drugs is committed on its arrival, and which he is required to keep at all times separate from those which are designed for his private practice. These latter alone is he permitted, under any circumstances, to sell. There is a fair supply of the usual pharmaceutical apparatus, and also a few small surgical instruments, such as lancets, &c., which are, however, sufficient for the objects of the institution, and are reserved solely for its use. Leeches are never supplied to the patients. As to the arrangements made for the distribution of vaccine matter, it is stated that the medical attendant would supply the necessary lymph to any gentleman applying for it. He is in the constant habit of using vaccination, but he has never had recourse to inoculation.

Patients' Registration.

A register which particularizes the number of persons who avail themselves of the assistance of the institution, and the diseases under which they labour, is kept by the attendant, and an abstract of it is annually furnished to the grand jury. No mention is however made of the instances in which applications for relief have been refused. When the Assistant Commissioners visited the fever hospital, the first case which presented itself to them was one of jaundice, which had been admitted in consequence of the greater number of the beds not being occupied by the disorders to which the establishment is more peculiarly devoted. They were informed that no objection is made to receiving into the fever hospital cases of serious accident, and that no inconvenience had arisen from the custom. It was also stated that no unfair advantage had been taken of the known willingness of the managers to afford accommodation in such cases of particular hardship, although strictly speaking, they are not obliged to do it. The entire number of patients in the house was seven. The number of midwifery cases which had been treated during the last three years did not exceed two.

Who entitled to
Relief.

No person is considered to be entitled to relief from this charity, unless he have provided himself with the recommendation of a subscriber. These recommendations are obtained with much facility, from the circumstance of its being permitted to each subscriber to issue an unlimited number of orders, to each of which his single signature gives the requisite validity. At the same time it does not appear that any individuals have participated in the benefits of the charity, except those whose circumstances may be fairly deemed to render them fit objects for gratuitous relief. The domestic servants of subscribers are considered to have at all times a claim for advice and medicine.

Extern Patients.

The sick poor are not visited at their own houses in connexion with this institution; nor are any prescriptions compounded for them except those which have been given by the regular medical attendant. That gentleman states that accidents alone form an exception to this rule. The establishment possesses all the bandages and splints necessary for the treatment of such cases, and immediate aid would be always afforded. He also observes on the absolute necessity which exists for the payment of daily attention to all patients labouring under acute disorders, and he gives it as his opinion that occasional attendance is of little or no use except in affections of a chronic nature.

Nourishment.

The patients in the hospital are supplied with wine and whatever other extra articles of diet are considered necessary for them. These things are furnished at the sole expense of the hospital, as there is no institution in the district to come to its assistance in this regard.

Intern Patients.

The establishment being especially designed for the relief of those attacked by fever, any person labouring under that disease is freely admitted, and if he have not a recommendation at the time, that condition is afterwards complied with. Whilst the patients remain remain in the house their friends are only admitted to see them with great caution, and other regulations are enforced for the purpose of securing the orderly and decent conduct of those who remain under treatment, during which period no kind of work is, under any circumstances, required from them. There are not any chaplains attached to this charity, but the clergy of all religious denominations receive every facility in approaching those who belong to their several communions, and in administering to them the rites of their religion. No instances have occurred where the clergy have improperly interfered with the patients during their illness, nor have any controversial or religious tracts been circulated in the wards. Two cases of cholera took place in this hospital. There is no ward set apart for lunatics.

The general management of the affairs of the establishment resides with the governors, of whom there are about 20, and who are all equally privileged to attend at the regular half-yearly meetings, and to vote, but not by proxy. The attendance of three governors is required before the meeting can transact business; but in general four or five persons are present, of whose proceedings minutes are always kept. Neither the medical attendant nor any other person has been allowed, ex officio, to take a part in the general management.

No managing committee has ever been appointed.

The non-medical officers are the treasurer and the collector or secretary. Of these, the latter alone receives any remuneration for his services, his salary being 10*l.* per annum. The treasurer does not give any security, but is obliged to prepare his accounts for the subscribers, and the grand jury, at the termination of each year. Both these officers are elected by the subscribers, without any interference on the part of the grand jury, and without any reference to their religious belief. The present medical attendant is a Protestant, as also is the collector; but the two nurses are Roman Catholics.

The nurses, to the number just mentioned, reside in the hospital, and, together with one other attendant, are the only paid attendants. They have no perquisites, and though appointed by the governors, can only be discharged by the medical attendant. No mortality has ever taken place amongst them.

The principal articles of consumption are supplied by contract, or purchased under the sanction of the governors. It is necessary to remark that the apothecary is the person from whom the milk required for the patients is procured. In explanation of this circumstance, it was stated by two of the witnesses, that his charge for milk was only 2*d.* per quart, and that the article which he furnished was of the very best quality.

The principal support of this charity is derived from voluntary subscriptions, as, with the exception of a sum of 400*l.* late currency, it does not possess any fixed property. The contributors belong exclusively to the richer classes. The largest subscription being ten guineas, the least 1*l.* 1*s.*

The annual income is entrusted to the custody of the treasurer, after it has been collected by the secretary. The other portion of the property of the charity remains with the governors.

The examination of the bills that become due is confided to the collector, but all large sums are only payable by the treasurer.

Dissections are not permitted to be carried on in this institution; nor are the bodies of the patients opened for pathological purposes after death.

THE Naas Fever Hospital and the dispensary attached to it are intended to afford medical and surgical assistance to the inhabitants, amounting in number to 20,000, of 25 parishes. The district extends in some directions to a distance of twelve miles, from the circumstance of persons at that distance having become subscribers in order to acquire the privilege of recommending patients for admission. Several other medical institutions occur within six miles of Naas, and their distances from that town and relative positions are as follows:—

Clare	-	-	-	-	4 miles to the North.
Kilcullen	-	-	-	6	- „ - South.
Blessington	-	-	-	6	- „ - East.
Newbridge	-	-	-	5	- „ - West.

However, the witnesses are of opinion that the establishments at these places, together with the dispensary at Robertstown, are all necessary for the wants of the population, and on being asked whether a more judicious division could not be devised for their several medical officers, they replied, that the subscribers to one had no control over the management of the others, and therefore no new arrangement could be set on foot. They all coincide in declaring that a medical district should rarely, if ever, exceed five miles in extent. The present institution has hitherto been found fully adequate to its objects, and no application for relief (when the applicant was properly recommended) has ever been refused. By a resolution of the committee, provision has also been made for affording succour in cases of emergency, emergency, and two beds have been set apart for the reception of accidents of a nature too severe to permit, with safety, the removal of the sufferer to the county infirmary, which is situated at a distance of ten miles from the town of Naas. It is considered that some similar provision is absolutely indispensable for the proper treatment of a great number of urgent cases.

The building in which the charity is carried on, is only one story in height, and though in good repair, suffers much from damp and from an unfavourable exposure. The quality of the water with which it is supplied, is also very indifferent. The sewerage is good; the premises (including the out-offices, a wash-house and a cart-house) stand upon about two roods of ground, and are held at a rent of 30*l.* per annum, from a gentleman who subscribes 2*l.* per year to the funds of the institution. The lease expired in the year 1832, and the circumstance was productive of considerable inconvenience. Internally, the building is divided into eight apartments, of which four are occupied by the steward and the different members of his family; the others, each 12 feet broad by 21 feet long, have been fitted up as wards, and are calculated to accommodate altogether 23 patients. The house is well ventilated, and possesses a good supply of furniture. There is, however, no waiting room for patients, and only a slipper-bath.

There are two medical officers attached to the present institution, namely, a surgeon and an apothecary. The former is bound to visit the Fever Hospital, at least once a day, and oftener, when cases of emergency require it. He is also obliged to prescribe for all the patients who present themselves at the Dispensary, and to visit at his home any poor person who may be unable from sickness to leave it. The duties of the Apothecary consist chiefly in the compounding the medicines ordered by the medical attendant, and in visiting the less severe cases which are connected with the dispensary. He is also required to report to the surgeon all serious cases that may call for particular attention; as he resides at the dispensary, he is able to answer the demands for relief which are made in the absence of the medical attendant, whose dwelling is about a quarter of a mile distant. It is stated, however, that the last-mentioned officer never is absent except from illness, in which case he usually obtains the sanction of the Committee to his duties being performed by a medical friend, who acts as his temporary substitute. His general regularity is secured by the control which the Committee possess over him; and that this authority is effectual for the purpose, is shown by the readiness with which the complaints of the poor have on several occasions been attended to. The medical attendant is also surgeon to the county gaol, at which he is obliged to attend twice in every week, the salary being 46*l.* 3*s.* per annum. He is engaged in private practice, and has been attached to the institution at present under consideration since the year 1821, when he was appointed to act in the joint capacities of physician, surgeon and accoucher, on the death of the gentleman who had preceded him. Previous to his appointment, which took place at a full meeting of the subscribers to the charity, he had been employed as a surgeon in the navy. He studied his profession both in Dublin and in London, and is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in the latter place. He received his education in midwifery, chiefly at the Middlesex Lying-in Hospital. The apothecary possesses the diploma of master, from the Apothecaries' Hall in Dublin.

The salary of the surgeon, as attached to the fever hospital and dispensary, is 80*l.* per annum. The apothecary receives 40*l.* per annum. These payments are made from the general funds of the institution, and their amount is entirely regulated by the judgment of the subscribers, who have it in their power to increase or diminish them, without being subject to the control of the grand jury, or any other superior authority. The apothecary has not always been paid by a fixed salary. It is stated that the predecessor of the present apothecary was entitled to a sum of three shillings for every visit paid by him, and that he was only required to produce the recommendatory tickets of the subscribers in order to obtain payment of his demands. It was, however, ascertained that tickets were not unfrequently issued, not to poor persons, but as remuneration for services performed towards some portions of the subscriber's family. In order effectually to put a stop to such practices, it was determined that the apothecary should for the future be remunerated by a fixed annual salary, and the physician should be requested to select a proper individual for the situation. On this point the Assistant Commissioner has to observe that, although it might on the whole be better that another arrangement should take place, still, at present, there can be no ground for suspecting any thing improper, from the high character borne by the medical attendant both professionally and in private.

The election of the surgeon resides with the subscribers, who were also accustomed to appoint the apothecary, until the mode of proceeding was altered under the circumstances which have been just mentioned, and which only dates from the appointment of the gentleman who at present discharges the duties of the situation. Both surgeon and apothecary are chosen without any reference being made to the grand jury; and it is observed by the witnesses, that so little control has that body over elections of the kind, that it is quite possible that a dispensary may be set on foot by means of subscriptions collected from the friends of a medical man without any other object in view than the securing a salaried situation for the latter. When a vacancy occurs in the situation of physician to this charity, an advertisement is inserted in the newspapers inviting candidates to come forward, and a selection is then made from the competitors, without any reference to age: on the last occasion of the kind there were only three, notwithstanding the great number of qualified practitioners who reside in the district; and it is stated that although many of them find a very independent maintenance in the practice of the numerous gentry living in the neighbourhood, yet none would be willing to undertake the charge of the sick poor without without express remuneration. No retiring allowance would be granted to an officer in case of his resigning; nor has there been any mortality among the gentlemen who have acted in that capacity.

The room in which the medicines are kept is arranged with much neatness, and contains a good stock of pharmaceutical apparatus, which enables the apothecary to prepare all the tinctures and ointments. The medicines are procured from the Messrs. Boileau & George, druggists, of Dublin, and have on an average cost the institution, during the last three years, about 18*l.* per annum; at the time of the Commissioner's visit to the charity the store on hands was nearly equivalent to the probable consumption of one year in advance; as soon as the several medicines arrive they are committed to the care of the apothecary, who being engaged in the private practice of his profession, has necessarily a supply of drugs for his own purposes. In order, therefore, to insure that no misappropriation shall take place, he is required to keep the two stocks separate; and, in addition, he has bound himself by an oath not to use the property of the charity otherwise than in furtherance of its objects. He is not permitted to sell the medicines belonging to it under any circumstances. The surgical instruments designed for the practice of the charity do not exceed a few minor ones; they are altogether inadequate to their design, although strictly reserved for the use intended, and never lent to any surgeon unconnected with the establishment, or even used by the medical attendant in private. Monday in each week is set apart for the performance of vaccination; on that day the surgeon supplies vaccine matter gratuitously to all who apply for it; and it is stated that he is in the constant habit of doing the same at any time that he may be called on. In the course of the year preceding the date of this evidence, upwards of 300 persons had been vaccinated, and there is every reason for believing that the people have begun to place much confidence in the efficacy of the practice. The medical attendant states, that "his own opinion is decidedly in favour of its preservative qualities, when properly administered;" and he adds, that "even when it has failed in securing perfect immunity, it has always mitigated the severity of the subsequent attack of small-pox." That disease is said to have appeared but seldom of late years in the district around us, and its occurrence is supposed to have been chiefly owing to the custom of inoculating with variolous matter. This operation, though not forbidden by the rules of the institution under consideration, is one to which the surgeon declares himself averse on principle. Neither intern nor extern patients are supplied with leeches on account of their expense.

A register of the number of patients who are treated in the Fever Hospital is kept conjointly by the apothecary and the steward. The admission of a sick person is entered on the day whereon it occurs, and at a subsequent period the termination, whether as discharged, or died, is also noted. It appears that during the last three years, although the beds have been pretty constantly occupied, yet no instance of admission refused has taken place; neither has any operation of importance been performed within the same space of time. An abstract of the register is annually furnished to the grand jury.

The possession of a recommendation is absolutely indispensable for the persons who seek relief. This condition is one that throws considerable difficulties in the way of the poor, especially of those persons who may happen to be unknown to any subscriber. And the obstacle is further increased from the circumstance of each subscriber being limited in the issue of recommendatory orders on the dispensary. The parish priest states, of his own knowledge, that many persons have been unable to comply with the condition, and have, in consequence, remained without medical relief. Notwithstanding these difficulties which lie in the way of the poor, it is stated that many of the shop-keepers inhabiting the town, are in the constant habit of giving tickets of relief to farmers and other persons, whose circumstances by no means place them in need of gratuitous relief. Of course this practice is altogether of a tendency to frustrate the legitimate designs of the charity; but when remonstrances upon their conduct have been addressed to the individuals in question, they have had no other effect than causing them to discontinue their contributions to the funds of the institution. An instance is adduced by one of the witnesses, in which a person had been refused assistance, when applying under the circumstances alluded to. However, it was afterwards ascertained that he had been able to secure for himself the attendance of three medical men, each of whom were properly remunerated by him. The servants of subscribers are at all times considered fit objects for the aid of the charity.

The patients to whom relief is afforded by this institution, are of two classes; namely, the "intern patients," who are received into the fever hospital, and the "extern patients," who obtain only advice and medicine at the dispensary. These latter are also entitled to be visited at their own residences, (if they procure a recommendation to that effect) in the first instance by the apothecary; and if he report the case as serious, afterwards by the medical attendant. In this manner, the poor of all parts of the district can calculate on receiving proper professional assistance, to whatever degree, and at whatever hour, both by day and night, it may be necessary. The surgeon observes that "he considers daily attention to be absolutely indispensable, in all affections of an acute nature; but that there are also several forms of disease in which occasional attendance may answer all the ends of the physician." With respect to fractures and other accidents, an arrangement has recently been made, whereby splints and the necessary bandages are provided for the poor, together with immediate assistance. It is to be regretted that lying-in women are not entitled to the services of the medical attendant, in any stage of parturition, or under any circumstances, however complicated or dangerous. This is a defect which appeared to the Assistant Commissioner as likely to be productive of the worst consequences, and one for which a remedy should be devised as speedily as possible. At the same time he cannot avoid remarking, that it would be in the highest degree unjust to impose this additional branch of active duty on the medical attendant, while his remuneration is continued at its actual rate. He could not be expected to give up nearly his entire time to the calls of an inadequately remunerated and laborious dispensary practice. At present, he has a larger portion of duty to perform than in general falls to the share of gentlemen in his situation; and the salary which he receives is by no means proportioned to the degree in which he possesses the confidence of the gentlemen of the county; a confidence which there is every reason to believe, he justly merits, from his professional attainments and exertions.

The prescription book was examined, and it appeared to contain a collection of very judicious remedies. It was stated, that until lately it was usual to permit the prescriptions of practitioners unconnected with the charity to be compounded gratuitously for the poor, but as this was deemed likely to open the door to abuse, the practice has been discontinued.

The intern patients alone, that is, the patients confined in the fever hospital, are supplied with food. Their diet is fixed in a book kept for the purpose by the physician, and it is distributed to them under the superintendence of the steward. When circumstances demand it, they receive beer, wine, tea and sugar, spirits, broth, or whatever may be considered necessary. There is no source, in any part of the district, whence the sick poor out of doors can obtain any of these things, or be relieved with fuel or articles of clothing.

Patients who labour under fever are at all times admitted when able to present a recommendation, and in certain cases on payment of 10s. 6d. Whilst a person is under course of treatment, he is never permitted to go beyond the bounds of the institution; nor, until he is convalescent, is he required to perform any work. At that time he is called upon to assist in keeping the wards clean, and his friends, who had been previously altogether excluded, are allowed to see him on production of a written order from the physician. The orderly conduct of patients and their visitors is enforced, according to certain regulations directed to that purpose. The institution has not any chaplains attached to it, but the clergy of all religious persuasions are considered to have a right to visit at all times those patients who may be desirous of availing themselves of their spiritual services. The only inconvenience which is experienced on this point, is from the distance at which the Roman Catholic clergyman resides from the hospital, being at the extreme point of the parish. Neither theological nor controversial tracts have ever been allowed circulation in the wards, nor has any improper interference with sectarian views been ever allowed to take place with regard to the patients. The house enjoyed a perfect immunity from the attacks of cholera while that disease prevailed to some extent in the neighbourhood. It does not contain any ward set apart for the reception of lunatics.

The affairs of the institution are managed by a committee of 31, who ought, according to rule, to meet on every Monday, but who in fact are accustomed to assemble only when they have been particularly summoned. However, these special meetings are always attended with sufficient regularity to admit of a perfect transaction of business; inasmuch as five members are considered sufficient to constitute a quorum, and a still larger number is usually present. Minutes of their proceedings are kept with regularity, and voting by proxy is not permitted. No salaried officer is allowed to participate in the general management. The grand jury have never appointed a board of superintendence, nor are there any official visiting governors. The treasurer alone is in the habit of occasionally inspecting the establishment.

The only non-medical officer is the treasurer, whose appointment rests with the subscribers, and is in no degree subject to the control of the grand jury. The election is made by open voting, and has been hitherto quite uninfluenced by religious prejudices. The present treasurer is a Protestant clergyman, but the medical officers are both Roman Catholics. The treasurer has never been called upon to enter into any security; he does not receive any remuneration for his services.

The attendants consist of a steward, at a salary of 15*l.* per annum; a matron, at 15*l.*; two nurses, at 16*l.* 8*s.* They all reside in the house, and are provided with fuel and candles. The nurses are appointed by the physician, the others by the treasurer, from whom all receive their salaries. No mortality has at any time taken place among them.

The only articles purchased by contract are fuel and candles. The other articles required for the consumption of the establishment are procured under the directions of the treasurer, by the steward, from the various shopkeepers in the town, who happen to be subscribers to the funds of the charity.

Reports for the information of the subscribers and the grand jury, on all points relating to the details and expenses of the institution, are prepared at the termination of each year. The witnesses expressed an opinion strongly in favour of the formation of permanent boards of health for circumscribed districts. They stated that a large number of persons belonging to the upper and middle classes of society in the neighbourhood could be found, who would willingly co-operate in the duties of such an establishment, and who would be every way qualified to take a part in an investigation into the actual condition of the poor.

The institution being possessed of no permanent property, is entirely supported by annual subscription, fines and grants derived from the county; the former constitute the most material part of its income, and that upon which the existence of the charity is more particularly contingent. It is even stated, that though the gentlemen of the county would be very unwilling to let any such thing take place, yet the probable consequence of a falling off in the subscriptions would be the closing the doors of the hospital and of the dispensary. The subscriptions are received altogether from among the richer classes, and their total amount averages about 50*l.* per annum. The largest contribution is of 10*l.*, the smallest of 10*s.*

The income is collected from its various sources by the treasurer, and by him deposited in the savings bank which has been established in the town of Naas. No money is ever left in the hands of any person connected with the charity beyond a sum of 5*l.*, which is generally entrusted to the steward to enable him to meet contingencies.

Previous to the payment of any account, it must have been examined by the physician and treasurer, and then by the committee. It is afterwards laid before the grand jury. All payments pass through the hands of the physician and the steward.

Twice in the year the accounts of the establishment are made up and submitted to the subscribers and to the grand jury.

The instruction afforded by the hospital is limited to the apprentice of the medical attendant, who is permitted to accompany his master through the wards. He is not, however, at liberty to perform dissections, and, owing to the fear of rendering the poor unwilling to take advantage of the charity, post mortem examinations do not take place except for the purposes of coroners' inquests.

Fever Hospital.

The Assistant Commissioners took advantage of the presence (at the examination into the condition of the Louth County Infirmary) of the medical attendant of the former Louth Fever Hospital, to ascertain some particulars relative to that establishment. It was stated that it had been opened for the admission of fever patients during the years 1817 and 1827, but that it had been altogether closed since the last-mentioned date, with the exception of a period during which it had been rendered available for those poor persons who were attacked by the epidemic cholera. At present it remains quite unoccupied; but its funds are liable to a rent of 30*l.* per annum, payable to the incorporated Society for Charter Schools, to whom the building belongs, and under whose directions it was originally erected to be used as a charter school.

Kells
Fever Hospital.

This Institution,* which is sometimes called the County Meath Fever Hospital, was established in the year 1817; the county, for the sick poor of which it was founded, contains, according to the census of 1831, 177,023 inhabitants. There is one other similar institution in this county, at Navan, which is eight miles distant.

The house is built of stone, three stories high, with 14 windows in front, was erected in the year 1829: the expense was not ascertained. The ground on which the building stands is high and dry. The space immediately around and belonging to it, in extent about one English acre, is a garden and yard, with a grass plot for the convalescents. The situation is airy and healthy, the exposure south-east. There are six wards, capable of containing five beds each; the actual number of beds now in the hospital is 28. Besides the sick wards, there is one room for the head nurse. The porter has no separate lodge. The state of the house, in point of repair, cleanliness, &c. is highly creditable to all concerned; the drainage might be much improved, more particularly as regards a large open cesspool, the manure derived from which, is a perquisite of the nurse.

Building.

The Medical Officer who principally attends the institution is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, and licentiate of the College of Surgeons of Dublin. The Apothecary is a member of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. Neither of these gentlemen are provided with apartments in the hospital. The physician does not attend any other charity; neither the physician nor the apothecary are members of the Committee. The physician attends seven times a week at 10 o'clock; the apothecary at the same hour, seven days in the week; he is also apothecary to the Kells Dispensary, and keeps an apothecary's shop in the town. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Medical Officers.

The Treasurer was elected by the county, and is permanent. The physician and the apothecary also were both elected by the county. The election of physician or of surgeon is not restricted to graduates of particular universities, or members of particular colleges, but that of apothecary is to licentiates of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. When the last vacancy for physician occurred, which was in 1831, there were two candidates. The number of individuals, able to pay for medical advice in this district, is sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them; yet there are no medical gentlemen said to be residing within five miles of the hospital, who are qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

Election.

The Surgery is very neat and orderly, and the bottles and drawers are very well kept. None of the persons who supply any of the articles of medicine, &c. are members of the committee. The amount of the druggist's bill from 31st October 1833 to 27th March 1834, was 10*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*

Pharmacy.

A register of diseases, with the termination of cases, appears to be carefully kept, and some of the more important cases are instructively recorded in detail. All acute diseases are admitted to this hospital, which is not therefore limited to Typhus Fever, yet all cases are registered as fever, by order of the governors. A certificate of a person having fever, signed by any medical man within the county, is all that is necessary to procure admission, when there is room, which has never yet been found wanting. There is no column in the register for the name of the disease, fever alone being officially admissible. The number of sick now in the house is 17, all acute cases.

The following is a general return of diseases treated at the Kells Fever Hospital during the year ended on the 31st December 1833 :—

The hospital dress is a chemise, and is only given when required ; it suits both males and females. The clothes of the patients upon admission are sent home to be washed.

There was no instance of an applicant, a fit object for the institution, being refused admittance from want of room during the year.

No out-patients are received at the hospital surgery. Smallpox has been very frequent during the last two years in Kells. Illicit inoculation is carried on to a considerable extent in this district by an unlicensed practitioner. The confidence of the public in vaccination is increasing.

Nourishment.

Articles of diet are never furnished to out-patients from the funds of the charity. Provisions are purchased by the head nurse, contractor for the hospital ; viz.

Ox Beef, 4½ d. per pound	-	-	-	Market price,	s. d.
Unfed Veal, 1s. 3d. per quarter	-	-	-	"	1 3 per quarter.
New Milk, 2d. per imperial quart	-	-	-	"	- 2 per quart.

The bills are paid by the treasurer. The daily expense for the maintenance of each patient has averaged during the last week sixpence. There are no charitable funds collected in the parish, for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the hospital physician or surgeon may give an order or recommendation.

Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin.

ment.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the governors, who hold meetings twice every year at the special sessions, which are generally well attended, and the minutes of their proceedings are regularly registered in the county book. There is no managing committee.

The qualifications, necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers, are regulated by Act of Parliament.

Attendants.

The head nurse, matron or housekeeper, is paid 21*l.* per annum without board. The under nurse, in like manner, 12*l.* per annum ; a female helper, 1*s.* 6*d.* per week, and a porter, who keeps the accounts of the matron, and is her son, 10*l.* per annum. These are under the immediate orders of, and may be discharged by the medical attendant. Their general conduct during the last year has been very good ; one, the head nurse, has served six years in the hospital, with a good character. The following is a copy of the Diet Table :—

Low Diet :

Whey, Buttermilk or Gruel, ad libitum.

Middle Diet :

Breakfast :—Stirabout, one pint ; Buttermilk, one pint.

Dinner :—Bread, half a pound ; Whey, one pint.

For Supper, one pint of Whey.

Full Diet :

Breakfast :—Stirabout, one quart ; Buttermilk, one quart.

Dinner :—Beef, half a pound ; Potatoes, two pounds and a half.

Supper :—Bread, four ounces ; Whey, one pint.

Reports of the progress of the charity are drawn up, but not printed, and there are no standing rules nor bye-laws.

The amount of income for the year was 300 l., which was the county presentment, there not being any subscribers. There are no medical charities in this barony which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer.

Expenditure.

The amount of expenditure for the year was as follows :—

All disbursements are made by the treasurer, to the order of the medical attendant.
The accounts are audited twice a year, and a report submitted to the grand jury or governors in full meeting at the sessions.
It does not appear that there is any medical instruction; post mortem examinations are not made, having been forbidden by the governors.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Rev. Mr. EGAN.—R. F. FITZHERBERT, Esq.—F. MURPHY, Esq.:—and the Medical Attendant.

This institution was established in the year 1830 by private subscription, at an expense of 1,200 l. The county, for the sick poor of which it was intended, contains, according to the census of 1831, 177,023 inhabitants. There is one other similar institution at Kells, which is eight miles distant.

The house is built of stone, two stories high, with 13 windows in front; at the rear, it is three stories high. The ground on which it stands is elevated and dry. The space immediately around and belonging to the building is about one acre in extent. The situation is dry and healthy. The aspect is east. There are four wards capable of containing 40 beds, which is the actual number, in all, now in the hospital. Besides the sick wards, there are apartments for the matron. The state of the house, as to repair, cleanliness, &c. is exceedingly neat, clean and orderly, and the drainage as to water closets is excellent. On the outside of the building improvements are being made.

Building.

The medical officer who principally attends to the institution is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh. He is 40 years of age, and attached to the hospital 16 years. The apothecary is a member of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. Apartments are not provided at the institution for any officer. The physician attends seven times a week, at 11 o'clock, and the same attendance is given by the apothecary, who has an establishment in the town. There are four apothecaries in Navan. Medical duties are never permanently performed by proxy, whether paid or unpaid. There is no visiting apothecary.

Medical Officers.

The treasurer was elected by the subscribers, and both the physician and the apothecary were elected by the subscribers originally. When a medical officer resigns, he cannot influence the election of his successor. The election of physician is not restricted to graduates of particular universities, but that of apothecaries is to licentiates of the Company of Apothecaries of Dublin. When the last election for physician took place, which was in 1821, there were two candidates, and on that occasion there was an accession of income of nearly four hundred pounds. Up to that time, these physicians gave their services gratuitously, and the election was contested in consequence of a salary of 40 l. per annum having been offered by the subscribers. The number of individuals able to pay for medical advice in this district is sufficient to induce well-educated practitioners to settle amongst them, but it has not been ascertained how many medical gentlemen there are who may be qualified and disposed to give their services gratuitously.

Election.

The surgery is particularly neat, and the bottles and drawers are exceedingly well kept. The amount of the druggist's bill from 1st July 1832 to this date, 30 May 1834, was 21 l. 11 s.

Pharmacy.

A register of diseases, with the termination of cases, appears to be carefully kept, and some of the more important cases are instructively recorded in detail. The number of sick in the house was 18, all acute cases. The clothes of the patients, upon admission, are washed and put away until the owner is convalescent.

Patients' Registration.

All patients presenting themselves with fever are admitted; and there was no instance of an applicant, a fit object for the institution, having been refused admittance from want of room, during the year.

Small-pox has been frequent during the last two years in Navan.

Provisions are purchased by the matron, at the price in the market; ox beef 4 d. per lb., new milk at 2 d. per imperial quart. The daily expense for the maintenance of each patient has averaged, during the last year 8 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., including all charges, excepting the salaries of the medical officers and matron. The average number of diets in the hospital daily was 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ for last year. In a letter from Mr. Fitzherbert to the Assistant Commissioner, it is stated, that the number of diet patients for the year was 5,954; the expense, 207 l. 15 s.

Nourishment.

The following is the Diet Table, signed by the medical attendant.

Whey Diet:

Two quarts of buttermilk, and 1 ditto of new milk, daily.

Low Diet:

One pint of flummery, or 1 oz. of bread, with the above allowance of milk.

Half Diet:

One pint of flummery and 4 oz. of bread, with 1 quart of new milk and 1 quart of buttermilk; or 8 oz. of bread only, with the same allowance of milk.

Middle Diet:

One quart of stir-about, or 6 oz. of bread for breakfast; 8 oz. of bread for dinner; 1 pint of flummery for supper. The same allowance of milk as in half diet.

Full Diet:

The same as middle diet, with the addition of $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. boiled meat, with the broth, for dinner, four days in the week.

Reports.

There are no charitable funds collected in the parish for the issuing of clothing, fuel or nourishment to the helpless poor, upon which the dispensary surgeon may give an order or recommendation. Mr. Fitzherbert states, in his letter, that "the greatest part of the land in the parish is absentee property, and a great deal that of English people." Therefore many of "the subscribers are persons of very small means and shopkeepers."

Lunatic patients are sent to Dublin, and on this subject there are great difficulties.

The general management of the establishment is under the direction of the treasurers, who remain in office from year to year. Mr. Fitzherbert, one of the resident men of fortune of this neighbourhood, by his unremitting attention to the construction and management of this hospital, has, together with the medical attendant, and the other gentlemen connected with the institution, brought it to a state of usefulness and good arrangement, highly creditable to themselves and to the county at large.

There are no ex-officio directors or visitors.

The qualifications necessary to give the right of voting at the election of medical officers are not defined. Religious belief does not form a ground of objection to a candidate of any class.

The matron of the hospital is paid 30*l.* per annum, besides milk, lodging, coals, &c, and is under the immediate orders of the medical attendant; one head nurse, at 21*l.* per annum, without board; one assistant, 13*l.*; one laundress, 13*l.* These are hired, paid, and may be discharged by the treasurers. Their general conduct during the last year has been very good. One, the nurse, has served five years in the hospital, with a good character.

Reports of the progress of the charity are drawn up twice every year, and sworn to. The latest is as follows:—"Report for Assizes for Spring 1834. Number of patients admitted since last year:—

There are no standing rules nor bye-laws.

The amount of income for the year ending May 1834, was 350*l.*, being the county presentment. There were no subscribers. There are no medical charities in this barony which do not receive annual grants from the county rates.

The funds of the charity are lodged with the treasurer.

The amount of expenditure for the year ending May 1834, was—

Physician's salary	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	50
Apothecary's	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	24
Servants' wages	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	40

All disbursements are made by the treasurers.

The accounts are audited four times a year, and a Report submitted to the grand jury.

Post mortem examinations are sometimes made, but it does not appear that there is any regular medical instruction given.

The most prevalent disease, and that most frequently epidemic, is fever, which chiefly prevails in the winter months. There were some cases of cholera about three weeks previous to the examination.

The circumstances which appear to exercise the greatest influence on the sanitary condition of the inhabitants, are, poverty, filth and spirit-drinking. The ordinary food of the poorer classes of this district is potatoes. Wild mustard is sometimes used in cases of great distress as food. It is now resorted to by the very poor. Their clothing is improving; but the state of their dwellings, in point of cleanliness, comfort and ventilation, is very bad. Manure is made and collected in their cabins, in some cases, from their not having a spot outside of them.

The use of ardent spirits is increasing since the sale of spirits on the Sabbath has been licensed.

The soil is good.

The gentlemen examined think that a loan fund would be of use, and they would themselves undertake the management of it.

The Navan Ladies' Charitable Loan Society is managed in the following manner:—Mrs. — gives out on market-days to every woman on her books, as much tow as they wish for; this they spin, sell the yarn, and on the following market day pay her for the tow, and get more. She also supplies them with wheels, cards, blankets, bedsteads, clothes and small sums of money, not exceeding two pounds, for which they pay by weekly instalments.

ments. This society at its commencement, in June 1824, received a loan of 60*l.* from "The British and Irish Ladies' Society," which added to private subscriptions of 43*l.* 10*s.* made the fund amount to 103*l.* 10*s.* This sum has so often circulated, that the loans up to March 1824, amounted to 3,235*l.* 17*s.* 8½*d.*, the repayments to 3,210*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.*, leaving a debt of 24*l.* 19*s.* 3½*d.*, a good deal of which Mrs. ——— thinks will be repaid.

Person who attended the Examination.

The Medical Attendant.

THE country around Arklow contains several medical institutions for affording gratuitous assistance to the sick poor. They occur at the following places, and their distances respectively from the town of Arklow are indicated:—Rathdrum, nine miles; Redcross, seven miles; Aughrim, five miles; Coolgraney, three miles; Gorey, one mile.

The physician of the Coolgraney Dispensary is also the medical attendant of the charity at present under consideration, and is at the same time surgeon to the County Wicklow Militia. He is 45 years of age, and is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of London, in which city he was educated for the practice of midwifery under Dr. Dennison, professor of that branch to the London Hospital. Previous to his actual appointments, he had been a surgeon in the army, and he is also engaged in private practice. He has been attached to the Arklow Fever Hospital since the year 1820, in the joint capacity of physician, surgeon and accoucheur, and he is bound to receive the poor and to prescribe for them on three days in each week, between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock. His duties are occasionally performed by a substitute, but not without the previously received sanction of the committee, when either illness or some other cause requires that he should absent himself.

He receives as medical attendant of the Fever Hospital a salary of 73*l.* 15*s.* annually, in addition to which he is allowed 32*l.* 6*s.* a year on account of the Dispensary. He also receives 80*l.* per annum as physician to the Coolgraney Dispensary.

The necessary medicines are supplied by the Messrs Boileau & George, druggists in Dublin, who subscribe 2*l.* 2*s.* annually to the funds of the charity. The average annual expenditure for medicines and surgical materials, such as splints and bandages, is stated to be about 55*l.*

The registration of patients is only defective in the absence of any notice of the mode in which the several cases terminate. The nature of the disease under which each applicant for relief labours, is mentioned, together with the kind of treatment which has been adopted for its removal. The total number of persons who receive relief in the course of the year is estimated on an average to be nearly 5,000.

The rules of the institution declare that no poor person shall be entitled to relief unless he have provided himself with the recommendation of a subscriber. This condition is, however, not very rigidly enforced, as in general all those who present themselves obtain both advice and medicine without any difficulty. In reply to the questions of the Assistant Commissioner the medical attendant stated, that he has not been always successful in preventing improper persons from participating in the benefits of the charity; at the same time their number is small compared to those whose circumstances give them a just claim to gratuitous relief.

Those persons who may be rendered unable by sickness to attend at the dispensary, the physician is bound to visit at their own dwellings if they be within a certain distance of the town. On this point the physician states, that he considers it absolutely indispensable that cases of acute disorder should be seen by the medical man at least once a day. It is only when the disease is of a chronic character that constant attention can with safety be remitted; lying-in women are also attended as extern patients, but only on the report of the midwife that the case has displayed features of danger.

The intern patients for whom the fever hospital is exclusively intended are provided with all things necessary, at the expense of the institution, which provides wine and other extra articles of nourishment whenever they may be required.

The general management of the institution resides in the governors, in the list of whom are to be found the names of the medical attendant, of the druggists who supply the medicines, and of two other individuals, residents in the town of Arklow, and who supply several of the articles, such as groceries, &c. which are required for the consumption of the charity. Meetings of the governors are held four times in each year, at which all are equally entitled to attend and vote. The number of those who actually attend does not often exceed five, but three are sufficient to constitute a quorum, and to authorize the transaction of business. Voting by proxy is not permitted.

A managing committee also exists, of which the members assemble every quarter, and also whenever specially summoned by any of the governors. The duty of the committee is to superintend the details of both establishments, to appoint inspectors, and prepare reports to be laid before the general quarterly meetings of the governors at large.

The functions of the treasurer are performed by the medical attendant, who has never entered into any security for the trust reposed in him. To this additional duty he was appointed by the governors, and he discharges it without any remuneration. The money of the institution rests in his hands, and he is expected to produce his accounts for examination at the quarterly meetings of governors, and likewise to submit them to the inspection of the members of the grand jury.

With respect to the influence of religious prejudices on the appointment of those connected with this institution, it is stated, that no difference has ever been made. The medical attendant is a Protestant, but all the domestics are Roman Catholics.

The only sources of income are subscriptions and grand jury presentments. These together have amounted during each of the last three years to the following sums:

1881	194	8	4
1882	177	8	1
1883	154	10	11

An annual subscription of one guinea entitles a person to the privileges of a governor, and hitherto the contributors have belonged exclusively to the richer classes.

* The Balinglass Fever Hospital (to which is attached a dispensary for affording external relief) is the second branch of the Wicklow County Fever Hospital. The country around Balinglass also contains several other medical institutions, of which two are situated at a distance of four miles; two at a distance of eight miles; (these latter are in the county of Kildare) and two at a distance of nine miles. The names of these charities are the Hacketstown, Kiltegan,

Castledermot,Ballytore,
Stratford-on-Slaney, and Dunlavin Dispensaries.

The physician of the present charity is also the medical superintendent of the Stratford-on-Slaney Fever Hospital and Dispensary. He is about 35 years of age, and has occupied his situation for the last seven years, having been previously engaged in private practice in the town of Balinglass; he still continues to act as a general practitioner. He is a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and is further possessed of documents which satisfied the Assistant Commissioner that he had been duly educated in the knowledge of midwifery under teachers in the city of Dublin. He states that he is bound to attend at the hospital on every day in the week excepting Sundays, and that in cases of necessity he is obliged to give his attendance even on the latter day. His duties have in no instance been performed by proxy, unless when prevented by illness from discharging them in person. On such occasions, he has been always able to secure the services of his brother to act as his substitute, he also being a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland.

The salary of the medical attendant is 64*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* per annum.

The medicines required for the use of the patients both of the fever hospital and of the dispensary, are procured from an apothecary established in the town of Balinglass. They are afterwards compounded by the physician according to circumstances, and their total cost does not in general much exceed 30*l.* annually.

The register of the applications for relief, and of the admissions into the fever hospital, is kept with much accuracy by the attending physician. The nature of the disease under which each patient labours, together with the result of the treatment adopted, are particularized throughout. It appears that the majority of the cases which present themselves at the dispensary, are of the class denominated more strictly medical, but instances of all the ordinary disorders of the country occur amongst the 800 patients who on an average receive advice and medicine during the course of each year. A variety of accidents and surgical cases also occur, and several operations have been performed, the necessity for which has arisen sometimes from violence and sometimes from disease.

The privilege of recommending persons for relief, at the fever hospital is restricted to those who contribute three guineas a year to its funds, or who bestow a donation of twenty guineas. Annual subscribers to the amount of 1*l.* 1*s.* are entitled to send patients to the dispensary, and there does not appear to be any reason for suspecting that the benefits of both charities are not strictly confined to those whose circumstances really place them in need of gratuitous assistance.

The medical officer is liable to be called on as physician to the dispensary, to visit at their own dwellings those patients who may be unable to present themselves at the institution. That gentleman speaks of the state of destitution in which he too frequently finds those individuals to whom he has been summoned as to persons labouring under various forms of disease. He states that he has no hesitation in declaring, that in a large proportion of the diseases to which the poorer classes are more peculiarly subject, the substitution of wholesome and nutritious food would be productive of far more advantage than the administration of medicine. This opinion is shared by the clergymen of the Protestant and Catholic persuasions who were present among the witnesses. The minister and curate of the parish handed in the following written statement of their experience:—As far as my observation goes, it is my decided conviction that the poor in this place may be pronounced wholly destitute. As to their clothing, especially their night covering, it is most wretched. Their food, as to quantity and quality, is very bad; and as to furniture in their houses, they have none. Their beds (on the ground) consist of a scanty portion of straw, which is used until it has become offensive. The poor in the country places are perhaps not so badly circumstanced. The parish priest coincides in the expressions used by his brother clergymen. He observes—"With regard to food, clothing, bedding and other necessities to sustain life and promote health, I believe the condition of the poor to be extremely bad in the towns of Baltinglass and Stratford-on-Slaney, and not much better in the country. With regard to comforts, I know of none within their reach. The physician also speaks of the necessity which exists for constant attention to those who labour under diseases of an acute nature, occasional attendance being of little or no use, except in cases of a chronic character. Attendance on lying-in women forms also part of the duties of the medical attendant. He is bound to visit them whenever called on in cases which demand additional assistance, and in which a recommendation has been obtained from a subscriber.

Admission into the hospital is not limited to persons labouring under fever; a good many cases of other diseases are treated in it, and all are supplied not only with ordinary diet, but with whatever extras, such as wine, &c. may be deemed expedient by the medical superintendent. There is no arrangement in the institution for the accommodation of lunatics. They are always referred to the Richmond Lunatic Asylum in Dublin.

The general management of the affairs of the combined charities resides in the governors, who are accustomed to hold a meeting on the first Monday in every month, at which all the members of the principal direction are equally entitled to be present and to vote. Two form a quorum, and voting by proxy is not permitted. The attendance at the monthly meetings never falls short of the required number, and, it is stated, often exceeds it. There is no necessity for a managing committee, as the general assemblies of the governing body discharge all the functions of such an authority; neither has any board of superintendence been appointed by the grand jury.

The treasurer is the only non-medical officer. He is at the same time a governor, and gives his services without any remuneration. His office is elective, and the appointments to it have always been made in conformity with the provisions of the Act of Parliament, being held at the pleasure of the majority of the electors, so long as they remain satisfied with the manner in which the duties are discharged. There does not seem ever to have been any distinction made in the selection of officers merely on account of their religious sentiments.

The articles required for internal consumption are procured from persons unconnected with the institution. No governor has any interest in the money laid out, nor is any thing belonging to the establishment ever lent.

At the period of the visit of the Assistant Commissioner, the general rules for the management of the hospital had not been printed. They existed merely in writing, but they appeared to be extremely judicious and well adapted for the maintenance of order and regularity. Every thing seemed to be carried on in reference to their general meaning.

The sources of annual income are fourfold, namely, subscriptions, donations, county presentments and fines imposed by the magistrates at petty sessions. The total receipt during each of the last three years was—

1831 - - - - -	443	14	10
1832 - - - - -	471	-	8½
1833 - - - - -	560	10	1½

Until the funds are required, they are deposited by the treasurer in the Baltinglass Savings Bank. The books of that officer were produced, and it was stated that he was obliged to account regularly with the governors and with the grand jury.

The expenditure in the three last years was as follows :—

1831 - - - - -	295	14	-
1832 - - - - -	272	6	4
1833 - - - - -	252	17	10

The treasurer is not authorized to discharge any account until the bill has been examined and signed by the governors at their monthly meeting.

The medical officer is liable to be called on as physician to the dispensary, to visit at their own dwellings those patients who are unable to attend at the institution.

Persons who attended the Examination.

Sir W. W. LYNAR;—and the Medical Attendant.

THE building in which this charity is carried on had been a barrack, but is now so arranged as to admit of three separate establishments, namely, a fever hospital, a cholera hospital (these have not any communication with each other) and a dispensary. The hospitals appear to be clean and well ventilated, and they each contain twelve beds for the accommodation of patients.

All three are under the care of the same medical superintendent, who served an apprenticeship to a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and is a master of arts and a bachelor of medicine in Trinity College Dublin. He is also in possession of a certificate entitling him to practise midwifery, from the master of the lying-in hospital in that city. His connexion with the institutions under consideration dates from a period of 15 years back; he holds no other professional appointment, but is engaged in private practice as surgeon, physician and accoucheur. He is obliged to receive the poor at the dispensary on every day on the week, and it also forms part of his duty to attend at their own residences all indigent sick persons belonging to the parish, whether they have obtained the recommendation of a subscriber or not. Except in case of his own illness, he never avails himself of a substitute; in such circumstances, he would be allowed by the committee to procure a substitute.

The regular salary of the medical attendant is 100 guineas per annum; this year, however, a compliment of 25*l.* has been added as a testimony of the satisfaction which he has afforded. During the prevalence of the cholera in his district, he was also allowed one guinea per diem in addition to his ordinary payment, and in consideration of the increased calls upon his time and attention.

The Assistant Commissioner found a good supply of medicines for the use of the several departments; they had been purchased from Messrs. Boileau & George, druggists in Dublin, and it was stated that their average annual cost had been, during the last three years, about 45*l.* Messrs. Boileau & George are subscribers to the charity, but they have never attended or voted at any of the general meetings. Vaccination is much practised by the attending physician, and he has found it to be productive of the very best consequences. In those instances in which it has failed to confer a complete immunity from small-pox, it has constantly appeared to mitigate the effects of that disease, which under such circumstances has never proved fatal, nor ever assumed a confluent character.

The registration of patients is conducted with much accuracy. The nature of their diseases is noted, together with the termination if fatal, and the name of the subscriber on whose recommendation they had been attended to. From this register it appears that the cholera visited the district at two distinct periods, first in the month of June 1832, when out of 54 persons attacked only 27 recovered, and again in November 1833, when precisely the same number of persons were attacked and the same number of deaths took place.

It has been already intimated that the dispensary branch has been opened for the treatment of extern patients. They are visited as often as the nature of their illness may require; and it is the opinion of the medical attendant, that "daily attendance is absolutely indispensable in all cases of an acute nature, and that it can, with safety, be remitted only in affections of a chronic character."

The patients who are received into either of the hospitals, are provided during their stay, not only with medicine and advice, but also with whatever kind of nourishment may be fitting for their condition. Wine and other extra articles of diet are frequently allowed.

The general management of the united charities rests with the subscribers; all persons who contribute a guinea a year and upwards being entitled to attend and vote at the general meetings, which are held once in each year, and to summon an extraordinary meeting if they should see reason so to do. Usually, however, these assemblies do not collect more than ten or twelve governors; but the affairs of the institution are directed in the interval by a sub-committee of two, whose province it is to attend to details.

The treasurer (who acts without any remuneration, and who is also a subscriber) is the only non-medical officer. The income of the charity is lodged by him in the savings bank, and he is obliged to lay his accounts annually before the general meeting, and to verify them on oath, previous to making application for the usual yearly presentment by the grand jury.

The treasurer is bound to present all bills to the governors before they are discharged, which can only be done after having obtained their signature.

* The present institution consists of a fever hospital and a dispensary for the diffusion of external relief in advice and medicine. The hospital department constitutes the third branch of the infirmary, for the treatment of febrile diseases, which is maintained by the grand jury of the county of Wicklow. The medical charities in the neighbourhood of the town of Stratford-on-Slaney are, with the exception of that at Baltinglass, merely dispensaries. They are three in number, and none of them are more than six miles distant, viz. Dunlavin, Baltinglass and Keltegan.

The medical attendant of the Stratford is also physician to the Baltinglass, or second branch of the county fever hospital. He is a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland; and was appointed to the situation about seven years ago, at which period his age was 33. Previous to that time he had been a practitioner in Baltinglass, and he still continues engaged in private practice as physician, surgeon and accoucheur. His education in midwifery was received in Dublin. He is required to give daily attendance at the hospital; but he is liable to be called thither as often as three times a day, when any case in the house demands extraordinary attention. These duties he has never performed by proxy, excepting on occasion of his being confined by illness, when he was able to secure the services of his brother (who is likewise a licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland) in his place.

The salary of the medical attendant is 55*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* per annum.

His appointment was made by the governors and subscribers.

All the medicines required in the hospital are procured from an apothecary of the town of Baltinglass, and at an expense not exceeding, for each of the last three years, the sum of 5*l.* 5*s.* per annum.

The register of patients was laid before the Assistant Commissioners by the attending physician. It appeared to have been kept with much accuracy, and was sufficiently explicit in detailing the circumstances and termination of the several cases which had been treated. The following abstract will show to what extent the resources of the institution have been made available during the last three years:—

ABSTRACT from the Register of the Stratford-on-Slaney Fever Hospital.

			Patients admitted.	Discharged cured.	Died.
1831	-	-	71	69	2
1832	-	-	58	55	3
1833	-	-	56	49	7

The great majority of cases which present themselves both at the fever hospital and at the dispensary are stated to be of a medical nature.

No conditions whatsoever are attached to the granting of relief. All persons with or without recommendations are entitled to assistance, although, strictly speaking, the subscribers of one guinea annually are considered to possess the privilege of issuing recommendatory orders. Notwithstanding the facility with which all are allowed to participate in the benefits of the establishment, it is nevertheless believed that in general none avail themselves of its aid, except those who really are in indigent circumstances.

The dispensary is intended for the relief of extern patients, who are also occasionally visited at their own homes. It is to be regretted that no arrangements have been made for securing professional assistance to poor lying-in women; the physician is not bound to attend them, except when their labour comes on in the hospital. To a question as to the number of visits which each particular case among the extern patients usually receives, the medical attendant replied, that he considered daily attendance as absolutely indispensable in all instances where the patient suffered under disease in an acute form, particularly under fever. Constant superintendence became less necessary, and might with safety be remitted, after the disease had assumed a chronic character.

The Assistant Commissioner found the arrangements of the intern patients to be of a very satisfactory description. The diet appeared to be under judicious regulations, and it was stated, that wine and other extras were freely allowed whenever circumstances rendered them necessary.

The general management of the combined charities resides with the governors, of whom the treasurer is one. Regular fixed meetings of the body are held, at which all are equally entitled to be present and to vote, but it is stated that in general not more than three are in the habit of attending, that number being the smallest with which business can be transacted. Voting by proxy is not allowed.

There is also a managing committee, which assembles on the first Monday in every month, whose province it is to arrange the details of the fever hospital and of the dispensary. The apprehension of contagion is found to prevent any of the governors from personally specting the first-mentioned establishment.

The only non-medical officer is the gentleman who discharges the duties of secretary and treasurer to both charities. He acts without remuneration, but has not entered into any security. It is stated by the witnesses, that this appointment, as well as others, has been always held free from sectarian distinctions.

The greater part of the articles required for the consumption of the patients and attendants, are procured from persons wholly unconnected with the institution. Milk and oatmeal alone are provided by the treasurer, but at a price rather under than over the market rate.

A printed copy of the rules and regulations was submitted to the Assistant Commissioner. They appeared to be judicious and well arranged.

A detailed statement of the accounts was not obtained, but the general sources of income were represented as follows; viz. subscriptions, donations, and a proportional part of the grant allotted by the county for the maintenance of three fever hospitals.

THE situation of the present hospital is in a closely inhabited part of the town of Ennis, the approach to it being confined; but a new Fever Hospital and a Cholera Hospital are about to be built forthwith in an elevated, open and detached site, removed a short distance from the town.

The present house is but one story high, but the volume of atmosphere which the patients respire is ample, and frequently renewed.

There are four Physicians attached to this hospital. The salary is 100*l.* per annum, equally divided between the four medical gentlemen. The apothecary has a salary of 93*l.* per annum, and is provided with lodging and coals. There is also a purveyor at 25*l.* per annum, and lodging.

The records of names, diets and expenditure go back only to January 1832. The apothecary states that all such registers up to that period were torn by a dog; they went back as far as 1817.

The gentlemen examined stated, that small farmers who are able to lend money to their landlords, are in the habit of procuring tickets of recommendation from their landlords to dispensaries for themselves and their families, thereby defrauding the public.

There are 52 patients now in the house, of whom 45 are in the active stages of fever, seven are convalescent. There are 72 beds capable of being occupied, but the allowance of bedding would be scanty for that number.

Bandon
Fever Hospital and Dispensary.

Population and Extent of Country.

Building, Furniture and Grounds.

Medical Officers.

THE population of the parishes of Ballymoodan and Kilbrogan, amounting to nearly 15,000, have no other dispensary than this, in which to seek medical relief. There are similar institutions at Innishannon, distant about three miles, and at Timoleague, which is nearly six miles off; but this at Bandon is considered to be amply sufficient for the district, which has not a greater extent in any direction than five miles. The witnesses thought that this establishment afforded a very good example of the degree to which a single dispensary may be rendered useful, with a single physician, and would propose that no medical district should be larger. There is here ample accommodation for intern patients, and great benefit has been experienced on its account.

The fever hospital is well placed, on an elevated site, in the centre of an open space, outside, but close to the town. It is three stories in height; the upper floors are occupied by four wards, 32 feet by 15 each, and each containing five beds for the treatment of fever. The nurse-tenders have also a small room on each floor. The ground-floor is appropriated to the dispensary department, and contains, in addition, three small rooms for the accommodation of the superintendent and his wife, a kitchen, store-room, &c. This latter branch is, very properly, quite distinct from the hospital. A wing has lately been added to the back part of the building, and of the same height. This contains two spacious wards, with six beds in each, which are intended for the reception of surgical cases. There were not any patients in this latter division at the time of our visit, and there were only two in the fever hospital. All parts of the establishment appeared clean and neatly kept, with the exception of one ward, which was given up to the nurses for the time, and was in very filthy condition. (One slipper-bath is all that the charity possesses.) The ground upon which the building stands, together with a field and garden, in all about an acre, is held at an annual rent of 10*l*. The house is the property of the institution.

At the death of the former physician, in 1827, the present medical attendant was appointed by the subscribers to act in his place, as physician, surgeon and accoucheur. He is at present 35 years of age, and holds the degree of M. D. from Edinburgh, besides diplomas from the College of Surgeons in Dublin, and from the Lying-in Hospital. Previous to his election he followed his profession in Bandon, where he continues to reside and practise. He attends daily, in company with the apothecary, his brother; and if he were absent, the latter gentleman is bound by the rules to supply his place, unless some other medical gentleman undertook the charge with the approbation of the committee. If any material or continued irregularity were to occur in the attendance of either of the medical officers, notice of it would be given to the committee, who would immediately inquire into the cause of it, and take steps to check it. Any sudden accident is sure of prompt attention from one or other of the gentlemen, as they reside near the hospital, and the superintendent, who lives in it would not fail to apprize them. The apothecary and his apprentice dispense the medicines, which are administered to the patients by the superintendent and nurse-tenders.

The physician's salary is 90*l.* per annum, that of the apothecary is only 20*l.* There is not any allowance made to either for horses or lodging.

The power of election resides in the subscribers. A rule requires that notice of a vacancy shall be given in the newspapers, detailing the qualifications which are required in candidates. Bandon possesses a wealthy neighbourhood, and there are two other medical men residing in it. No regulations exist with respect to superannuations to be given to medical men who have been connected with this charity. The committee would exercise the same vigilant control in case of harshness on the part of the physicians towards the poor, which we have above spoken of in alluding to the possible irregularity of attendance of the former.

The appearance of the room in which the medicines were kept was very satisfactory. We found it to contain every preparation that could be wished for, including even the most expensive. All were supplied by the apothecary, whose terms were found to be the most reasonable on comparing them with the tenders which were sent in by many other druggists and apothecaries. The treasurer informed us that he had paid for medicine in the last three years as follows, viz.—

1831	-	-	-	-	-	66	6	10½
1832	-	-	-	-	-	58	12	4
1833	-	-	-	-	-	47	7	3

The resident superintendent is entrusted with the charge of the medicines, which it is never permitted to sell on any account, (and which are kept quite separate from those intended for private practice.) The establishment does not possess any surgical instruments. Leeches are seldom if ever used in the fever hospital; in the practice of the dispensary they are sometimes resorted to, and generally for ophthalmic affections.

Two registers are kept; one for the dispensary, the other for the fever hospital. In both are entered the name, residence and age of every patient, the individual who recommended him, the nature and (as far as it can be done with dispensary patients) termination of his disease.

The following is an extract:—

	1831.	1832.	1833.
Dispensary Patients	- - - 3,042	2,521	2,621
Hospital ditto	- - - 152	101	78
TOTAL	- - - 3,194	2,622	2,699

At the time of our visit there were about five persons on the books, whom the physician visited at their homes; about 40 were under treatment at the dispensary; and we were told that in general there were about 100 tickets in circulation. Capital operations are not undertaken, but full 18 or 20 midwifery cases came under the care of the physician in the last year.

Every one who applies for relief must have provided himself with a recommendation; and though this qualification is occasionally given to servants, yet, for the most part, none participate in the charity but those who really stand in need of gratuitous assistance. Subscribers are to a certain degree limited in the number of tickets which they are permitted to issue. For every 10*s.* which they subscribe, they are entitled to recommend one patient. Still no difficulty arises in the case of poor persons who may not be generally known, as one signature is sufficient, and, in urgent cases, the clergy of all persuasions are authorized to recommend.

In addition to the sick in hospital and the poor prescribed for at the dispensary, the indigent, who are confined by illness, are visited at their dwellings as often as their cases require, whether by day or night. The institution is also provided with all necessaries for affording immediate assistance to accidents and sudden casualties. As the physician is only called in such cases of lying-in women as present some unusual features, a great deal is of course dependent on the discretion of the midwives, who for the most part attend poor women of this district, and who, with one or two exceptions, are grossly deficient in the knowledge requisite for their situation. Within the last year a very melancholy instance occurred, where a woman met with her death under circumstances where ordinary skill might have prevented such a fatality. The physician is bound to perform gratuitous vaccination every Monday morning, and his opinion in favour of its preventive efficacy remains unshaken, as he has uniformly found that the few cases of small-pox which appear after it are mild and comparatively innocuous. Small-pox has prevailed but little here of late; but in the country its visits are more frequent and occur generally in the spring.

The medical attendant of this charity finds that his treatment of extern patients is greatly furthered by the power, which he possesses, of occasionally supplying them with rice, wine and other nourishment. There is no institution in the neighbourhood to afford the same or additional aid, but part of a fund, which was collected during the time of great distress, remains applicable to the purpose.

The difficulty of acquiring admission as an intern patient is not very great, as in cases of fever no recommendation is requisite. Where that disease exists, much discrimination is necessary before allowing the friends of patients to visit them, and accordingly such are never admitted without the written order of the physician, and then only for a few minutes. The sick never leave the walls of the institution. At the time when Bandon was visited by the cholera, patients labouring under it, were through necessity admitted into the fever hospital, but since that period a separate building has been erected for the former disease. We were informed that a right is recognized in the clergy of all persuasions to visit at all times those persons in the hospital who may request their religious aid. We understood the repose of the patients was sometimes interrupted by the superintendent's reading aloud in the wards, books illustrative of his own private religious tenets; but these lectures, in the opinion of some persons examined, could hardly be construed into an annoyance to the patients, or afford matter for animadversion.

The dietary, of which we attach a schedule, is one to which we cannot refuse our approbation; it contains every thing that may seem advisable to the medical attendant to make use of.

Two quarts of whey or two quarts of tea, two quarts of oaten meal tea; imperial drink; and in cases requiring, broth, beer, wine or punch, as extras.

There is not any hospital clothing.

The general management rests in the hands of the 74 subscribers, all of whom are summoned annually to a general meeting, at which not more than 18 or 20 attend. These, however, are sufficient to transact business, as 15 constitute a quorum, who keep minutes of the proceedings. At these meetings proxies are not taken, and the apothecary, though a governor, never takes a part.

There is also a managing committee which is appointed annually and meets quarterly. To this, which is controlled by a board of superintendence, the care of the institution is immediately entrusted. It does not appear that any governor takes sufficient interest in its affairs to direct any personal attention to them in particular.

Every year the subscribers renew the selection of the non-medical officers, who all act without salary. There are two auditors and two treasurers. These officers do not give any security, as, in point of fact, the savings bank may be looked upon as the treasury, since all monies are there lodged, and the treasurers draw on it.

The attendants consist of the superintendent and two nurses; all three reside in the house, but have not any perquisites. The former has 20*l.* per annum, and is appointed at the annual meeting. The latter have each 5*s.* a week, and are selected and may be discharged by the physician; one nurse-tender lately died of fever.

The only article of which a store is kept is medicine. All other things are purchased by a sub-committee of three appointed for the purpose, who act according to the best of their judgment, and never buy any thing from a governor, if we except the apothecary.

There is printed a set of very excellent regulations, which seem admirably adapted for the end proposed, and have never been found inconvenient in practice.

A report of all things connected with the institution is annually made; copies of which are printed for circulation among the subscribers and to be sent to the grand jury.

The total receipts, consisting of subscriptions and county presentments, were for the last three years as follows; viz.

1831	390	14	—
1832	382	14	3
1833	381	14	5

In the list of subscribers will be found none of the poorer classes. It appears by this list that the institution would be sensibly affected if the large subscriptions of two noblemen and their families were withdrawn. One nobleman contributes 50*l.*, and the other nearly 20*l.* Still it is not thought that the establishment would cease to exist in consequence of such withdrawal. We did not hear of any improper stipulations for relief to be given in return for contributions. The charity does not possess any fixed property, and consequently has not any title-deeds or other papers of the kind.

The funds are collected by the treasurer, who deposits them in the savings bank. A sum of about 5*l.* is entrusted to the superintendent to meet any incidental expenses.

The Expenditure amounted in —

	£.	s.	d.
1830	to 325	1	3 ½
1831	to 317	10	10
1832	to 322	4	5

Previous to payment, bills must be examined by the auditors or committee. By order of the latter body alone can the treasurer draw on the bank.

Accounts are made up, audited and reported every half year. The full statement is then printed, and the grand jury and each of the subscribers receives a copy.

Mr. ROBERT EAMES, treasurer and secretary.—The Medical Attendant; and the Apothecary of the Institution.

THE district for which the Buttevant Fever Hospital and Dispensary are intended reaches in some directions to a distance of 18 miles, and contains a population of nearly 30,000 souls. Taken together with the Doneraile Dispensary, which is about four miles off, they are found to be tolerably adequate to the wants of the inhabitants, and it is stated by the witnesses that for a considerable period there has been no instance of applications for relief being refused. This observation applies, however, more particularly to the objects embraced in the designation of the institution, namely, to febrile diseases; as much stress is laid on the advantages which would result from the formation of a small hospital for the treatment of surgical disorders and for affording immediate assistance in cases of sudden accident, it is suggested that the country might be divided into districts proportionate in extent to the amount of contained population, and that while every such medical district should be provided with a dispensary for the diffusion of external relief, it would be sufficient to attach a small hospital to a certain number of them.

The building is of stone, and two stories in height. It stands upon about a quarter of an acre of ground, which is held from Lord Doneraile, at an annual rent of 1s. The situation has been judiciously selected with reference to pure air, being on an elevation, and at the same time well supplied with wholesome water, and allowing of proper drainage. The interior of the house contains two wards for patients, each 30 feet by 13 feet, and holding at present 12 beds; they might, however, be easily made to yield accommodation to 24. There are also two apartments occupied by the servants of the establishment, together with a large room for the dispensing of medicine, and a waiting room. All these rooms are well furnished, and the beds, bedding, &c. are in tolerable repair. There are no baths nor any out-offices.

The medical attendant, who is also engaged in private practice, resides nearly opposite the institution, and is obliged to attend at it on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, between the hours of ten and four o'clock. He is at present in his thirty-sixth year, and has been a member of the College of Surgeons in Glasgow since 1817, and a Doctor of Medicine of the University of Edinburgh since 1825. He is unconnected with any other public establishment, and is attached to the present as physician, surgeon and accoucheur. He was educated for the practice of midwifery in Glasgow. He is allowed the services of an assistant in the dispensing of medicine, and one or the other is always on the spot to render aid in cases of emergency. In the regular discharge of their duty, both are subject to the control of the members of the committee, to whom the poor are in the habit of addressing any complaints which they may have respecting harshness or neglect.

The salary of the medical attendant is 100*l.* per annum, and he is usually allowed 25*l.* a year for the payment of an assistant. In the present year, however, this sum has been reduced to 20*l.*, and it forms the only extra allowance of the physician.

The subscribers of one guinea annually and upwards have the privilege of appointing the medical officer. When the situation was last vacant no steps were taken to ensure competition, and the intention to proceed to an election was not advertised, it having been merely required from the present officer that he should produce a diploma. There was no other candidate. No length of service in the capacity of physician is considered to give any claim for a superannuation or retiring pension.

The pharmacy contained a good supply of medicine of the best quality, all under the immediate care of the assistant. There were not any surgical instruments, but of medicines quinine and some other of the more delicate preparations had been provided; the drugs had been procured from the Messrs. Harrington & Co., druggists in Cork, and it is not permitted to sell any part of them. The cost during the last three years was as follows:—

1831 - - - - -	66	-	-
1832 - - - - -	42	-	-
1833 - - - - -	12	-	-

Leeches are occasionally adopted in the practice of the hospital, but not often. The arrangements for facilitating vaccination are of the best kind, and the public have latterly manifested a growing confidence in the efficacy of the practice. The physician speaks favourably of its preservative qualities, and states that it prevents small-pox in 99 cases out of 100. The latter disease has ceased to be frequent in the Buttevant district, and is never propagated by inoculation by the superintendent of the dispensary, although no express rule exists on the subject.

At the time that the Assistant Commissioners visited the fever hospital there were but two patients in it. They were informed that four poor persons were under treatment at their own houses, and that the average number of applications for relief at the dispensary on the days of public attendance was about 23. Nearly 45 cases of midwifery had been attended as extern patients during the preceding three years.

No applications for relief are attended to, except when supported by the recommendation of a subscriber. However, this condition does not operate much in the way of restriction, as the subscribers are authorized to issue as many orders as they think proper, and their own domestics are always entitled to both advice and medicine: neither does this privilege lead to any abuse in another way, for it is stated that none are relieved except those whose circumstances render them fitting objects for gratuitous assistance.

Relief

Relief is granted to extern patients both at the dispensary and in their own dwellings, when confined by sickness. In the latter case the physician is bound to visit them as often as the circumstances of the case may render necessary, and this occurs frequently to the extent of three or four times in the course of the twenty-four hours. The physician himself states that "he considers daily attendance to be quite indispensable in all instances of acute disorder, and that it can only be remitted with safety after the disease has assumed a chronic form." The institution does not supply bandages, splints or other articles necessary for the proper treatment of accidents. The surgeon is, however, always bound to attend them. Neither does it profess to pay attention to lying-in women, as the medical officer is not liable to be called upon, except where parturition has become complicated or protracted. This defect is the more felt as the class of midwives into whose hands the poor are obliged to throw themselves, are extremely ignorant and unskilful, and are frequently the cause of serious injury both to the mother and the child. No other prescriptions for the poor are compounded at the dispensary than those of the attending physician.

The intern patients of the fever hospital are alone supplied with any articles of food. However necessary wholesome nourishment may be at certain periods of convalescence, there is no source in the district whence the poor can obtain it, if inhabiting their own dwellings.

Persons labouring under fever are alone entitled to be received into the fever hospital, and there is never much difficulty in obtaining admission; whilst they remain under treatment, the patients are never allowed to leave the bounds of the institution, and much precaution is used in allowing their friends to visit them; a privilege admitted only under very strict regulations. No labour is ever required from the patients. The clergy of all religious denominations have free access to the wards at all times, so that any inmate can obtain the services of his particular pastor at whatever time he desires. There have not been any instances of improper interference with the religious sentiments of the patients, nor have controversial or theological tracts been ever circulated among them. The hospital does not contain a ward for lunatics. Such patients are always sent to the district lunatic asylum in Cork. During the prevalence of cholera in the town a certain portion of the house was set apart for the reception of those who were attacked by the epidemic.

The diet of the patients is regulated according to a fixed scale, calculated for the different stages of sickness and convalescence, but wine and other extras are always allowed when found necessary.

The patients retain their own clothing, as the institution does not provide hospital dresses. Forty-eight annual subscribers constitute the governing body of the combined institutions, from the management of which the surgeon, as a salaried officer, has always been expressly excluded. A general meeting of the governors is held once in every year, at which those who attend (usually about ten) enjoy equal privileges as to voting. No fixed number is considered necessary to constitute a quorum, but minutes of the proceedings are kept with regularity.

A managing committee has been appointed, but the members of it have ceased to assemble for the transaction of business. A board of superintendence has also been chosen by the grand jury.

The right of appointing the non-medical as well as the medical officers is possessed by the subscribers in general. Of the former class there is but one—a gentleman who performs the duties of both secretary and treasurer without receiving any remuneration, and without being required to enter into any security. His election is renewed annually, and by open voting, and there is no reason to suspect that it is influenced by sectarian feelings.

There is but one attendant, namely, a nurse, who was appointed by the subscribers, but who is only retained so long as her conduct is approved of by the medical superintendent. She is provided with an apartment in the house, has coals and candles, and is allowed the use of the small garden which is attached to the hospital. Her wages are five shillings weekly, paid by the treasurer.

The several articles required for the internal consumption of the fever hospital are purchased by the treasurer as they happen to be wanted. Nothing is procured by contract, and the treasurer supplies the house with milk.

No printed rules have been promulgated for the conduct of the establishment. The only regulation in existence is in manuscript in the dispensary book.

As neither of the present institutions is possessed of any capital stock, whether in money or land, their resources are limited to the sums received from annual subscribers, and from the grand jury by a yearly presentment. The continuance of the fever hospital on its present scale, is more particularly dependent on the amount of subscriptions; but it is the opinion of the witnesses, that though by their decrease it would be very materially injured, yet it would not altogether cease. The annual subscribers belong exclusively to the richer classes, and there is not any instance of their contributions being accompanied with stipulations for their being allowed to participate in the benefits of the charity. The following sums were received from them: namely--

The monies of the charity remain exclusively in the hands of the treasurer, until they are required for current expenses.

A statement of the annual income and expenditure is prepared at the termination of each year, and is submitted by the treasurer to the subscribers at their general meeting. Copies of it are likewise laid before the members of the grand jury.

The practice of the fever hospital is in some measure made available for medical and surgical instruction. Students are occasionally admitted, who are allowed to assist in making up medicine, and to attend the physician in his treatment of intern and extern patients. Their admission is left to the discretion of the medical attendant, and within the last four years there have been six, of whom one still remains. Two of them paid some small fee for the liberty granted to them; one fee was appropriated to the funds of the hospital, the other was given to the physician. No lectures are given, and dissections are not permitted. As to "post mortem" examinations, they are not prohibited by the subscribers; but on account of the aversion in which they are held by the poorer classes, they can only be adopted on bodies which remain unclaimed. Even in such cases it is deemed expedient to use the utmost precautions for ensuring secrecy; and the medical attendant observes, that he believes the poor are not aware that any dissections take place within the walls of the institution.

Population and
Extent of Country.

THE district of the present institution is very accurately defined by the limits of the Island of Cove, which contains a population of about 11,000 souls, and does not in any direction extend to a greater distance than five miles, so that all parts of it are within the reach of medical assistance. The situation of the fever hospital is considered judicious; but it is thought that greater advantages might be derived from the dispensary, if it had been established in a more central spot. At the same time, it is stated that the medical officers have never been obliged to refuse relief to any one. The accommodation possessed by the fever hospital is found to be abundantly sufficient, particularly in design, but the members of the committee who were spoken to on the subject, express a strong wish that one or two of the wards on the ground floor could be appropriated to the reception of accidents and other surgical cases.

Building, Furniture
and Grounds.

The building stands upon a piece of ground granted by the proprietor for the erection of the hospital. It was raised by voluntary subscriptions, and by a grant from the grand jury. The ground, extending to about one acre, is laid out as a garden, with gravelled walks. The building is of stone, of two stories in height, and in good repair throughout, with the exception of the windows. The wards are four in number, two sick wards, each 30 feet by 20 feet, and two convalescent wards, each 16 feet by 12 feet. Taken together, they are capable of accommodating 32 patients, including 8 convalescents. There is also an apothecary's shop, 12 feet by 10, and a waiting-room, besides three rooms occupied by the nurse and servants. The situation of the institution is well chosen, so far as regards the advantages of pure air; but it labours under a very serious defect in being unprovided with water; there is a well on the premises, but being out of repair, it has ceased to yield any supply, and the state of the funds has prevented its being put in order. The wards are well ventilated, and the position of the house being on high ground, over the town, with a southern aspect, the precaution has been taken of fitting venetian blinds to the windows, which are at the same time a defence against sun and wind. The furniture is in good order, and there is a slipper-bath for the use of the patients. The out-offices are commodious and well arranged, including a wash-house, bath-house, &c.

Medical Officers.

There are three medical attendants, two of them, who act as physicians and accoucheurs, are Doctors in Medicine of the University of Edinburgh; the third, who acts only as surgeon, is a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London. They are all in private practice; and in case of occasional absence, are accustomed to do duty in each other's place. They are also qualified to practise midwifery, for which department the two physicians were educated in Edinburgh, and the surgeon in London. The hours of attendance at the institution are from 9 till 12 daily; and, as all three reside in the town of Cove, within half a mile of the hospital, the duty is never performed by proxy; and in the discharge of it, they are subject to the control of the committee, before whom any complaint may be laid by a subscriber, through the treasurer. In like manner, if a poor person feel that he has been treated with harshness or neglect, he can obtain redress by bringing his statement under the consideration of the same body.

Payment.

An annual salary of 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* is given to each of the medical officers, without any allowance for horses or lodging.

Election.

They are elected by the subscribers, each of whom is entitled to vote, if he have contributed one guinea to the funds of the institution. When a vacancy occurs, notice of the intention to fill it is given in the newspapers. The candidates (of whom there were three at the last election) are expected to be possessed of the degree of M.D. if they seek for the situation of physician, and of the diploma of a College of Surgeons, if they seek to fill that of surgeon. No limitation as to age is ever made, nor is any reference made to the grand jury, with respect either to the appointment or to the qualifications of the individual selected. Cove and the surrounding country contains a large number of wealthy individuals, and there are several medical men settled in the town; but it is thought that none of them would be willing to undertake the charge of attending on the hospital and dispensary without receiving remuneration. There has been no mortality among the officers who have hitherto been connected with these institutions, nor are they entitled to pensions on retiring from them.

The Assistant Commissioners found every thing connected with the pharmaceutical department in good order. There was a fair supply of medicine, which was procured by contract from the house of Harrington & Company, druggists in Cork, and paid for by the treasurer. It was under the care of the matron, and was reserved strictly for the uses of the establishment. The poor are vaccinated gratuitously at the dispensary by the medical officers, who are restricted from practising inoculation with variolous matter. Speaking of the effects of vaccination, the senior physician observes, that "after an experience of 25 years, he is inclined to believe that it is, if not altogether preventive of small-pox, yet certainly calculated to mitigate the intensity of that disease." The same witness "has seen small-pox occurring a second time in the same individual, and proving the disease has become common of late, and more particularly during the last spring, owing to the diffusion of variolous matter by itinerant inoculators." This statement is confirmed by the testimony of the junior physician who "has at this moment under his care two very severe cases of small-pox induced by inoculation." This witness adds, that "at certain times the numbers who apply to be vaccinated are very remarkable," and he has traced the increase to the poor being alarmed at the practice of the above-mentioned quacks, being afraid of the small-pox getting into their families. The confidence of the public in the efficacy of vaccination is said to be increasing.

The following extract from the Report published for the year ending June 30th, 1834, will enable a judgment to be formed of the manner in which the registration of patients is conducted, and of the degree to which the poor have availed themselves of the benefits of the combined institutions:—

DISPENSARY REPORT.					FEVER HOSPITAL REPORT.

The register is kept by the medical gentlemen, who are bound to attend to all applications made in the proper form, but are at liberty afterwards to remonstrate with the subscriber if they have reason to think that an improper person has been recommended. At the date of the Assistant Commissioners' visit, the fever hospital did not contain a single patient, but they were informed that about 14 persons were under treatment at their own homes, and that there were about 40 applications for advice and medicine each day at the dispensary.

Every application for medical aid must be supported by the recommendation of a subscriber, and this condition is not deviated from except in cases of sudden emergency; so great, however, is the facility of obtaining these orders, owing to the circumstance of each subscriber being entitled to issue in his own name whatever number of them he pleases, that it occasionally happens that individuals who could very well afford to pay for professional assistance, contrive to abuse the charity by obtaining it gratuitously. Strangers if indigent are never refused relief.

The dispensary is intended to supply advice and medicine gratuitously to all persons who apply for it under the proper conditions, and in addition, those who are unable to apply in person are visited at their own dwellings by one or other of the medical officers as often as may be necessary, it being considered indispensable that all acute cases should be seen by the physician at least once a day. Accidents also meet with immediate attention, and splints and bandages are supplied by the institution. Lying-in cases, however, are only attended when they present any features of difficulty; under ordinary circumstances they are treated by midwives, who, though possessed of little skill, are not accused of being the cause of much mischief. It is supposed that the mortality in child-birth does not exceed one in five hundred.

Those who seek admission as intern patients are expected to bring a written recommendation from a subscriber, authenticated by his signature; this is easily obtained. The fever patients are not allowed to leave the bounds of the institution during the course of their treatment, and they are prevented from holding any intercourse with their friends. At no period are they called upon to engage in work, and their orderly conduct is ensured by the enforcement of certain rules framed for the purpose. There is no ward for lunatics, but during the prevalence of cholera, persons labouring under that disease were admitted. Although chaplains are not attached to the institution, the clergy of all religious persuasions are considered to possess a right of admission to any inmates who may wish to avail themselves of their spiritual services. At the same time it is stated by the witnesses that there has never been an instance of improper interference with the opinions of the patients, whether on the part of clergy or laity; neither have controversial tracts been allowed circulation in the wards.

The food of the patients is regulated according to a fixed standard, which distinguishes the daily rations into full, middle and low diet. It is customary, also, to add whatever extras, such as wine, beer, fruit, &c. may be required.

Each patient is put into a bath after admission, and if he have not brought a change of linen with him, he receives a suit of hospital clothing to be kept during his stay. In the mean time his own clothes are cleansed, purified, and laid aside until his final departure.

The general management is vested in the subscribers, who were originally allowed to vote by proxy. This privilege was, however, rescinded about two years previous to the date of this evidence.

The affairs of the institution are more particularly under the control of a managing committee appointed annually, of which the members meet on the first Tuesday in every month at the Naval Hotel, to audit accounts, &c. Minutes are always kept of their proceedings, which are subject to the inspection of a board of superintendence acting under the authority of the grand jury of the county.

There is but one non-medical officer, namely, the treasurer, who also acts in the capacity of secretary. This gentleman though receiving no remuneration for his services, has entered into a security for the faithful performance of his duties. His appointment is renewed annually, and is independent of any sectarian prejudices.
